We are all fortunate to live in a time where the concept of sex has been enlarged to include the broader understanding of sexuality. Not only have we begun to confirm the inequity and bondage of traditional masculine and feminine sex roles; but we can even explore how every person reflects masculine and feminine characteristics within themselves. Any man or any woman can be competitive, assertive, tough (traditional male characteristics) and also be gentle, nurturing, collaborative (traditional female characteristics) and feel all the more whole because of it.

The problems associated with sex roles are more than individual. We have projected these sex roles on our culture to the detriment of us all. Our political, military and economic systems are dominated by masculine images - control, elitism, survival of the fittest, getting on top. Social services and religious institutions are the places in our culture with which you associate images like caring, nurturing, and supporting, collaborating, and interdependence - more feminine characteristics. In our educational system there is a mixture with some strong nurturing and caring elements as well as a lot of competition and drive to excel.

In individuals, when there is a blend of these two dimensions of our personalities, our growth toward wholeness is enhanced. Those that are really unbalanced at either extreme of the masculine - feminine continuum seem often to have difficulty in relating to significant others in their lives as well as to society at large. Some kind of balance of my masculine-feminine self seems to be most productive.

My concern lies in the imbalance that seems to exist in the power groups in our nation. In our political, military and economic systems it seems that only masculine qualities are appreciated. Climbing some kind of ladder of success or power seems to be the controlling motif operating in these systems. Someone or some few are always seeking to be on top. Only a few can be there which makes this ladder mentality restrictive and elitist. The ladder is so full of insecurity that once persons have ascended to the heights, their intent is on preserving their position at all cost. This in turn brings hostility, jealousy, defensiveness, and even war.

Another more feminine and more appropriate symbol is that of the circle. The circle speaks community. Our world is round. In the circle we think in terms of "we-ness" rather than "us" versus "them". This speaks of mutuality, nurturing, sharing, and interdependence, which becomes the reigning dynamic so that "my" future is somehow interwoven with "our" future.

Our years at the university provide an opportunity to increase our awareness of ourselves and the development of greater balance in our masculine/feminine selves. Let it be also a time to become aware of the imbalances that are at work in the systems that are the focus of our interests and job aspirations. Even in higher education, let us be aware and beware forces that encourage us to develop only one dimension of our personality, probably the masculine. Think about and raise questions of those who tout competition as the only way to success and "making it to the top" as the only goal worth achieving in life. I believe we must bring some of our feminine perspective to bare in deciding what is important, what success means and, even, how we might go about handling global conflict.

Soldiers' Chorus to hold concert

The Soldiers' Chorus of the United States Army Field Band of Washington, D.C. will present a free concert at 11 a.m., Wednesday, Apr. 15 in Kanan Auditorium on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The performance will last approximately 45 minutes.

This 29-voice mixed chorus, under the direction of Major Frank G. Dubay, is the vocal counterpart of the Army's official touring band. For the program, the chorus has prepared a special program of American music. The concert will be followed at noon by a workshop/joint rehearsal with the UNCW Concert Choir.

The Soldiers' Chorus has toured extensively throughout the nation and abroad. In a history that covers more than three decades, the chorus has appeared in all 50 states, Canada, Mexico, Central and South America, Europe, the United Kingdom and the Far East.

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is sponsoring the Soldiers' Chorus.

Military Science hosts career day

The first Military Science Career Day will be held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Tuesday, April 7, on the east lawn of the University Union at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Sponsored by the UNCW Army ROTC Corps of Cadets, the purpose of the event is to show students and other members of the university community how their current university studies tie into potential careers in the military.

Opening remarks will be made by Dr. Gary Faulkner, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at UNCW, and Lt. Col. Ronald Martin, professor of military science. Following that, a number of activities will take place including a performance by the 82nd Airborne Band, a parachute jump by the Green Beret Parachute Club, and various guest speakers.

Among the guest speakers will be Lt. Col. John F. Miniclier of the Wilmington office of U.S. Army Corps of Engineers talking about the "Mission of Army Engineers" and Lt. Col. Earl Daniels of Fort Bragg who will speak about finance and resource management in the military.

Displays and demonstrations will be available during the day. Admission to the event is free, and refreshments will be served. The public is invited to attend.

Mama's Kitchen

With Claire Covere

LTJ Features

Medicine in the kitchen

Several years ago some expert came up with the advice that kitchens and bath rooms were the two worst possible places in the entire house to keep medicines.

So where do most of us keep not only prescription but "over the counter" medicines? In both rooms where heat and humidity do funny things to everything except growing plants.

These thoughts recently led me to thinking about medicines which can be found in our kitchen cabinets, the freezer and at the sink.

All of us have burned a hand on a pan or pot at some time.

That first instant reaction is to jump up and down while shaking the hurt member of our body.

The reaction should be to rush to the sink, turn on the cold water and thrust the hand under the steady stream. This lets the water remove the heat from your skin as quickly as possible.

This lesson was brought home years ago when Mama was working in a short order restaurant and a coffee pot exploded, sending hot coffee all over her legs and arms.

"Papa Shannon" as we called the manager was nearby and instantly started to toss ice water on her. The result? Less agony, less pain, and no scars. The ice had taken the heat away before it could penetrate the skin to any degree.

Ever had to take some vile medicine such as cod liver oil or castor oil? Suck on an ice cube for a minute or two, it desensitizes the taste buds or freezes or something, any way you have no taste and you can toss the stuff down, quickly followed by some orange juice and no after taste.

For all of you soon to be teachers, or anyone who hopes or plans to be around the little people. You know the kind, those that will stumble over clear air, bash a mouth on a table edge, stick a splinter in a finger or a stone in the knee cap while sliding into first base!

Popsicles are the answer. Stick the popsicle in the mouth, an ice cube on the hurt and in no time you can gently wash away stones, pull out splinters or stop hurt mouths from hurting.

That wonderful box of baking soda that can be found in most kitchens also has a number of first aid uses. It's the answer to someone's dream of an all purpose something or other.

A little bit of water and you have a paste for a bee sting, mix it with salt and you have a fair toothpaste; dust in on a hot body after a shower or for that matter, dump it into your tub.

That much maligned food, oatmeal, has its share of good qualities also.

It works wonders with chicken pox and other poisons. Fill a bath with warm water, dump in a cup or so of the meal and then sit back and let the wonders begin.

And no, you do not come out of the tub looking like oatmeal paste.

Who can get by without cornstarch? It's my favorite summer time bath powder.

But the best medicine that can be found in the kitchen is that of laughter by families enjoying each other in the center of the home.

Recently I was reading the food section of a state paper food section and there was a story of someone baking bread.

One of my favorite things to do in the kitchen is to bake bread. I figured that there was a new recipe or method I could use. In seconds I was laughing and the tears were rolling down my face.

The poor cook, according to the author, had kneaded her yeast bread until it was oozing down the sides of the bowl, over the counter and was slithering down the cabinet door.

The author said it looked like a giant lava flow.

One hot August day a couple of summers ago I had nothing more to do than start up the bread process. It was only 100 degrees outside and 105 in the kitchen.

My reasoning led me to think that this cheese bread would be just the thing to set off a cool salad supper.

I don't know what went wrong but when the dough began to rise, it went up in a hurry. It doubled its volume in record time and was ready for the second stage before I had the cheese grated.

I still had to oil the pans, fold the cheese in and all the rest and here was dough that was escaping the bowl.

I started to giggle at the sight of those little dough riverlets running down the bowl. That wasn't bad enough, when I dumped the mass out on the floured towel so I could knead it, the dough started to walk across the counter.

I would grab it, pull it back to the cloth and try to work it some more.

By this time I was laughing out loud and the family was in the kitchen to see what was so funny. "The thing" as we were calling it by now was still doing its best to walk away from being filled with cheese and other good stuff.

It was finally into shape to be placed in the pans but before neighbors sitting in their yard had come to the window to see why I was laughing so hard.

The second rising took even less time that it takes to write about it and I decided that before this bread could escape altogether I would bake it. It still tried to escape after being placed in the oven.

Long brown fingers of bread baked as they dripped over the sides of the pan, crisp and tender.

I haven't figured out what went wrong if anything did. Someday, when the mood strikes, I am going to try that bread again but not until I need a good laugh.

Maybe then I will find the trouble, then I will let you know too.

Azalea Festival 1987

Here are a few of the celebrity faces that you'll see:

by Beth Gray

Editor's note: Beth Gray also penned the Azalea Festival stories that were featured in last week's edition of The Seahawk.

Lorenzo Lamas, who portrays Lance Cumson on "Falcon Crest" will also attend the festival. He will be on hand at all the popular events.

Robin Greer, who plays Dina Wells in the CBS television series "Falcon Crest," will be Queen Azalea XL. She will make many appearances during the festival, including riding in the Queen's Float in the parade. Grandstand seats for the parade can be obtained at the festival office for $4.

Jerry ver Dorn is a member of the cast of "Guiding Light." He will serve as Master of Ceremonies for the Queen's Coronation Pageant and show on Saturday, April 11. Tickets for the 8 p.m. show are $20 and are also on sale at the festival office.

Tony Dow, better known as Wally Cleaver from the popular "Leave it to Beaver" series, will be another celebrity guest at the festival. He will make special appearances throughout the festivities and will appear in the parade.

Johnny Mathis will headline at the Queen's Coronation to perform some of numerous hits, which include "Chances Are" and "Too Much, Too Little, Too Late." The world-renown singer is making his second appearance at the festival, which he also headlined in 1984.

The Beach Boys will perform in two concerts on Friday, April 10th at 7 and 9 p.m. at Trask Coliseum. Tickets are $19 and may be purchased at the Azalea Festival office in Long Leaf Mall. The first show is sold out and there are very few seats remaining for the second show.

Opera House, S.R.O. Shining Again

'Southern Comfort' A Fine Show

by Anne Simpson

As down-home as grits, the University Chamber Theatre's "Southern Comfort" trilogy provided some delightful entertainment last weekend. Adapted from two short stories and an essay about old-time Southern life, the three stories meshed well.

The first, "My side of the Matter," from a story by Truman Capote, was told from the point of view of a not-too-reliable Narrator, played by Charles Russell Bowen. Bowen seemed to fit the role like a hand in a glove as he complacently coped with his new wife and family.

His childlike, pregnant bride was played with wide-eyed sweetness by Susanna Witkege, and his new in-laws, Eunice (Karla Stith) and Olivia-Ann (Marsha Utterback) were disarmingly unattractive and quite funny. Especially effective were Eunice's soiled nightgown, body-padding and blackened teeth as she lumbered around smoking a pipe — a nice touch.

Another nice touch was the strobe light that gave the absurd-violent scene a Keystone Cops effect.

Shelly Kearney played well a character that must have been a challenge for her, Bluebell the cook-maid. Somehow she fit the role.

Mitch Butts delivered a formidable monologue from the essay, "Good Men of God," by Lewis Grizzard. This type of performance is always challenging, but Butts did a creditable job, seeming a little older than one would expect, knowing Grizzard. Butts has excellent stage presence and delivered his witty lines with fitting dryness but could have used a little more sly sparkle.

"Revive Us Again," adapted from the story by Gloria Norris, was a small jewel, due mostly to the shining talent of the narrator, Karen Collins. She carried the story admirably and was just right as the fading old-maid schoolteacher. One couldn't help but like her character, who made the story flow as smoothly as glass.

Irna (Shelly Kearney) and Lamar (Allen Ray) were her long-time friends, and managed to look (especially Lamar) and act their roles amazingly well.

Rudi Kiefer thundered his sermon nicely as the revival-preaching Brother Benson, and Steve Vernon was quietly effective, if a little young-seeming, as the pathetic alcoholic, Gene Paul Prescott.

The choir (Karla Stith and Marsha Utterback) were a delight with their pious reverence and eyes cast heavenward, and Susanna Witkege and Russ Bowen filled out the congregation well.

Anyone from the South, especially the rural South, would recognize at once, and fondly, the characters and customs portrayed "Southern Comfort." This show captured a certain flavor with humor and nostalgia.

In the two short story adaptations, the dialogue tag lines, the "he-said" and "she-said" spoken by the cast, took a little getting used to, especially since they were not used consistently on every line.

Costumes throughout were excellent, down to the old-lady oxfords, wrinkled and seamed hose and body padding for thickened waists and hefty derrieres.

Makeup was mostly effective but at times a bit heavy as some characters looked too painted — it is hard to make young actors look old rather than like young actors with lines painted on their faces. And in the SRO there is little distance to help makeup effects.

The music throughout the show added to the atmosphere, and the sets were good old-time rural Southern style.

Congratulations to Travis Parker and all the "Southern Comfort" cast and crew on a fine show.

'Cuckoo's Nest' Powerful

"I can't do it — I'm too little," mourned the six-foot-seven-inch Indian to the feisty little man nearly a foot shorter than he.

The shorter man was the indomitable McMurphy, played energetically by Clifton Daniel. Despite getting off to an uncertain start he ignited the explosive situation between the domineering Nurse Ratched (Nurse Rat-sh— McMurphy called her) and her helpless, hapless patients entrusted — God help them — to her care.

The towering Indian, Chief Bromden, was played with dignity and pathos by Myron Schuckman.

"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" is about a microcosm, a ward in a mental institution inhabited by both curable and hopelessly incurable patients.

It is a powerful, even brutal story. Yet the play is flawed in that all the negative characters are female, from the autocratic, castrating Nurse Ratched, played implacably by Rhessa Stone, to the empty-headed, bubbly Candy Starr, interpreted so energetically by Debra Schuckman.

There were a number of fine performances in this challenging play, among them Tommy Hull as Scanlon, Michael Hartle as Cheswick, and Mark Smith as Ruckley, as well as all the other cast members.

The Opera House Company did a creditable job with a difficult, hard-hitting play.

Student Arts Festival April 26

The University Program Board is sponsoring an event called the Student Arts Festival on April 26 from 1 to 4:30 p.m. on the Student Union front lawn (in case of rain, in Hanover Gym) and conclude in the cafeteria during dinner hours. It will consist of area restaurant and other food displays, and your help.

If you write and play music, sing, perform comedy or improvisation, sculpt, paint, draw, take artistic photographs, make crafts or clothes, write prose or poetry, etc., we need you. This is a perfect opportunity to display your various talents to other students and the community. At your request, business cards will be provided for audience members who may be interested in using your works commercially. Remember: this event won't happen without you! A sign-up sheet will be in room 202c in the Student Union.

For more information, contact Claire Fitzpatrick at 395-3842 from 10:00 to 11:00am on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays or from 2:30 to 3:15pm on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Editor's note:

right, all of you creative types, this is your chance to showcase all of those talents and let the campus community see what you are capable of.

There is an abundance of creative talent on this campus, and I often hear disgruntled comments from those who feel left out when other artists in the community revel in the media spotlight. You must SHOW your talents in order to gain attention for them. Please take advantage of this opportunity to let the rest of us know what you can do.

CFMA Meeting

The next meeting of the Cape Fear Musician's Association will be held on Monday, April 13 at Roy's in The Riverboat Landing. The meeting will convene at 7:30 p.m., and a jam session will follow immediately afterward. Anyone who is interested is invited to attend. The Riverboat Landing is located at the corner of Water and Market streets on the riverfront.

Medal Recipients to plant trees on campus

Continuing a tradition begun in 1985, the six Albert Schweitzer Medals for Artistry recipients and 1987 master of ceremonies Jim Brown will each plant a commemorative tree on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The tree planting will take place at 11:30 a.m., Wednesday, April 8, on the east lawn of Randall Library. The public is cordially invited to attend this ceremony. Seven red or silver amplexes will be planted to enhance the landscaping around the new entrance to the library, which was opened in January, 1987, upon completion of a 93,500-square-foot addition to the facility.

Planting the maples in addition to Brown will be Mary Martin, F. Murray Abraham, Frank Blair, Kathrine R. Everett, Frederick Moyer on behalf of his late grandfather Paul Green, and Laura Melton. All are participants in the fourth Albert Schweitzer Medals for Artistry Concerts April 6-8, taking place at St. Mary's Catholic Church.

The plantings in front of Randall Library bordering a double sidewalk will eventually tie into a pedestrian plaza that stretches across campus east to the Social and Behavioral Science Building and beyond toward Residence Hall 85.

"We are trying to line that area with hardwoods to blend with the native long leaf pines," Robert Warren, UNCW grounds supervisor, explained.

Biking for Hunger

Most people spend their summer vacation from school by traveling to some place special. Others spend theirs working. But Brian Gullette and Frances O'Connell have found a unique way to spend their summer, biking across America for The Hunger Project.

The pair plan to leave from Mercer's Pier at Wrightsville Beach on May 12 and arrive in Seattle, Washington in mid-July. The two will traverse the country by way of the scenic Bicentennial Route that was designed in 1976.

Gullette and O'Connell will scrap their way to the west with just their bicycles, a tent, two sleeping bags, and whatever money they can raise to sponsor the trip. This is where The Hunger Project comes in.

The Project, designed to help end the persistence of hunger and starvation on our planet by the end of the century, was the driving force behind the idea to bike across the good ol' U.S.A.

Gullette, a senior geography major, and O'Connell, who graduated from UNCW in December with a degree in education, are hoping to raise $5,000 for the Hunger Project along the way.

They got the idea from O'Connell's brother and decided to traverse the country to raise money and drum up support for the Hunger Project. At first, they wanted to make the trip for the challenge and enjoyment, but then decided to commit to the bigger challenge of helping the hunger cause.

"We plan to spread the word and fund raise along the way," said O'Connell.

The two then sent out a letter explaining their purpose and a brochure to explain the project. The packet was sent to relatives and prospective contributors to their trip and the project.

Contributions have been few and far between though. The UNCW inter-fraternity council has been one of the few that have committed their help, contributing 25 percent of their next fund raiser to the cause. Other people that have helped are some of the local bike and sporting goods shops. Included are Lifetime Sports, Pedal Pushers, and Two Wheeler Dealer.

Dominos Pizza also jumped in, contributing pizza at all locations along the way. They are also printing coupons for 50 cents off any pizza that they will match with a similar 50 cent contribution to the Hunger Project.

But getting contributors to such a worth-while cause has been very tough.

"There has been a general lack of support from the community," said Gullette. "People around here just have not shown much interest or support. People seem to be very tight around here. I've been working since the beginning of the semester to get support, but majority of the places around here haven't been supportive."

I'm not knocking every business, a lot of people were interested, but just could do it," continued Gullette. "Others wouldn't even listen to us."

Gullette and O'Connell continue to work for contributions before their departure.

Now, if you were going to travel cross-country, you would probably do it by plane or car. Traveling by bike brings about a lot of problems that you won't experience traveling the conventional ways.

"We really hope that nothing major goes wrong," said Gullette. "The biggest problem will be the traffic."

Avoiding cars may be the biggest worry, but what about problems with the bikes.

"We will do all our own maintenance," said Gullette. "The bike shops have helped us in getting our bikes prepared and have shown us how to work on our own bikes. If we have any real problems, the Bicentennial Route was designed with bike shops all along it."

The pair will try and travel an average of 80 miles a day. If that wasn't enough, O'Connell and Gullette plan to continue their daily running they are currently engaged in.

"The hardest part of the trip will be the Appalachian Mountains," explained Gullette. "Most people would think the Rockies would be the toughest, but the roads out there are newer and the grades over the mountains aren't as severe. The roads in the Appalachians are steeper and older. They will be the biggest challenge."

Kansas will be a big obstacle as the route goes the full length of the state westward.

"It takes a full day by car to get through Kansas," added O'Connell. "Just imagine it on a bike with nothing but corn growing around you."

The route zig-zags to the west, bypassing the big cities and it crosses the Rockies in Idaho.

As far as getting home when they finish their excursion, the pair will either fly back or Gullette's mother will drive out to Seattle and pick them up.

"I'm just scared of the bears and the rednecks in Wyoming," said O'Connell.

With their enthusiasm and spirit, O'Connell and Gullette should have little problem in meeting this great challenge.

Jones keys doubleheader sweep of the Patriots Seahawks take series with GMU

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

UNCW entertained the Patriots of George Mason in a three game series over the weekend. The Seahawks outscored the Pats 29-17 in the three Colonial Athletic Association games but were only successful in two of the three.

Saturday the Hawks swept GMU in a double header 11-2 and 8-2.

First basemen Chuck Jones led the offensive barrage by reaching base seven consecutive times. In the first game Jones had a single driving in one run and a two-run homerun. Every UNCW batter scored in the game.

Down 1-0 in the second inning Dwayne Graham tied the game with a run-scoring single. UNCW pushed two more runs across in the third. Then the Seahawks' speed became a factor as they burned up the basepaths with four stolen bases in the fourth inning. UNCW was able to capitalize on this by scoring four runs in the inning: Two on John Catalano's two-run single and an additional pair on Jones' two-run homerun.

The Hawks continued their hitting attack by adding another three runs in the sixth on triple by Mike Byers scoring two and a double by Graham knocking in Byers.

Seahawk pitcher Wesley Currin (4-2) allowed only six Pats to reach base as he gave up five hits and one walk.

The second game appeared similar to the first as the Hawks lit up the scoreboard with eight runs, but losing GMU pitcher Gray Brill (1-3) did not allow a single earned run as UNCW made the most of five Patriot errors.

UNCW scored five runs in the first inning on four errors and a Byers' homerun. In the sixth inning the Seahawks again used their speed as they stole three bases and scored three more runs.

The winning UNCW pitcher Kevin Davidson ran his record to 5-1 as he allowed only six hits while striking out six GMU batters.

The third game of the series, on Sunday, was definitely not a pitching duel as the two squads combined for 23 runs. UNCW dropped the thriller 13-10.

The Patriots trying to redeem themselves after their poor performance in the twinbill scored nine runs in the first three innings. Six of the runs coming in the third this proved to be too much for the Hawks to overcome.

UNCW scored four runs in the second inning and led at that point 4-3 but never were able to regain the lead. The inning was highlighted by a Hickman homerun and RBI singles by Catalano, Graham, and Wells.

UNCW was never able to get any closer than three runs. The Seahawks did have opportunities but were never able to convert as they stranded 10 baserunners.

UNCW's record currently stands at 15-13 overall and 4-2 in the CAA. The Seahawks travel to N.C. State today and UNC-Chapel Hill on Thursday before hosting William & Mary in a CAA matchup over the weekend.

UNCW falls at Methodist

The Lady Seahawks softball team participated in the Methodist Invitational Softball Tournament over the weekend. They won one of three games and lost to eventual tourney champ N.C. Wesleyan.

With two outs in the final inning the Lady Hawks rallied with four consecutive singles to tie the score 3-3 with host team Methodist and send the game into extra innings. UNCW pulled the game out with one run in the eighth to escape with a 4-3 victory.

Next came Longwood College and the Seahawks were never able to get on track as they flew out 12 times. Longwood downed the Lady Hawks 9-1.

Again, the Lady Hawks waited till late in the contest before scoring as they scored one in the seventh to knot the score at one apiece. In the eighth inning the UNCW defense fell apart committing two errors and allowing five runs.

UNCW's softball record fell to 16-17. The Lady Seahawks travel to Greenville to take on East Carolina on Thursday.

Lady Golfers place 12th

The UNCW Lady Golfers finished 12th at the Duke Invitational Women's Golf Tournament. The Lady Seahawks shot a final round 341 to fall from 11th to 12th after three days of play. UNCW shot 337 in the first two rounds. Sandy Chester was the top finisher for the Seahawks.

Alabama won the tourney with a team total of 922. UNCW finished with a team total of 1,015.

Rowsom continues to display talents

from staff reports

UNC Wilmington star center Brain Rowsom hasn't been relaxing like the rest of the Seahawk men's basketball team this spring. Instead, he's been on display in post-season events.

The 6-9, 225-pound Rowsom played this past weekend in the Portsmouth Invitational Basketball Tournament in Portsmouth, VA, and will travel to Hawaii this weekend to play in the 19th Annual Aloha Classic Basketball Tournament in Honolulu, Hawaii.

"I think it's a credit to Brian for the hard work that he has put in during his playing career at UNC Wilmington," said veteran coach Robert McPherson. Rowsom finished as the all-time leading scorer and rebounder in Seahawk history with 1,973 points and 1,012 rebounds.

Rowsom played for one of eight teams in the PIT, which is being staged by the Portsmouth Department of Parks and Recreation. The Columbia, NC native's teammates included Dave Popson (North Carolina), William Crite (Texas A&M), Todd Lander (Tampa), Danny Pearson (Jacksonville), Doug Altenberger (Illinois), Andrew Moten (Florida), and Billy Donovan (Providence).

"It's an opportunity for Brian to go and play with the elite of college basketball," added McPherson. "It will probably determine the order in which he's selected in the upcoming National Basketball Association draft."

After playing in the PIT this past weekend, Rowsom boarded a jet for Hawaii and the prestigious Aloha Classic. The event features four teams with regional flavors.

Rowsom will play for the East team coached by Ohio State's Gary Williams. Other players on the squad are Reggie Lewis (Northeastern), David Robinson (Navy), Nate Blackwell (Temple), Ron Moore (West Virginia State), Terrance Bailey (Wagner), and Mark Jackson (St. John's).

The West team is coached by Andy Russo of Washington and has the likes of Jose Ortiz (Oregon State), Reggie Miller (UCLA), Armon Gilliam (UNLV), and Chris Welp (Washington) on its roster.

Coach Gary Colsen of the University of New Mexico is piloting the Midwest team. Colsen will have Nikita Wilson (LSU), Kenny Norman (Illinois), Dallas Comegys (DePaul), and Steve Alford (Indiana) at his disposal.

North Carolina State's Jim Valvano heads up the South's squad. Horace Grant (Clemson), Ronnie Murphy (Jacksonville), Tony White (Tennessee), and Jim Farmer (Alabama) are on the South's roster.

The round-robin tourney will be held at the Neal Blaisdell Center in Honolulu.

Rowsom, who racked up several honors in the Colonial Athletic Association last season, has also been nominated to play on the United States team in the Pan American Games later this summer.

Torch Run to start in Wilmington

from staff reports

Twenty-five additional communities have been added to the U.S. Olympic Festival '87 Torch Run, bringing the total number of North Carolina towns and cities on the route to 400, North Carolina Amateur Sports announced.

The revised route includes a 6:30 a.m. reveille in downtown Charlotte on July 7th. Other special events along the Torch Run route are now being planned.

The USOF '87 Torch Run, coordinated by Jack Hughes, will begin with a traditional torch lighting high atop 14,110-foot Pike's Peak in Colorado Springs, Colorado on Saturday, June 20. The 26-day, 2,800 mile journey through North Carolina will begin in Wilmington on Monday, June 22.

"The Torch Run is being met with enthusiasm all along the route," said Hughes who coordinated the last two Festival Torch Run in Texas and Louisiana. "We are contacting every Chamber of Commerce now to make certain their plans and our running schedule are in sync."

Anyone interested in carrying the torch may obtain an application from any McDonald's restaurant, or by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to: USOF '87 Torch Run Coordinator, P.O. Box 12727, Research Triangle Park, NC 27709. A $25 tax-deductible contribution is required. Deadline for sign up is May 15.

Anyone interested in helping coordinate a section of the Torch Run should contact Jack Hughes at 1-800-223-USOF.

PBL to offer study break

By Jefferson Weaver, Staff Writer

Best known for their annual booksales, Phi Beta Lambda, UNCW's professional business fraternity, will be offering hard working students a break from the books next week.

PBL members will hand out coffee and doughnuts to all students from 8-10:00 p.m. Thursday - Friday and Monday - Tuesday in the lobby of Bear Hall. "We want to emphasize that this is for all students, not just business majors," said Eric Oates, president of PBL. "We want to serve all students on campus, not just those in the School of Business."

UNCW to graduate 963 men and women May 16

During its 40th anniversary year, The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will graduate approximately 963 men and women at 10 a.m., Saturday, May 16, at Trask Coliseum. Commencement speaker for the thirty-eighth graduation program will be Dr. William H. Wagoner, Chancellor of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Wagoner, who became the fourth president of Wilmington College on July 1, 1968, is the only person to serve as chancellor of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington since its designation as such July 1, 1969. Because UNCW is observing its 40th anniversary in 1987, he is using this occasion to give the commencement address himself.

Of particular note for the 1987 commencement is the awarding of an honorary doctor of letters to Williston High School graduate and tennis great, Althea Gibson. In July, 1957, Miss Gibson, who spent part of her youth in Wilmington with Dr. and Mrs. Hubert A. Eaton, became the first black tennis player to win at Wimbledon. In 1950, she had earlier become the first black to compete in the National singles championships at Forest Hills and reached the finals. In September, 1957, she won the U.S. National Women's Grass Court title at Forest Hills.

Also bringing greetings to the Class of 1987 on behalf of the University will be Dr. Raymond H. Dawson, vice president for academic affairs and senior vice president of the University of North Carolina.

Following a practice began in 1985, commencement will be a convocation of all graduates, faculty, participants, and guests followed by smaller departmental ceremonies where graduates will be personally recognized and presented their diplomas. Each department will hold a reception for graduates and their guests following the diploma presentation. Locations for the receptions will be listed in the commencement program.

Continuing for the second year, a new feature of commencement will be a continental breakfast for graduating students and their guests from 7:30 - 9:15 a.m. in the University Union. This was a popular addition to the commencement program last year.

This is the first year that The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will grant Bachelor of Science degrees in nursing. UNCW began a baccalaureate degree program in nursing in 1985.

Graduation ceremonies are open to the public.

Following graduation, the department of Military Science will conduct its annual commissioning ceremony at 1 p.m., under the skylight in Randall Library. A reception will follow the ceremony in the ROTC building.

Wyndham Robertson tours UNCW campus

By Jefferson Weaver, Editor-in-Chief

UNC Vice-President for communications Wyndham Robertson visited UNCW April 21 to tour the campus, meet with student leaders and administrators and hear concerns shared by students and administrators alike.

Robertson was appointed to her newly created position by UNC President William Spangler this past September. She has more than 25 years in the field of journalism and communications, an area in which Spangler has pushed for improvement. Robertson has been touring campuses statewide in an attempt to determine which campuses are growing most rapidly.

Her report to President Spangler will be used to determine the need of each individual institution in the UNC system.

Student representatives, faculty members and administrators were given the opportunity to meet with Robertson at a 12:30 p.m. luncheon in the Hawk's Nest.

Main topics discussed were the building shortage on the UNCW campus, and the 35% increase in applications since 1986. Robertson said she was amazed at the growth of UNCW in recent years.

Single vote approves proposed budgets

By David Rouse, Staff Writer

The new proposed budget of $233,000 passed easily in last Monday night's Senate meeting.

In Senator Jeff Silverman's Finance Committee report he made a motion to accept the committee suggestions. The Senate objected to a vote and the motion was sent into debate.

In the first round of positive debate Senator Silverman defended his motion by saying that the committee had worked hard getting the budget to what it was and the Senate should accept its proposals.

Senator Robert L. Smith asked Senator Silverman, "Why does the NCSL need $4,000?" Silverman replied that the NCSL was involved in a lot of travelling including a trip for several days to Raleigh.

Silverman then yielded his time to Geoff Moore, Joseph Pressley, and Jim Craft, other members of the Finance Committee. Moore argued that the Senate made the committee to do the work and the Senate should accept that work.

When complaints pertaining to lower than expected allocations were heard, Moore said, "We cannot allow a club to get an increase in their funds if they fail to meet their Minimum Revenue Requirements," and that, "We need to get in touch with all 6000 students (as opposed to spending a lot on a few)." Moore also added that many of the clubs that got less than their requests had failed to get meet their MRRs.

Joseph Pressley said that another reason some of the requests were not granted was that some clubs had requested up to 1000% over what they received last year.

Jim Craft also stressed the work done on the budget by the committee and said, "We've gone Continued on pg. 3

Warrant served on exposure offender

By Robin Hudson, Staff Writer

Keen eyesight, sharp memory and overwhelming coolness helped a female jogger track down an offender after an indecent exposure April 20.

In a Monday afternoon interview, Capt. Billy Dawson of UNCW Public Safety said the woman had been jogging alone on Randall Drive, near Bear Hall, around 1:55 a.m. when a man got out of his car and began walking toward her. When she noticed the man was completely exposed, instead of panicking, the victim kept jogging past the subject.

Afterwards, the subject drove his vehicle past the victim "about two times," Dawson explained, "during which time she read the license tag number and remembered it."

After the report was made, the jogger identified the subject from several police photographs that were shown to her. A warrant for his arrest was obtained by Public Safety officials and was sent to his hometown to be served there.

Police are continuing an investigation in an incident involving forgery and the theft of a credit card.

A UNCW residence hall student was victimized when an unknown subject removed a J.C. Penny credit card from the victim's wallet and made a purchase in the store by forging the victim's name during the transaction.

Cult film draws 150 to Union Room 100

By Jefferson Weaver, Staff Writer

Ro-cky! Ro-cky! Ro-cky.....

So chanted the hundred and fifty faithful fans of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" who turned out Friday for the annual midnight showing of the movie in University Union Room 100.

Rocky Horror carries a large cult following around the nation, and showings are legendary for audience participation — "Rockies" traditionally throw rice, toast, toilet paper and shoot water guns during a rain scene in the movie.

Some fun-lovers were thwarted, however, when UPB workers removed water pistols and jugs from moviegoers at the door. There were some complaints, but there was no lack of enthusiasm even if it was a "dry" evening for some.

National notes

Protests not as wide as '86

By Lisa Jean Silva (CPS)

While national demonstrations and protests have drawn smaller crowds of students than last year, activists say students in certain areas of the country are still turning out in big numbers.

On April 6, for example, 5,000 California college students converged on Sacramento for a march on the state house protesting cuts in state financial aid.

General Assembly Speaker Willie Brown called the demonstration the "biggest rally since the Vietnam War."

By contrast, only 600 students showed up in Washington, D.C., to protest federal student aid cuts, when in recent years thousands came to lobby.

The week before the big march in Sacramento, an anti-war group called No Business As Usual and the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador both attracted sparse crowds to pre-arranged rallies.

And the American Committee on Africa's (ACA) annual "Weeks of Action" from March 21 to April 6, which last spring led to protests on scores of campuses and tense confrontations between protesters, police and conservative student groups, unfolded with smaller scale protests at Penn State, Portland State, the State University of New York at Albany, Washburn (Ind.) College, Texas, North Carolina and Florida Atlantic.

The ACA's Josh Nessen says the anti-apartheid movement has shifted focus from campus — many of which have sold their shares in firms that do business in South Africa — to "hitting the companies directly."

Activists — some of them students — "protested outside Johnson & Johnson headquarters, and built 'shanties' outside Citibank offices in New York, Chicago, and Baltimore during the Weeks of Action," Nessen says.

This year, Nessen adds, students are "linking anti-apartheid work and struggles against domestic racism."

The National Student Roundtable got 200 students to attend its anti-cuts rally and lobbying effort the week before.

USSA President Thomas Swan thinks it may be because USSA itself focuses almost exclusively on aid issues, forsaking the group's broader past involvement in issues ranging from abortion to the Vietnam War.

Students may be less radical these days because they "are not seeing their friends and brothers come back in body bags," he notes.

National issues still hold an appeal, however. Last week, 60 activists — including Amy Carter, daughter of former President Jimmy Carter — went on trial for protesting a CIA recruiting visit to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst last November.

Anti-CIA protests are cropping up elsewhere, sponsored by groups like the Progressive Student Organization at the University of Minnesota.

At the Twin Cities campus, business senior John Crabath, 32, says, "The PSO gets stronger every year." Last quarter's demonstration was the biggest ever.

Overall, though, Crabath sees smaller movements absorbing activists in the '80s than he saw in the '60s.

"There are so many special interest groups now, everyone's much more interested in their own problems," he says.

Ken Iglehart, news director at Johns Hopkins University, says student activism there is "holding steady" and that a "small group keeps the momentum up" for the anti-apartheid movement.

"Three to four years ago you might have noticed a slight increase in awareness of South African issues," he adds. "It's almost as if it reminded students that demonstration was an option for them."

Chris Page, a reporter for the Chronicle Bee, says she covered last week's 5,000-student march soon after the paper ran a story about how apolitical students had become.

"The activists are still out there," she concludes.

Although they were not drawn by any organized efforts, students at Michigan and Columbia, for instance, have held rallies and sit-ins to draw attention to racial tensions on their campuses.

"Between 500 and 600 students protested what some are calling a racially motivated fight" that took place on campus early this month, reports Columbia spokesman Henry Fuhsman.

In addition, 23 people, including Columbia students, were arrested for sitting-in at a police station. The group was protesting the same fight, which activists called an "attack" on eight black students.

Some observers suggest students are no less socially aware this year, but that they're just more interested in recent issues like the breakdowns in racial relations and tuition increases.

"There are no (anti-apartheid) shanties here this year," reports Vern Lamplot of the University of Arizona. Instead, "students are focusing on pocketbook issues."

UA students seem most upset by state budget cuts that have forced the school to cut back on the number of courses it offers, to propose raising tuition by 10 percent and reduce certain campus services.

When the library was forced to close earlier to save money, 3,500 students "sat in and outside (the library) 'til 5 a.m.," reports student Sen. Randy Udelman. "We got some hours back."

Still, the U.S. Student Association (USSA) has found it hard to stir much interest among students in a "pocketbook issue" like the proposed cuts in federal student aid programs.

USSA, which drew 7,000 students to its "National Student Lobby Day" in 1983 to protest less drastic cuts than were proposed this year, attracted 400 students in March.

Dr. James Farnell, professor of biological sciences, has been awarded a $1,645 grant from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to study "Colonial Waterbird Use on Experimental Sites."

In recent weeks three marine biology graduate students spoke at regional science conventions. The Association of Southern Biologists held their 48th Annual Meeting on the campus of the University of Georgia. Craig M. Smith spoke to the ecologists on his thesis research: The Effects of Hydrocarbons on the Setting of the American Oyster in Intertidal Habitats. Brent Winner, an ichthyologist, spoke on the Categorization and Length/Depth Relationships of Deep Water Sharks.

Old Dominion University hosted the 36th Annual Meeting of the Southeastern Section of the Geological Society of America. William B. Brooks spoke at the Technical Session on Marine Geology. His topic was the History and Morphology of Mason Inlet, North Carolina.

Aerobics will be taught by Sandy Errante every Monday and Wednesday evenings from 5:30-6:30 p.m. in Hanover Hall. Students and faculty are welcome to attend.

The Atlantis, UNCW's literary-art magazine, will sponsor student readings Friday, May 1, in UU-201. Also, the Jessie Rehder Short Story Awards' will be presented at that time. For more details, call Charles Fort at 3329.

The Coffeehouse Committee of the UPB will present "Off the Wall Magic" with Steve Richardson, Wednesday, April 29, at 8:00 p.m. in the UU Courtyard. "Off the Wall Magic" is a combination of bizarre magic and humor. Free.

Craig M. Smith, a student in the graduate program in marine biology, won the Best Student Paper Award during the annual meeting of the Association of Southeastern Biologists held recently in Athens, Georgia. Students from ten southeastern states submitted papers which were judged by scientists from outside the southeast. His paper, for which he won $500.00, was titled, "Effects of Hydrocarbon-covered Substrate on Intertidal Recruitment of Crassostrea virginica." This is the third time in five years that a UNCW student in the marine biology graduate program has won this award.

Ralph H. Parker, director of minority affairs, attended the sixth annual conference on "Seeking Harmony: Black Students on White Campuses" at Georgia State University. The theme for the conference was titled, "Closing the Gap in Understanding between Black Needs and White Perceptions."

building on UNC campuses. Presently, institutions desiring to expand must basically "wait their turn" to ask for legislative action before preparing to build any new facilities. This "turn" may come only once every four years, and then it is generally another five years before the building is open to students.

Robertson remarked as to how the system was designed so that "everyone gets a chance" (at requesting legislative action) but added that "everybody thinks their problems are more important than anyone else's."

Bev Cobb leaves Union this week

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

This Thursday will be the last day for Beverly Cobb as Scheduling Coordinator in the Student Affairs Office.

"It's a bittersweet experience," she said of retiring. Mrs. Cobb has held that position for the last three and a half years, since the University Union was first built.

"When the University Union was in Hinton James there was no need for this position because there weren't as many rooms to be used for meetings," she commented, talking of her work here.

"It has been exciting seeing the school grow—I've been here since there were only 3,000 students," she said.

Asked about her job, she said, "It's the best job on campus—she's getting a great job," referring to her replacement

Heather Goodman.

"It's a fun job if you like to work with people. You have to be a diplomat," she added, joking about being the "hostess with the mostest" because she has to check in with meetings she arranges, "to make sure things are going OK."

Mrs. Cobb speaks with enthusiasm of her plans for retirement.

"My husband and I have bought some country property in the Blue Ridge Mountains. I have always knitted sweaters, and I plan to do some more of that, and my husband will grow sheep," she said with a smile. "Maybe I'll even do some skiing."

"I'm looking forward to it because we love the mountains," she said.

Mrs. Cobb worked for the UNCW bookstore for 3 years, then she was Director of the Arts Center for the Wilmington Parks and Recreation Department for 6 years before returning to work on campus.

Study in Barbados through UNCW

By Dana Kuimpel,
Staff Writer

Wanted: UNCW students who would enjoy studying and experiencing Caribbean culture at the Cave Hill Campus of the University of the West Indies in Barbados.

Drs. Patricia Lerch and Diane Levy of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology are sponsoring 'UNCW Summer Study in Barbados,' a three-week program which would allow a student to receive six hours of study credit for courses taken from July 15-Aug. 5.

Students may take ANT 292 Peoples and Cultures of the Caribbean, taught by Dr. Lerch, or SOC 345 Sociology of the Family (Caribbean Emphasis). Students who already have taken SOC 345 may qualify for an independent study on a topic of interest on the Caribbean.

According to Levy, there are many benefits to this program. "Barbados is a small island (14 by 21 miles) with beautiful beaches and warm, friendly people.

"There are calm beaches on the western Caribbean side, and a rugged coastline on the eastern Atlantic side. There is great surfing."

"Barbados is an independent nation and a member of the British Commonwealth," said Levy. "English is the national language spoken with a distinctive Caribbean flavor."

The group will be making several field trips to sites of interest on the island. There will also be a day cruise on a pirate ship.

"Barbados is a very civilized island," said Levy. "There are museums, art galleries, plays, duty-free shopping, and several geographic sites such as a set of caves which were just discovered in 1981 and can be toured."

The last two weeks of the program will coincide with the annual Cropover festival, which celebrates the traditional end of the sugar harvest with calypso contests and displays of folk crafts and exhibits.

Students will live in Sherlock Hall on the Cave Hill Campus, which overlooks the Caribbean sea and is a ten-minute drive from Bridgetown, the island's capital and commercial center. The campus is also a 15-minute walk to Paradise Beach, which offers excellent swimming and water activities.

Sherlock Hall is adjacent to the dining facility and a five-minute walk to the library.

"There will also be other American students studying on the campus," said Levy. "The University of Michigan will also be sponsoring a group so there will be a lot of activity."

"Currently UNCW is trying to establish a sister University relationship with the University in Barbados. This program is one of the links to help establish this relationship. This will be the first real attempt for our students to see their campus," said Levy.

The costs will be approximately $1400, which include round trip airfare, six credit hours in-state UNCW tuition, room and board in Sherlock Hall, field trips, and administrative costs to the University of the West Indies.

There is an enrollment deadline of June 1. Students needing more information can contact Dr. Patricia Lerch or Dr. Diane Levy, Department of Sociology and Anthropology, UNCW or call telephone 395-3420.

Goodman replacing Cobb in Union post

By Anne Simpson,
Staff Writer

The Student Affairs office has a new face this week, and she is originally from Wilmington — Delaware, that is.

Heather Goodman is replacing Beverly Cobb this week as Scheduling Coordinator for the University Union.

She has a degree in sociology from Gettysburg College in Pennsylvania. She worked for the YMCA camps and conference centers for six years before moving to Wilmington.

Goodman has worked for the last two years for Cape Fear Academy where she directed the after school enrichment program.

In other activity at the meeting Louis DiCello, Jenny Brown, David B. King, Shannon Wooten, and Sherry Brisson were appointed to the Student Organization Committee; a committee that oversees all other student organizations.

Senator Robert L. Smith of the Judicial Committee reported that Amy Loge was excused for her absence of last meeting and Bob Garlow was excused for missing the same meeting.

One of the amendments passed have required clubs to report to the Finance Committee if their MRRs were not met, and the other would have given the Finance Committee the last word on extending MRR deadlines. Senator Silverman then proposed two new amendments which passed, these new amendments require the treasurer to make weekly reports to the Committee and gives the Committee power to override or refuse allocations made by the treasurer.

At the end of the meeting Senator David B. King apologized for getting to the meeting late, and explained that he had a softball game.

During five minute speeches, a few representatives of the Rugby Team complained about the cuts in their funding, and last but not least Senator Fran Slater made her ongoing aluminum can drive announcement.

Senator Slater reported that the Delta Tau Delta fraternity had donated 2 bags of cans to the collection effort. Senator Slater urged students to contact her if they were able to give any cans for the class of 1990 class gift fund.

On the negative side Senator Robert L. Smith said, "We shouldn't let legislation rush through here." Smith added that he supported the proposals but didn't want to pass them without asking questions first.

At this point Senator Fran Slater proposed a motion that would require the Senate to vote on the proposals item by item. After her motion failed the budget went to a hand vote and passed.

Where can you go when it's time to study?

Exams are almost here, and once again, students are gearing up to pour down the coffee and begin the bi-annual cram for finals.

And some students may be wondering where they will spend those long hours memorizing major British authors or classroom techniques or chemical formulas or who won the Crimean War before sharpening up their pencils and knuckling down to work.

In the past, the University Union has stayed open at least until midnight instead of the usual closing time of 11:00 p.m. After midnight, scholars were sent home to the apartment or dorm, or one of the all night restaurants on College Road that do a pretty fair business anyway — not to mention what happens when there is a massive influx of students needing some pseudo-nourishment and a place to spread the books.

It's about this time that the immortal question of "Why?" is asked by more than one student as they leave the Union for whatever place they decide to patronize in exchange for a chance to study a few more hours.

Why isn't the Union kept open longer? Or maybe the cafeteria? It would seem that with more than 5,800 people studying their eyeballs out, a big percentage if not a majority spending the entire night at that chore, there would be enough revenues made to counter the costs of utilities, salaries of workers (i.e. a building manager, perhaps someone to make biscuits, coffee, etc.)

considering the fact that neither of the fooderies on campus are on the verge of bankruptcy.

Actually, the students could make it without a restaurant being open. Just a place to settle down with a few books — for instance the Union Living Room — would be heartily welcomed.

That is what Senator Dawn Clodfelter and former Senate Secretary Kim Tracy are working towards — just a place for students to study.

You see, ARA food service, which handles the Hawk's Nest and the cafeteria, cater out of the two restaurants for various school functions. While the ARA trucks are being loaded, and the meals prepared, students would have the opportunity to study in the Hawk's Nest — perhaps with the opportunity to buy coffee, soft drinks, etc.

Granted this is still just a possibility, but if the powers that be decide to give this a "go," it will be a feather in ARA's cap.

Both Ms. Clodfelter and Ms. Tracy deserve a big 'thank you' from the student body for their efforts in this cause — not the first time either has been willing to go out of their way to help everyone here at UNC-Wonderful. If more students had their gumption and persistence, this university could really go places.

If ARA decides to give this helping hand, it might give folks a better reason to eat on campus other than the fact that it's convenient. — JW

STUDENT FORUM

Student speaks of unfairness in Union

Editor:

As concerned students at UNCW, we are concerned about all aspects and decisions that confront the University. However, we are not pleased with the recent resignation of Cheryl Ferguson, former secretary in the Student Activity Office. Cheryl has served as one of the very few black role models for black students at UNCW and now she is gone. Mrs. Ferguson, a nine year veteran of the University Union, recently applied for a higher position with the Union but was denied. When we looked at her qualifications, we ask why? An employee for 9 years who contributed much to the University, the Union and served in the much needed capacity as the black role model. Mrs. Ferguson, knowing how the Union is operated and most of the aspects of the position would have made it less expensive and more beneficial for the Union to hire. However, they have chosen someone who has contributed very little to nothing to the Union and probably couldn't tell you where the Union is located. We are not trying to humiliate or degrade this selected candidate but facts are facts. However, we are questioning the unjust and immoral decision made by the Union and their selection committee. By the way, the selection committee is merely just another obstacle that was added in the middle of the game to do the dirty work of certain people when trying to figure how the Union employment system works, one thing came to our minds, the former position of Ellen Servenick. When Servenick resigned from the post, she was immediately replaced by Jeff Steinmiller, without any advertisement and without the need of the selection committee. We ask, "Why wasn't Cheryl given the same treatment?" By using the selection committee, the Union showed that they had absolutely no intentions on hiring Mrs. Ferguson. We the concerned students, would like to say to the Union that "You can only be unfair and unjust for so long."

A lost opportunity shouldn't go unseen by the voters

Last Tuesday, an opportunity for students to have their concerns heard in the highest office of the UNC system was lost, and who knows when that opportunity will arise again.

Ms. Wyndham Robertson, Vice President for Communications for the University of North Carolina, was here at UNCW for a tour of our school. A luncheon was held in the Hawk's Nest, and various department heads, administrators and student leaders were invited to attend. SGA President Lee King and Vice-President Karla Alston chose not to attend.

This was an opportunity not offered very often — Ms. Robertson was taking information gathered here directly to UNC President William Spangler. The information gathered could and probably will be used to determine how much support — financial and legislative — this University will receive.

When we spoke to Mr. King last week, he said that he had been attending "too many luncheons," and that the job of president was cutting into his classes.

We also missed a class that day, one required for graduation in our major. However, when we presented the instructor with the memorandum from Chancellor Wagoner, the absence was not only excused, but our professor — who is not known for his leniency in attendance policies — took a few minutes to review what had been gone over in class.

Even if neither of these SGA officials could make it to the luncheon, they have it within their power to appoint special representatives.

Invitations were sent out from the Chancellor's Office April 8, nearly two weeks before the luncheon. Two weeks would seem to be more than enough time for at least one, if not an envoy from each office.

In all fairness, there could conceivably have been extenuating circumstances, and nobody can attend everything they are invited to, but this is not an everyday occurrence.

The only student representatives other than the Seahawk editor at the luncheon were Kevin Colanier and Kirki Moore of the UNCW Ambassadors (a club that gets nowhere near enough recognition for the fine work it does.)

It is just too bad that such an opportunity was missed.

Students — read that, voters — should take note. This type of irresponsibility is usually only seen on state and national levels.

The practice of forgetting who you represent after elections is not new, and it seems to be still going strong with our own pet politicians here.

Hope everyone remembers that at election time.

Montague and Peglar — a case of mistaken identity on the reader's part

Thanks for the compliment — although of course I know it wasn't intended as such — but no, I'm not Westbrook Peglar.

The writer of a letter received at LTJ features the other day said he was sure I was. And he was no admirer of the man.

But Westbrook Peglar departed this life, as all of us must someday, in 1969 at the age of 75, and a tragic loss it was to the world of journalism, as well as to all Americans who cherish their freedoms and their way of life.

I only had the pleasure of knowing him very slightly, and there is no doubt that my admiration for him influenced my style of writing. But it had no influence on my beliefs and my political ideology. Those were established long before the first time I enjoyed reading his column, "Fair Enough."

And the tag "Fair Enough" was most appropriate. Never was a commentator fairer in his reporting and comments, although a lot of big shots and VIP's whose toes were crushed will violently dispute that statement.

Peglar hated corruption, greed, disloyalty, hypocrisy, and indecency with a passion, which led him to sometimes take stands that were unpopular, in the estimation of some critics almost sacrilegious, back in the 1930's and 1940's.

But I can't recall — and I'm sure I would have recalled — any successful effort to discredit or disprove any facts he cited, and history has certainly supported his objections to many then-popular policies and trends.

When most of the populace was revering the labor union movement as the savior of the working people, Peglar was the first nationally read commentator to call attention to the real objectives and methods of some of the most highly-respected leaders of the movement.

An awakening on the part of the American people and the ascension to power of leadership of a man who recognized the danger and stood up to the labor bosses, have averted a complete takeover by the socialist liberal activities, at least for the time.

Hopefully efforts to undermine Ronald Reagan will fail, and succeeding administrators will carry on his determined efforts to preserve our heritage of free enterprise, individual liberty, state and local rights and a strong national defense.

Westbrook Peglar was fighting for those precious American institutions when he was only a voice crying out in the wilderness.

Earth Apple Soup

By Claire Covere

Friday night is usually the time when we go "visiting". First it is out to our favorite restaurant, then on to the local discount houses and finally to the grocery store.

It is surprising how many friends we meet along the way and how long it takes us to travel up and down the various store aisles. This is the "visiting" and by the time you get to the grocery store you have worked off the too full feeling and are able to grocery shop in partway comfort without breaking the backbone of your checkbook.

Every person who gives advice, be it friend or TV cook or economist will tell you never to go grocery shopping when hungry and to always make a list.

On one of those recent visiting trips learned from a friend that her husband had just left her.

Shock was too mild a word for my reaction since I knew them as a warm loving couple and family. Reading my reflected thoughts she laughed and added that she didn't mean "left as in separation" she meant left as "finally landing a job and had relocated without family for a while."

She has a few more weeks before completing her own schooling and the class which she is teaching for the local community college. He also has work to do on the 200 year old house that is located on their farm before it is habitable for the young family.

This young person is teaching English as a second language and is taking delight in teaching her mother tongue to those who have just moved here.

Her students include a young mother with an infant, who though born in Italy has spent most of her life in Germany and is now living in a small southern town. She can speak Italian and German fluently but can barely converse in English.

There is also a Roumanian grandmother who has just joined her family in America and a teenage boy who knows no English and is trying to overcome a giant case of shyness. Included in the class are several Spanish speaking persons.

She told me that by placing an accent at the wrong place she accidentally called one of her students a bad name but the faux pas was soon forgotten in laughter when they both realized she was trying as hard as he could to learn a new language.

I told her that her class reminded me of one of my cookbooks. It is filled with a variety of recipes from around the world, many of which I cannot understand either.

The book, purchased at a yard sale for less than a dollar, is held together by a rubber band and was published by the American Association of University Women in Winston-Salem.

No where in that nearly 200 page volume is there a publishing date but the ladies made it possible for a good many of us to take a whirlwind trip around the world without leaving our kitchens.

By starting in Alaska you can cover most of the United States, stopping briefly in "Southern" before going on to "Creole", hop across the Atlantic to the British Isles, then to Africa, India, the Orient, before island hopping across the Pacific and hence to Mexico.

I was in the middle of the section called "Switzerland" when I noticed something called "Earth Apple Soup".

Knowing the age old superstition about tomatoes, (if you ate of these you would go crazy, or so people thought) I wondered what this food was.

Reading on I found it was nothing more than our potato

Today is the type of day when I could enjoy a bowl of "Earth Apple Soup" — chilly, damp, grey, in other words miserable. If it would work for today, can't you taste it and visualize a ski lodge high in the Alps with a roaring fireplace or even in our North Carolina mountains?

You will need:
5 cups (about 4 large) potatoes, peeled and sliced, cook in three cups of water to which the following has been added: 2 tea salt, 1/4 tea. margarine, 2 tbs. chopped celery leaves and either five green onions (reserve tops) or one big onion.

Cook until tender, remove from heat and mash. Do not discard the potato water.

Make a roux (paste) of 2 tbs. oleo and 2 tbs. flour, cook and stir for two minutes, then add 3 cups of milk, cook and stir constantly until thick.

Keep stirring and add to your potato mixture, add 1/2 fresh chopped parsley, chopped green onion tops and a twist of fresh ground pepper (1/4 tea).

Let stand for a few minutes and then pour into your mugs or big soup tureen and top with 1 1/2 cups Swiss cheese, shredded.

The contributor said that this is best when made the day before because it has the opportunity to thicken. She also warned against using dehydrated parsley since it made the soup cloudy.

Serve it up with a homemade loaf of bread, there is enough for eight people serving each a cup full.

There is one thing about cookbook touring, there is no jet lag, no hassle with lost luggage or money exchange, although you might end up at the local grocery looking an ingredient that isn't on your shelf at home.

Happy Touring.

Familiar tunes like "Hang On Sloopy", "Quiet Storm", "The Two of Us", and "Never Wanna Say Goodnight" are just a few of the songs that feature the musical expertise of pianist Ramsey Lewis.

With nearly sixty albums under his belt, Lewis has established himself as a powerful musical entity. He collaborates frequently with the likes of Nancy Wilson, Stanley Clarke, and the members of Earth, Wind, and Fire to produce the hit songs that keep him on the road for the biggest part of every year.

Lewis is currently following the concert trail that will lead him to Thalian Hall on Friday, where he will appear for two shows that feature both solo piano sets and accompaniments by the Ramsey Lewis Trio.

The pianist, accompanied by bass player Bill Dickens and drummer Frank Donaldson, will be performing both old standards and some numbers from his latest album, "Key to the City."

Music lovers will have an additional treat when the lady who is reputed to be the hottest female jazz vocalist in this region shows her stuff.

Singer Eve Cornelius and pianist Chip Crawford will be on hand to open both concerts, which are scheduled for 7:30 and 9:30 pm.

Ms. Cornelius has been lauded by music critics as being "reminiscent of Billie Holiday, with the voice clarity of Sarah Vaughn and the ability to scat like the great Ella Fitzgerald."

Ms. Cornelius is a renowned composer and performer from Durham whose four octave voice has been lauded by the Carolina Times as being "one of Durham's top natural resources."

Crawford is known for his magical keyboard arrangements, and critics say that his musical expertise compliments Ms. Cornelius perfectly.

Tickets for the concerts are priced at $15 and $10, and may be obtained by calling the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts at 763-3398 or 763-9328.

Eve Cornelius will open the Ramsey Lewis concert.

Humor/Magic show on Wednesday

The Coffeehouse Committee of the University Program Board will present "Off the Wall Magic" with Steve Richerson at 8 p.m., Wednesday, April 29 in the University Union courtyard. The public is invited and admission is free.

"Off the Wall Magic" is a combination of bizarre magic and crazy humor. Richerson does magic with things he's found in the trash...garbage like panty hose, roller skates, baby shoes, soap bubbles and an electric toothbrush. The show is captivating with his offbeat material and wit. The audience gets involved in each performance and has fun while being fooled. His mad-hatter look and "twinkle in the eye" personality are the tools that he uses to create his one-man magical circus. Steve's fresh approach to comedy/magic is a treat for all.

Richerson has been a magical entertainer for over 15 years. He has performed at college and university shows from Niagara Falls, New York to Miami, Florida. His performances have included the Village Voice Festival of Street Entertainers, the children's zoo in Central Park, magic for public television's "fun and stuff" program and New York Public Library events.

Smooth Guitar at Hamp's Restaurant...

Hamp's Restaurant, located at Belvedere Plantation in Hampstead, re-opened a few weeks ago. I spent an evening this weekend checking out the atmosphere, food, and entertainment there- and I must say that it was impressive.

Guitarist Kevin Winegar provided low-key music for the dinner crowd, and his renditions of such classics as "Girl From Ipanema."

"Misty," and "Yesterday" were well received by a very appreciative audience.

The guitarist gave an excellent performance, the atmosphere was intoxicating, and I enjoyed the best steak I've had in months. Between the music, the food, and the mood, it was a delightful evening.

Winegar will be back at Hamp's this weekend. He will appear from 7 pm until 11 pm on Friday and Saturday.

Guitarist Kevin Winegar will appear at Hamp's Restaurant.

Jazzin' on Front Street...

The jazz scene in town keeps building more momentum, and the owners of Stemmerman's Restaurant have climbed on the bandwagon with their weekend jazz brunches. This weekend's entertainment will be provided by a trio of multi-talented local players. Saxophonist Robert Williams will jam with keyboard player Duke Ladd and bass player Danny Pera from noon til 4 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday. Check it out.

Laughter, The Best Medicine...

Comedian Rick Tempesta will be providing the laughs at the Blockade Runner Hotel's Comedy Zone this weekend. The comedian will be the featured act both Thursday and Friday nights. Need a laugh? Check it out.

A Jazzy alternative ...

A "Big Band Extravaganza" will be offered by band director Frank Bonjorno and the UNCW 7 O'Clock Jazz Ensemble on Friday.

"You name the big bands of the thirties and forties, and we'll be playing it," Bonjorno said. Hits by the likes of Duke Ellington, Harry James, Glenn Miller, Woody Herman, and Dizzy Gillespie are among the tunes that the ensemble plays to play.

The event will be held at 8 p.m. in Room 100 of the University Union, and there will be refreshments and plenty of room for dancing. Admission is $3 for adults, $1 for students with ID, and free for UNCW students with ID.

Danny Pera, Duke Ladd, and Robert Williams will entertain at the Stemmerman's Restaurant Jazz Brunch this weekend.

Jones, Hickman, and Maultsby lead UNCW power surge

'Hawks pound ECU

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor
and
D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

UNCW had the opportunity to clinch the top seed in the upcoming CAA tourney with a victory over ECU on Monday. The 'Hawks rallied but were unable to pull it out as they lost in the tenth inning 7-5.

Going into the ninth the Hawks down by two, 4-2, used two singles by Dwayne Graham and Tom Heiter and a double by Mark Maultsby to knot the score at four a piece.

In the tenth ECU pushed three runs across the plate, the big blow coming on a Chris Couble two run single.

The Seahawks scored one in the bottom half of the inning. UNCW was not able to further capitalize as they stranded the winning run on second.

In Sunday's action, UNCW used an explosive barrage of home runs to move solely into first-place in the CAA.

Chuck Jones led the offensive outburst in the first game with a single, two home runs and six runs batted in.

Eric Hickman also launched a two-run shot in the bottom of the first to erase a 2-1 East Carolina lead. The home run was his 14th of the season, breaking the school record of 13 set the last two years by Eric Hall (1986) and Gary Hall (1985).

East Carolina jumped out quickly on the Seahawks, scoring twice in their half of the first. They quickly countered Hickman's blast in the second with a shot of their own by third baseman David Ritchie.

Ritchie, who entered the game with a .178 batting average, parked a Wesley Currin offering for his first extra-base hit of the season. The two-run dinger gave ECU a short-lived 4-3 lead.

In the Seahawk half of the third, senior Chuck Jones parked his first home run of the afternoon, a three-run shot that gave UNCW the lead for good, at 6-4.

Jones later added a two-run blast to center field in the fifth inning to give the Seahawks their final runs.

Pitcher Wesley Currin, who was very shaky in the first three innings, settled down and allowed only a sixth inning walk in his final four innings of work.

The win gives Currin to a club-leading 6-2, while loser Daniel Boone falls to 2-3.

In the second game, UNCW's Mike Freeman stymied the Pirates on one hit through five innings and Chuck Jones and Mark Maultsby smacked two home runs as UNCW rolled to an easy 12-2 win.

Mitch Wells started the slaughter in the first when he singled, stole second and scored on a Maultsby rbi single to left.

John Catalano, who had walked ahead of Maultsby, went to second on the single. Both runners then advanced on a double steal and Catalano scored when Pirate catcher Chris Couble's throw got away from second baseman Steve Sides.

The Seahawks got three more in the third inning when Maultsby launched his first home run of the afternoon and Jones knocked out a solo blast.

In the fourth, Jones deposited his fourth home run of the day over the center field fence, another three-run shot.

In the fifth, Mark Maultsby collected the last of his six rbi in the game with his fifth home run of the season and Hickman followed with his 15th of the year, a solo blast.

On the day, Jones finished five-for-seven with four home runs and 10 runs batted in. Both the home runs and the rbi's were school records for a doubleheader and the homers moved Jones to within three of the career record.

Hickman was four-for-seven with two roundtrippers and three rbi's, while Mark Maultsby finished the twinbill with four hits, two of them home runs, and six runs batted in.

The eight home runs by the team were also a record for a doubleheader.

Earlier in the week, UNCW used a three-run home run from Eric Hickman to come from behind and defeat North Carolina 7-5. Freshman Tony Tillman picked up the win in relief of starter Jerome Hunt.

Just missed it

Eric Hickman turns on a pitch but the ball falls just short of the left field fence. Hickman was not able to help the 'Hawks on Monday as they fell to the Pirates 7-5 in ten innings.

Richmond Diamond the site of CAA Championship

from Staff Reports

The Colonial Athletic Association will hold its 1987 Baseball Championship May 14-17 at The Diamond in Richmond, Virginia. All six teams from regular-season conference play will compete: East Carolina, George Mason, James Madison, Richmond, William & Mary, and UNC Wilmington.

The tournament has a double-elimination format with three games on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and one or two games on Sunday. Game times are 11 a.m., 3 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and 1 p.m. Sunday.

Tickets are $3 each day or $10 for all four days, and will be available at The Diamond on game days. Children ages 12 and under will be admitted free when accompanied by a paying adult. Tickets carry unlimited re-entry privileges the day they are purchased.

The Diamond is home to the Richmond Braves' AAA baseball club. The stadium, which opened in 1985, is located west of downtown Richmond on North Boulevard, one block from Interstate 64.

The 1987 tournament is the Colonial's second baseball championship and the first to include all teams from the regular season. Last spring's tournament, held at East Carolina, featured the top four teams from the regular-season standings.

Richmond's Spiders are the defending champions with an 8-5 victory over East Carolina in last season's title game.

The Colonial tournament winner receives an automatic bid to one of the eight NCAA regional tournaments. The Colonial is one of 26 conferences with automatic bids for the NCAA field, which can have a maximum of 48 teams. Winners of the eight regional tournaments advance to the NCAA College World Series.

Athletes receive yearly honors

The 1986-87 school year was a very successful one for the UNC Wilmington athletic teams and the athletes that help make it so successful were honored at the annual Athletic Banquet April 22 in Track Coliseum.

Receiving the first annual Thomas V. Moseley Award for excellence on the playing field was basketball player Brian Rowsom. The 6-9 senior was also the recipient of the Pizza Hut Player-of-the-Year Award and men's basketball Most Valuable Player.

Baseball player Calvin Garrett and volleyball player Stephanie Wall, both seniors, received the coveted Chancellor's Cup for academic excellence.

The other awards of the evening were given to the athletes by their respective coaches.

In volleyball, Stephanie Wall captured the Coach's Award, while Dede Deveyale was named Most Improved and Martha Byrd received the Most Valuable Player Award.

The soccer team had two award winners, John Hollenbach for Most Improved and Terry Lovell for Most Valuable.

Mary Thomas was the Coach's Award winner for women's golf. Sandy Chester was the Most Valuable Golfer recipient.

Men's golf also had two award winners. Richard Kimble was the Most Improved, while David Teem captured the Most Valuable Golfer award.

The cross country team was given several honors, with Kris York and Layne Fuller winning Most Valuable Runners. York also captured the Most Valuable Freshman Award. David Simmons was Most Valuable Freshman on the men's side, while Most Improved went to Beeda Lee and Chris Daniel. Missy Hall and Brian Pawlack won the Work Ethic Award.

Winners on the men's tennis team were Troy Furbay for Most Improved and Terry Graiz for Most Valuable.

Water Polo winners were Rob Miecznikowski as Most Improved and Scott Sticks as Most Valuable Player.

Swimmers Mary Beth Mills (Seahawk Award), Marti Mucci (Most Improved and Outstanding Swimmer) Keith Hawley (Seahawk Award) and Glynn Boze (Most Improved) were also honored, but Don Hoiser was the recipient of the most prestigious award, the Sam O'Leary Outstanding Swimmer Award.

Women's basketball honored two of its own. Johnnie Smith for Most Improved and senior Sharon McDowell for Most Valuable. McDowell was also honored as the first player in the history of UNCW to ever lead the nation in a particular category. The 5-8 junior led the nation in field goal percentage at 67.2 percent.

Men's Head Coach Robert McPherson spotlighted three of his players, giving Greg Bender the Hustling Seahawk award for his 110 percent effort every time out on the court. Senior Sandy Anderson won the Defensive Award, while Brian Rowsom won the Most Valuable Player Award.

Cheerleader Tracy Mills also received the Senior Award for her service at UNCW.

Another Rowsom Award

Senior Brian Rowsom is honored by Chancellor William H. Wagoner at the Athletic Banquet. Rowsom received the first annual Thomas V. Moseley Award as well as the Pizza Hut Player-of-the-Year Award. Rowsom leaves UNCW as the schools leading scorer and rebounder after a brilliant four year career at the Big W.

Spring Week '87 offers hot activities for everyone

By Dana Kumpel,
Staff Writer

Tuesday, April 21, kicks off the University Program Board's Spring Week '87, which as Swayne Sharpe, UPB president said, "is a week of relaxation before exams. All of the events are guaranteed to get your mind off studies."

This year's theme is "Some Like It Hot", and keeping in theme is Tuesday's presentation of the movie with the same title at 7:00 p.m. in the University Union, room 100. Admission is free.

Oh Wednesday, jazz singer Jane Powell will be performing in Room 100 of the Union.

"She has a strong voice similar to Patti LaBelle's," said Sharpe. "She really gets students involved with the show." The UPB will be serving refreshments, "hopefully virgin daiquiris and hors d'oeuvres." Admission is $1.00 and the show starts at 8:00 p.m.

Thursday, April 23, a comedy show featuring Fred Stoller and Phillip Nee will be presented also in Room 100 of the Union at 8:00 p.m. These comedians have been featured on Late Night with David Letterman and The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson, respectively. Refreshments will be provided.

Friday brings the fourth annual showing of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" at midnight in Room 100. Admission is $1.00 with student I.D. and $3.00 for others.

The Eighth Annual Sea Side Jam occurs Saturday, April 25 on the front lawn of the University Union. This is a free event featuring Zipper and Cruis-o-matic.

Sunday, April 26 brings a new event to UNCW students. The Student Arts Festival will take place between 1:00 and 4:30 p.m. on the University Union front lawn. This free event will feature approximately 12 students.

"This event was promoted to draw attention to the talents of UNCW students," said Sharpe. Students will be displaying such talents as classical guitar, jazz guitar, singing, dance, poetry, drawings, painting, juggling, saxophone, and tie dyeing. Others who wish to participate in this event may sign up in the UPB office in the Union.

Wednesday, April 29, the last day of classes, brings a "different and unusual event." Steve Richerson will be performing "Comedy Majic with Trash" at 8:00 p.m. in Room 100 of the Union. Admission is free.

VAX stops preregistration

Computer's down and so's UNCW

By Ruthie Matthews,
Staff Writer

Pre-registration came to a halt this week as the university's computer system, VAX, went down.

"When people say the system is down, they could mean the entire computer isn't working or that the software application they are using isn't working," said Bobby Miller, UNCW's System Programmer.

The problems with pre-registration were due to a corrupt file said Miller.

"No schedules have been lost," said Liz Williams, the analyst programmer responsible for the student information system. All her weekend Easter plans are put on hold until the problem is solved, she said.

(Editor's note: similar problems were experienced April 13 with the VAX terminal used in the Student Government office, on the same day budget requests were due for SGA clubs and organizations. Some groups were prevented from accessing account information needed for estimating budgets.)

When the corrupt files were trying to be restored other errors in other files cropped up.

"We will call the people who wrote the software if it isn't working by Monday," Williams said.

The VAX (Virtual Address Extension) computer system has been used here for approximately three years and "so far has had a high 90% efficiency rate," said Miller.

The registrar's office said Friday that preregistration was scheduled to continue Tuesday.

Victim's rights week begins here

By Ruthie Matthews,
Staff Writer

11 murders, 30 rapes, 97 robberies, and 202 assaults with a deadly weapon were reported to the Wilmington Police Department in 1986.

Nationally in 1985, one violent crime occurred every 24 seconds; one property crime occurred every three seconds and one murder occurred every 28 minutes (FBI Uniform Crime Report, 1985).

Each year, about one in 12 females between the ages of 16 and 24 is a victim of a violent crime (Crime and Justice Facts, 1985). With such a high crime rate there is no wonder that something is needed to make the public aware of the plight of the victim of these crimes, not the victimizer.

National Victims Rights Week has been declared for April 26-May 2. This promotion is to make people aware of their resources, know what rights they have as victims and the steps they can take said Margret Weller, Administrator of Crisis Line of Wilmington.

Some of the issues being addressed are:

1- keeping victims informed of judicial proceedings related to their cases.

2- protection from the criminal and his/her cohorts.

3- notice if criminal is released from jail.

4- victim should be able to submit, prior to sentencing and at all parole hearings, an impact statement on how the crime affected their life.

5- privacy of victim should be observed at all times.

6- victims should have the right to be present and heard at all critical stages of the judicial process.

The biggest help the public can give is support for all the events going on during National Victims Rights Week said Weller.

"Support an event like the Candlelight Vigil," she suggested.

The Vigil will be held April 25 at 8 p.m. at Riverfront Park.

This event will be held to pay tribute to victims of crimes and their families. Four local victims will speak plus Jerry Spivey, Chief Bristol, and Sheriff

"A Resource Arena will be held May 2 from 10 a.m.-9 p.m. at Independence Mall," said Weller. "This is to let people know there are places and people the victim can turn to for help."

Johnson gets certification

Joseph M. Johnson, director of public safety at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, recently joined the distinguished group of security professionals who have earned recognition as a Certified Protection Professional (CPP). More than 3,000 security practitioners world-wide have been awarded the CPP credential, which attests to an individual's mastery of the body of security knowledge through job experience and academic study.

The CPP designation is earned by passing a difficult battery of mandatory and optional exams, as well as meeting strict experience and educational prerequisites. To maintain the certification, Johnson will pursue a program of continuing education and professional activity. Recertification is required every three years.

Johnson came to UNC-Wilmington in June, 1983. He is responsible for security, law enforcement, safety and related programs for the university. Johnson, who received the bachelor of science degree in criminal justice from UNC-Charlotte in 1978, has 14 years' experience as a police officer, criminal justice instructor and administrator. Johnson currently serves as president of the N.C. Association of Campus Law Enforcement Administrators.

ROTC applicants increase

There have been more scholarship applicants this year than ever before in the history of the ROTC program at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, reports Capt. Richard Longo, UNCW ROTC scholarship coordinator.

"The quality of students that have applied is phenomenal! Across the board, they have strong grade point averages, are very active in the university and community, and present themselves very well," he said.

So far this year, 29 students have applied for the scholarships which pay for all tuition, fees, books, classroom supplies and graduation expenses. "The best part about the program," Longo adds, "is that our students are not competing with each other. They are competing nationwide."

Last year, six UNCW freshmen applied for 3-year scholarships. Each student received a scholarship, some 3-year and some 2-year. For students who have been turned down for financial aid because their parents' income was too high, this may be their opportunity for financial assistance.

The scholarship process is relatively simple. A student fills out a scholarship application and is scheduled for an interview. At this interview, the student meets with members of the ROTC staff and representatives of the university who try to learn more about the applicant than can be evaluated using paperwork alone.

At this stage, Longo takes over. "I assist the students in putting together a good scholarship application packet as possible. I take a great deal of pride in knowing that I have helped these students and improved their chances of winning." Longo points out that these scholarships are not restricted to current ROTC students.

To be eligible and competitive, the student must graduate before reaching age 25, must have at least a 2.0 G.P.A. (the higher, the better), must pass a free physical health examination, and must have scored at least 850 on the S.A.T. When asked which criterion was most important, Longo stated, "There is no one most important item. The Army is looking for well-rounded individuals. We think the students who are involved in extra-curricular and athletic activities and maintain a good solid G.P.A. have the potential to make excellent officers."

The ROTC Department is very pleased with the interest the students have shown. "It's not for everyone," Lt. Col. Ronald Martin, professor of military science, says, "but it does not hurt to come in and talk about it."

The chance for students to apply is over for this year, but watch for announcements next fall.

SGA meet canceled, budget group meets

Even though the UNCW Student Government Association did not meet Monday night, the Budget and Finance Committee began accepting proposed budgets Thursday night in preparation for making recommendations to the Senate at its next meeting.

The next scheduled meeting is April 27 at 6:00 p.m. in Union Room 100.

The Budget Committee will meet throughout this week. Clubs will come before the board on the basis of when budgets were turned in to the SGA office.

Club members desiring more information should call the Student Government Association at 395-3553.

Tidal Creek offers healthy alternative to supermarkets

By Carla Garrison,
Staff Writer

For people looking to enjoy a healthy diet, grocery store encounters can be rather disheartening. Fortunately there is an alternative: Tidal Creek Natural Food CO-OP.

Tidal Creek is a member-owned and operated organization which began in 1982. The cooperation was formed by a woman named Maureen Entice along with a group of food-conscious people who decided to organize and form an alternative to the overly processed grocery store selections.

The store was originally located in a tiny market owned by Entice, but in January of this year the group moved to 4410 Wrightsville Ave. This move enabled them to double their space as well as the stock.

What does Tidal Creek have to offer? Anne Vincent, manager of Tidal Creek, stocks an enormous variety of natural foods and cosmetics.

Most of the foods are organic; that is, they have not been sprayed or treated with any chemical. The majority of the food products have absolutely no salt or sugar added. None of the products have been made with animal proteins or have been tested on animals. All eggs and produce are farm fresh. The store carries a wide variety of natural cosmetics ranging from shampoos and toothpaste to tanning oil and deodorant.

Some people tend to view health food as hard to prepare and unappetizing. This is untrue. Anne Vincent explains that, "people just aren't aware of their food alternatives." Vincent described a long list of fast health foods that are very simple to fix. A few examples are burrito fillings and other Mexican foods in cans, a variety of soups and vegetarian chili. There is also an unlimited supply of snack foods such as granola, natural peanut butter, real yogurt, dried fruits, nuts, natural popicles, and

Business index is up

The level of business activity in North Carolina rose again in February, according to the First Wachovia Business Index. The index registered 140.5, up 1.2 percent from the revised level for January.

The rise in the Index was due to small gains in nonagricultural employment and the manufacturing workweek combined with a sizeable dip in new claims for unemployment insurance. Residential building permits, however, were down 2.5 percent from the previous month.

Nonagricultural employment in the state increased 0.3 percent in February. For the nation as a whole, it was also up 0.3 percent. Over the past 12 months, nonagricultural employment in North Carolina has risen 2.9 percent, while national growth has averaged 2.6 percent.

Manufacturing employment in the state slipped 0.2 percent in February. Higher employment has been reported in the textile and furniture sectors. Employment was lower in chemical, electrical and nonmetallic machinery industries. For the nation, manufacturing employment was a gain of 0.6 percent. Higher employment was reported in the government, construction, trade and service sectors.

The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for North Carolina was 5.1 percent in February, up 0.3 percentage points from January. The national rate was 6.7 percent, unchanged from last month.

The First Wachovia North Carolina Business Index measures the level of economic activity in North Carolina on a monthly basis. Using 1976 as a base of 100, it reflects indicators of employment, industrial production and construction activity in the state's economy. Data are adjusted to smooth the effects of historical seasonal factors and certain statistical aberrations. — Courtesy Wachovia Bank and Trust.

Sex scenes too controversial, officials say

Play is banned at U. of Alabama

University of Alabama officials last week decided not to let a student produce his controversial play on campus, and, in reply, the student sent them one day later.

Meanwhile, one student group demonstrated in favor of banning the play — while another demonstrated to equate the banning to censorship.

UA officials say it's an issue of how they use their facilities and the use of nudity. The playwright says it's an issue only because some nude scenes feature black and white actors together.

"Given (UA's) historical perspective," says graduate student and playwright Walter Alves, "it will find the interracial (sex) scenes offensive."

"The issue," announced Roger Sayers, UA's vice president of academic affairs, in a press release explaining why the school denied Alves' play a stage, "is how the university chooses to use its facilities."

He added UA "is not obliged" to provide a stage for any play, just as it is not required to publish all the manuscripts submitted to campus journals.

Other campuses have been accused of restricting the arts recently.

Earlier this year, Notre Dame suspended a student news magazine for publishing a story and photo about how Notre Dame had forced a campus literary magazine to drop an "erotic art print" from its pages a few months ago.

The student activities office said the art print of "an embracing couple" was "inappropriate," and that the Scholastic, the student news magazine, had violated "policy."

At Alabama, Edward Still, Alves' attorney, maintains Alabama's "agents" based their decision on "what they believed to be the content of the play."

In addition, Still plans to argue UA officials' "unlimited discretion" in allocating facilities needs limits.

"There's been a long line of cases," he says, "where judges determine that, for example, a police chief has too much power in deciding to permit parades."

"He might decide he likes this Shriners group, but on the other hand not these Vietnam Vets who want to protest something."

School officials and attorneys said it was their policy not comment on "pending litigation."

Earlier, Arts and Sciences Dean Richard Peck had said some members of the community would have been offended by the play, which Alves says he contracted to produce on campus for credit.

"Dean Peck believes the material might be offensive to some members of the community," reports UA Spokeswoman Dale Allison, "and he denied (Alves) use of Morgan Auditorium."

Alves maintains the university's objections are more racist than provincial, noting UA has allowed X-rated films on campus and stage productions of "Equis" and "Extremities," both of which include sexually explicit material.

"There has been nudity on the University of Alabama stage before," he says. "They even gave away a date with (Deep Throat star) Linda Lovelace in the seventies."

UA's Allison says, "I was a student here at the time and remember hearing something about that," but adds she can't remember particulars.

Alves says his play has artistic merit and that the sexual scenes are necessary to it.

"Babylon Motel" involves a 14-year-old half-black boy and his attempt to keep his 13-year-old white half-sister off the streets, out of the hands of his mother's pimp.

"He is having a tender, loving incestuous relationship with his sister," Alves explains.

Alves was working for a Los Angeles television station when he encountered the neighborhood around Sunset Blvd. and Santa Monica Blvd., becoming "painfully aware of a savage subculture in this country, a real primitive and atavistic subculture."

"The play is an attempt to portray the wasteland that large portions of major cities have become."

Alves' suit seeks to force

Alabama to let him stage the play, but the production may get even broader distribution in the future.

Alves reports he is making a movie version of "Babylon Motel," using "100 students in the cast and crew."

He hopes to show the film in the same auditorium from which the play was banned.

Moreover, the local publicity generated by the incident has been invaluable to him, he adds. Several movie distributors, the Los Angeles Times and People Magazine contacted him as the drama surrounding his drama reached a climax last week.

Alves adds he is "actually talking to a couple of people in California (about producing the work)." CPS

Student submits sniglet

By Jenni Brown, Staff Writer

Do you ever wonder where Rich Hall gets his sniglets for the program Not Necessarily the News? Joseph Baneth Allen, a UNCW junior, is one person Hall received one from.

Allen, from Camp Lejeune, N.C., saw an advertisement for a nationwide contest in the October 1986 issue of Writer's Digest magazine. The contest was organized to collect sniglets from people around the country to be told by Hall on various episodes of Not Necessarily the News.

"I didn't think much about the ad. I don't waste time entering contests. It ties up too much time," said Allen. "Then my sister saw an ad for it while watching NNTN and told me to enter it." That same night before Allen went to sleep, he was looking at a magazine and noticed the printed cost of the magazine for the US and Canada.

"I just took 'Canada' and 'Inflation,' because their price is a lot higher than ours, and put them together," Allen said. "I came up with 'Canaflationary Zone,' Allen laughed. He continued, "The area on a book or magazine that tells you how much the book or magazine would have cost in Canada."

Allen said that after he sent in his contribution he basically forgot about it.

"The day we got back from spring break I was in the library looking through the April issue of the magazine because I hadn't received my copy yet," Allen said. A page for winners of the contest was in the magazine. Allen just happened to be reading the winners' contributions and saw "Canaflationary Zone" listed among them.

Allen smiled, saying, "I thought someone else had sent in the same word, but then I read my name underneath the definition and thought, 'oh! that's me!'"

Allen didn't expect he'd win, thinking lots of people would enter and knowing there would only be twenty-five winners.

"I was surprised," said Allen. "The article said only two thousand people entered. I thought more would."

Allen continued, saying, "The winners were supposed to receive a copy of all editions of the Sniglet books, but I haven't even received a letter notifying me that I won yet."

Allen's sniglet appeared on a December episode of NNTN, but, as Allen said, "Rich Hall changed it a little bit."

Deciding whether or not he'll enter another contest, Allen said, "If it's worthwhile. I would enter another contest but it would have to be short and easy. I wouldn't go to a lot of trouble because," as Allen concluded, "it's like Publisher's Clearing House. I never win the ten million dollar prize."

N.C. Aquarium offers outings

By Jefferson Weaver, Staff Writer

Have a date but low on cash? Want to go to the beach but tired of the same old thing? The North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher has clean natural beaches, great surf and several answers for the bored-and-broke blues.

A Beachcomber's Walk will be held Thursday April 23 at 2:00 p.m. Registration is required for this guided hike along the shore. Call 458-8257 for details.

The popular "Spring Wild Foods day" workshop will begin at 1:00 p.m. at the Aquarium April 23. The workshop is held annually and participants learn to gather, identify, and prepare wild plants and animals with the instruction of experienced "wild food enthusiasts." Participants will have the opportunity to sample gatherings at the evening meal. There is a fee of $7.00 and registration is required. Call 458-8257.

A trip to the Rocky Outcrop will be held at 2:00 p.m. April 28. Registration is required for this trip to study the geology, plants, and marine animals of the only natural rocky shoreline in North Carolina.

Call 458-8257 for details and registration for the Aquarium's special programs and ask for a complete schedule of activities.

Waitress offers tips on courtesy

By Debbie King,
Special to the Seahawk

You go out to dinner. Drinks and a meal are set before you. Music plays. This is your time out, away from worries.

You are the customer. I am a waitress. I want you to be happy; I will try to make certain that you enjoy your meal. If you cooperate, we can both make your dining experience a pleasure.

The task of ordering: If you have food allergies or dietary restrictions, please ask your questions while ordering. I will be more than happy to tell you what kind of oil we use, to request that your meal be served without salt, and your baked potato without butter. It does not present a problem unless you wait until the order is served to send it back with special instructions.

Serving. Waitresses have acquired balance and memory techniques as a part of their job. We can approach your table with a tray full of drinks, carry on a conversation, and place the correct glass in front of you, most of the time. Do not "help" us by lifting anything off the tray. It could lead to disaster. This is also true for children who grab a tray, and tilt it downward for a better peek at what is above their line of vision.

When dinner arrives, the same rules apply. You may be astounded that such a tiny person can carry six prime ribs single-handedly above her head, but please do not take a losing off her tray. If she feels she is losing her balance, she will tell you before she drops dinner into your lap.

After you have had time to sample your food, your waitress should return and make sure that everything is satisfactory. If something was not cooked to order, send it back and let us try again. If you need something else to drink, more napkins, or anything else, now is the time to say. You have to let us know what you want (We don't make a practice of mind-reading, although some customers do find it impressive). Do not be the person who eats a raw steak, then on the way out informs the cashier or manager that you will not pay for such sorry food. If you ate it, it obviously was not that bad.

Salad bars: Salad bars were invented with customer satisfaction in mind. You get to create your own salad, so we can't mess up. A good rule of thumb for finding what you need at the salad bar is: If you don't see it, you probably don't have it. This does not apply to reasonable requests for vinegar or crackers. However, if we had sliced kiwi fruit or fresh avocado dressing, it would already be on the salad bar.

Depending on the rules of an establishment, a customer can make one or many trips to a salad bar. This does not mean that one person can order a salad, fix three plates, and feed three people for the price of one. (Yes, this happens!) Your waitress, if observant, will realize what is going on and charge for the extra salads. It is her job. It is generally all right for you to get French dressing for your fries, or an onion slice for your sandwich. If you tell your waitress, she may get it for you.

Customers are usually pleased when a waitress goes out of her way to do something for them. Waitresses do not enjoy mopping up spills, scraping chewing gum off the tables, or picking jello out of the carpet. We do these things, however, because it is our job to create a clean, pleasant environment for you. And you pay our salary. Wait salaries start at $2.01 per hour, so we basically work for tips. The government expects that we will make at least minimum wage, or $1.34 in tips every hour. The actual time we spend waiting tables is much shorter than the time we spend on the clock getting ready and cleaning.

In order to make any money, we have to make the customer happy. Generally, fifteen percent of the total bill is considered a good tip. That should be a reflection of the quality of service. People tend to tip based on their overall impression of the establishment. Frankly, this is not fair to the waitress. Don't penalize the waitress for something beyond her control, like having to send your steak back. When a waitress is stiffed (not tipped) she wonders, "What did I do wrong?"

One of the most disappointing experiences for a waitress is to work very hard to please a customer, and find a nickel on the table when he leaves.

Among the most pleasing experiences is cheering up a grouchy customer, making certain that everything is to his liking, and finding a proper tip after he leaves.

Granted, we make mistakes. We are human, too. We have our bad days, but we have to work. Our restaurant becomes our second home. We help cook, clean, and constantly entertain guests. We appreciate common courtesy; we like being treated as people. If you would not do something in your own home (such as throw food) you should not do it in a place of business.

You are the customer, our guest. We will try to please you. Please try to smile back when I smile first, it will make my day a little brighter. Forgive me if I forget to bring you extra coffee creamer, just remind me a second time. By the way, visit us again soon.

There is also a variety of juices and teas as well as natural sodas. An unlimited supply of pastas is also available in whole wheat and vegetable. Tidal Creek even offers a dietary improvement for dogs, and natural dog food is sold by the pound. And for those who want supplements a selection of non-synthetic vitamins can be purchased at well below retail prices.

The selection of snacks, produce, canned foods, bulk sold foods and other products goes on and on, yet every single product sold in the store is healthy and is not "choked full of bad things" as Vincent describes some of the undesirable foods on the market today. Tidal Creek is operated and owned by its members; therefore, their needs are specifically catered to.

The organization is nonprofit so members enjoy greatly reduced prices. Members donate their time to the store in exchange for the lower prices. If a household works a mere two hours per month they receive a markdown on all the store's products. A household working four hours a week is eligible for a 13% discount. According to Vincent, "a lot of money can be saved over a period of time.

Aside from the discount there are other advantages to Tidal Creek. Since most of the shoppers are also owners, buying is made very convenient. Many of the products are carried in bulk; therefore, as much or as little wanted can be purchased, and the shopper serves himself. People can use their own containers and mark prices for themselves. Products are weighed at checkout counter for mass prices.

The members are not limited to the stock in store. They can special order any item from the suppliers at no extra cost. A member also receives a 10% discount at Hieronymus Seafood Market as well as a discount on some movie tickets.

A Tidal Creek membership can be purchased for $2 on a one month trial basis or for $10 a year per household. Once a member the many discounts and advantages are available. Being a member and an owner at the same time makes getting involved enjoyable and in this case profitable.

If you feel Tidal Creek is an organization that you would like to become involved in, See Anne Vincent at the Tidal Creek store located at 4410 Wrightsville Ave, or call 799-COOP.

Faculty are in news

UNCW News Service

Dr. Walter De Vries, a part-time instructor in the Division of Speech Communications at UNCW, was a guest lecturer at the Institute of Politics in the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University on April 8, 1987. Devries gave two lectures: "The Black Office-Holder in America" and "The Impact of Negative Television Commercials in Political Campaigns."

Three professors from The University of North Carolina at Wilmington were each elected on April 7, 1987 to chair various committees for The University of North Carolina Faculty Assembly.

Dr. Betty Jo Welch, professor and coordinator of speech communication, was re-elected chairman of the UNC Faculty Assembly.

Dr. Kathleen Kowal, professor of psychology, was re-elected chairman of the Governance Committee.

Dr. Margaret Parish, assistant professor, English, was elected chairman of the Faculty Welfare Committee.

The First Interim Council for the 51st year of the North Carolina Student Legislature will be held April 24-26 at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

On Friday, there will be registration and a party for the participating students. Saturday's agenda will include meetings, special speakers and debates.

Some of the topics of discussion include resolutions concerning sexual offenses committed against minors, the removal of handicapped barriers from the public university system of North Carolina and a resolution concerning truck safety.

On the lighter side, the second annual beach party extravaganza at Wrightsville Beach will be Saturday afternoon. There will also be a Hawaiian luau and lip sync contest Saturday night at UNCW.

Sunday will also consist of debates and bids for the September Interim Council.

Approximately 100 students from different schools in the state are expected to attend the council meeting.

Campus Capsule

The Department of Modern Languages at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will present "France in the 1930s" at 3 p.m., Sunday, April 26 in Morton Hall room 214. The public is invited and the film is free.

"France in 1930s" is an amateur movie filmed by an American traveler in 1930, 1931 and 1937. Commentary will be provided by Peter Hale, a student of modern languages at UNCW, and Dr. James R. Beeler, professor and chairman of the modern languages department.

Scholarships offered

Interested in studying abroad? Rotary International's District 773, comprising most of eastern North Carolina, is making a call for applications for four full scholarships to be awarded for next year.

Rotary Foundation Scholarships include round-trip transportation, all required academic fees, necessary educational supplies, room and board, and limited educational traveling expenses while abroad.

The scholarships will be awarded for the academic year 1988-1989. Final date for receipt of completed applications is July 1987.

For almost any field of study, and both men and women may apply. For more information and a brochure describing the scholarship program more fully, contact Dr. Michael Goins, 5030 Randall Dr., Wilmington, 28403, or Tom O'Brian, Chairman of the Rotary Foundation Scholarship Selection Committee at P.O. ## The demigods of Raleigh have spoken - 'No cars!'

The wonderful folks in Raleigh have sent down a decree that can and has put a serious burden on any student on this campus who seriously wants to get involved in activities related to our fair institution.

Up til now, student organizations could rent cars from the University and pay 22¢ a mile for the privilege. The Seahawk was one of those groups, using a station wagon every week to carry the proof sheets for the newspaper to the printer and then to return with the finished newspapers in the afternoon.

Now, instead of paying a flat fee that includes gasoline, oil, and general maintenance, students desiring compensation for using their vehicles for school/club related activities must present a gas receipt and have to get their money returned within a month.

As of two weeks ago, students are no longer allowed to drive state cars for any reason. This means that Student Government workers will have to find alternate modes of transportation — flying or driving their own vehicles — if they need to attend conventions, workshops, etc.

It means also that clubs like the Political Science Club would not be able to drive state vehicles on research trips to Washington D.C. to study our national government firsthand.

It means, as mentioned before, that your newspaper might not be here quite as quickly as you have gotten used to.

Officials cite irresponsibility and statistics showing young people as being drivers prone to drunk and careless driving.

Funny how they didn't forbid former representative Ike Andrews from driving state owned vehicles after repeated drunk driving arrests, at least once while driving state owned car. Or maybe the gentleman was only a little "tipsy" all those times and not being an "irresponsible" driver like we fast-driving, dope smoking, beer drinking young'uns.

Even if they have taken away a privilege you pay for, don't look for your student activity fee — which allows you to participate in SGA clubs and allows those clubs privileges such as state cars — to be reduced anytime soon.

What is even more interesting is that this Sunday's Raleigh News and Observer showed nine brand new Ford LTD sedans that have been kept by state drug agents as "spares" for over a year now. According to the N&O these LTD's will soon be joined by about the same number of brand "newer" Chevrolet Impalas.

State officials contacted by the News and Observer said the cars had in most cases less than 100 miles on them and were kept as spares for drug enforcement agents.

The same officials said that, as with all state owned vehicles, they would be sold after three years or 60,000 miles.

With this many "spare" cars running around, who but the state motor pool knows how many other spare cars with little or no mileage are kicking around.

Why not turn at least a few of these cars over to the universities for student use? They would not be depriving any "important" folk such as instructors or administrators (nothing against the latter) from using regular motor pool vehicles since there seem to be more than enough regular vehicles to go around already.

Even if they won't allow students to use one of the "old" cars that never get used by their respective divisions, perhaps they could set aside several of the post-60,000-mile cars for student use before said cars are auctioned off.

While we would prefer to have one of the newer cars, we — and we'd daresay few other groups — wouldn't argue with 'second best' instead of having to use our personal cars.

The boys of spring take a day off

With all the hullabaloo around the possible replacement of Easter Monday with the Martin Luther King Jr. birthday, few people remember why Easter Monday is a holiday in the first place.

It is not because the legislative powers that be are such avid churchgoers that they wanted another day to "Amen" and Hallelujah! Nor was it out of consideration for we weary college students who suffer from a too early Spring Break.

It was because of the age old baseball rivalry between North Carolina State University and Wake Forest University.

That's right. Our proud, pompous and pious legislators should to shut down the entire state so they could watch the Pack and the Deacons play ball.

Only in North Carolina.

Boating bravado backfires, or...wanna buy a boat, cheap?

Last week, I joined the elite ranks of the local yachting set.

At least, I like to think of the little fourteen foot jon boat parked in the back of my truck as a yacht. Perhaps a little one?

My first attempt at running an outboard motor was less than auspicious.

The arrangements had been finalized, and it was the day before the shakedown cruise for that little boat. The outboard on the green, barnacle-encrusted aluminum boat was a kind of crocheted 9.8 Mercury that had been built sometime before the birth of my great-great-grandfather, General Beauregard Stonewall Jackson Jeb Stuart Weaver, and the years had not been kind to that poor little Merc. However, we persevered, and finally got the little outboard pattering.

The gear shift was a little sticky, but the transition from reverse to forward wasn't too much worse than, say, a head-on collision with the three-fifty Amtrak southbound. My lovely little significant other (S.O.) sounds tender than the teenagerish "girlfriend" was seated very bravely in the bow of the jon, and she was fine until the motor spluttered and died.

Cursing quietly, I pulled and pulled the ripcord until the engine caught in something less than a

Pickups, Politics and Hound Dogs

With Jefferson Weaver

dying wheeze and opened the throttle. She tried to smile in that cute little way of hers that says get me out of here into a ladies clothing store. I knew she had begun to worry.

What I didn't know at that point is that you gradually open up an outboard motor until the boat "planes" on the water. I didn't realize that you don't go from stop to 20 knots in three seconds flat.

As the bow of the boat lifted out of the water, she screamed what I took to be "We are going to die!" What she actually said was "You are going to die when we make it back to the dock!"

After turning the boat around full throttle on a spot smaller than a dime, we began to head full force back into the marina. My S.O. was clutching both life preservers (I still have the toothmarks from trying to grab one from her), an emergency paddle (that she broke over my head when I suggested she hand it to me so we could push off of a sandbank) and was shrieking at the top of her lungs how she would never get in anything less than five hundred feet long again if God would get her out of this one.

The second time out, I had discovered one of our problems — a loose fuel line — and put the thing into the motor right side up this time. When I suggested that my S.O. get back in the boat and we'd go for another spin now that the problem was fixed, she, climbed an extremely "high pine tree" that had no limbs for about the first fifty feet up, growing and brandishing a six-inch thick piece of lumber she had grabbed from a scrap pile. After she swung the stick at me the first time, I figured she meant business so I took the boat out into the Intracoastal Waterway myself this time.

Just before entering the channel that lead out of the Marina, I noticed the motor was beginning to sput and skip. Since I was afraid the less-than-trust-inspiring outboard would choke, I opened the throttle wide open while I checked my fuel line connection.

The crafty, conniving communist dog of an outboard roared into life just as I turned loose of the steering post. Delighted that it was finally working, I looked back to the front of the boat to see where I was going, and a foot-thick piling shot up about eight inches from the bow and waited for me to wrap my boat around its creosote hide.

Witnesses say I yelled, my S.O. cackled that I screamed, and I say I growled a John-Wayne type of curse that was complicated by the fact that my heart had stopped beating.

It is unbelievable how fast and tight a small, ordinary jon boat can turn when the driver onboard has suddenly gone stark raving mad with fear.

As the motor finally found out that it wasn't going to ditch me in the slightly chilly waters of the marina, it shut its self down with an obscene glug. Frustrated, humbled, and disgusted, I began to paddle back into the marina with my head not quite so high as before.

My S.O. cackled from her treetop.

"I hear that's good exercise."

She cackled, and I began to wonder which was cheaper to keep up, the woman or the boat.

STUDENT FORUM

A student asks why...

Dear Editor,

Some students may be concerned about the University, while the rest might not. I'm a student that's concerned 1/4 of the time about UNC-W. But that's in-material opinion on my part. I would like you to let the students, faculty and staff know why Cheryl Ferguson resigned from her job as the University Union Secretary.

Make sure you cover the issues on both sides and maintain true facts.

Hints: — She applied for a higher job position but was denied.

— She has worked for the U.U. for 9 years

— She knows all the U. Union policies.

— She played as a role model for the few blacks on UNC-W (Now, she's gone).

'Don't burn the barn to kill the rats'

The other day a fine young conservative—one of the reasons I still have hope for the country's future—reminded me of an old saying that is as pertinent and as timely as our favorite slogan.

If we have any readers they must know that it is "It ain't broke, don't fix it."

But our young friend pointed out that just as much lasting damage has resulted from following the wrong course in dealing with problems that actually do call for action.

"What you are saying is 'don't burn down the barn to get rid of the rats,'" I told him, and he agreed that was about the size of it.

The socio-economic landscape is dotted with the charred ruins of barns burned down by federal judges, labor unions and liberal political leaders during the last 50 years.

And most of the rats continue to thrive — poverty, crime, discrimination, war, corruption — I could go on and on.

There are two time-honored sources for answers to all problems — not quick answers, not easy answers, not even, sometimes, popular answers, but they point the way to the right solutions.

They are, in case anybody hasn't guessed, the Bible and the Constitution of the United States.

Unfortunately activist federal courts have perverted the constitution, reformers want to change and emasculate the Bible and some of them tell us not to believe the Bible at all.

And the principle "authority" cited in some of the most critical and far-reaching decisions handed down by Earl Warren's supreme court was Gunnar Myrdal.

Now probably very few Americans have ever heard of Myrdal but they can easily confirm the facts he exerted awesome influence on the Warren Court and as a member of the staff of the United Nations.

In his book, "An American Dilemma," Myrdal, a Swedish sociologist, said the U.S. Constitution is "in many respects impractical and ill-suited to modern conditions," and he called it "nearly a plot against the common people."

Unfortunately, unlike the Warren Court, judges normally respect legal precedent — so the American people are stuck with a lot of bad precedents set during the Warren regime.

But the appointment of more Justices of the caliber of William Rehnquist and Sandra Day O'Connor can prevent the activist trend from continuing.

And a return to the Bible can lead the people on the right track in moral and personal decisions.

Stillpoint

With Bob Haywood—Campus Minister

There are a group of people in our midst about whom we need to learn more. They are disabled students and April 20-24 is Disabled Awareness Week. The types of disabilities present in our student colleagues are varied. Some are blind, some dyslexic, some confined to wheelchairs. And there are probably other disabilities of which I am not aware.

Raising our consciousness about disabilities and their effects on peoples lives is important both for the sake of disabled students and for ourselves. It is important for their sake because, as I was surprised to learn from a disabled student, prejudice is still rampant against people with disabilities on this campus. Some students with disabilities have experienced being ridiculed and tricked in embarrassing ways. Some report being addressed in condescending ways because of their disability. Others report a sense of isolation simply because people do not know how to talk to someone who is disabled and avoid them rather than try. We simply avoid eye contact or speaking to them and, all of a sudden, they don't exist. Take advantage of the opportunities that are offered to learn more about the lifestyles and feelings of people who need acceptance and friendship in exactly the same way as you and I do.

It is useful to learn more about disabled students for our own sake as well. Most disabled students are quite willing teachers about their particular disability and how it affects them in terms of meeting their needs in this campus environment. If you would give yourself the privilege of knowing a student who has had an extra dimension of struggle in their personal lives, you will often find someone ahead of you in learning what is important in life, what it adds to strength of character to work to overcome a disability and, perhaps, something about how disabled people often have more to give to you than you do them.

What is more, those who are disabled have much to teach us who think we are whole about the meaning of compassion. Pity separates us from people and is an effective feeling for keeping our distance. A genuine friendship with someone whose disability complicates their life will broaden and enrich both people in a way that can leave us more able to live lovingly in every dimension of our lives.

Disabled Awareness Week provides us with another opportunity to grow, to break down more of the barriers that separate people by prejudice and lack of communication. Let the disabled be your teachers. Try living in the world with their limitations, even for a few moments. It will help us all.

'Tis the party season

In the past few weeks the mail seems to be filled with invitations to this or that party, all for young women who have decided that June is still the month for weddings.

Recently two ladies that I was traveling with were discussing finger food that they had to prepare for one of those late afternoon teas. You know the kind where the ladies gather for generous dollops of conversation over a cup of punch or tea and plenty of nibbling food as they plan for their next "good works" in the community.

They spoke of cheese biscuits, nut breads and other such nibblets. They also referred to something that intrigued me, a pickle-cream cheese-ham rollup.

It was at one of these Tuesday afternoon affairs that I first ran into hot pepper jelly, both red and green.

I felt that my education had been fairly complete as far as tea foods went but this was something entirely new to me. Center stage on the refreshment table was a slab of cream cheese, a basket of crackers and a bowl of green and another of red, jelly.

Years before I had been introduced to mint jelly and it had become a favorite. Imagine my shock and burning mouth when I bit down into a wheat cracker spread with cream cheese and topped with what I thought was a mild tangy mint jelly.

Another of those "innocent" dainties often found on a reception table is the hot cheese biscuit. There are two versions, but both call for grated cheese and biscuit mix—then comes the difference: the cook can choose between either hot mustard or cayenne (red) pepper. Either way, I think the devil himself had access to that recipe.

No longer are the hostesses of today limiting themselves to the fine linens, gleaming silver and best china for their parties honoring the bride-to-be.

In fact, it's more often than not that both the bride and groom-elect are being honored.

A friend in recent years threw an outdoor party, complete with homemade Japanese lanterns hanging in the trees. She brought her collection of straw baskets, gingham tablecloths and served up drinks from a half barrel filled with ice.

Everyone agreed that it was one of the best parties thrown that summer.

More and more tables filled with sandwich makings and fruit trays are showing up at receptions. Blessed are the hostesses who think of their guests who have traveled far and may have skipped the evening meal in order to attend the 5 p.m. wedding.

Ever hear of a cabbage bowl? Or a bread basket? Both are not your usual serving dishes.

For your cabbage bowl, choose a hard head, trim the outside leaves off and hollow out the inside. Fill with a salad, stand back and wait for the comments.

A bread basket takes a little more doing. Select an uncut loaf of white bread and trim the top off lengthwise. Hollow out the loaf, down to about 1/4 inch of the crusts. If you like, trim the edges by cutting four "arches" on each side and finishing the end with one arch.

Brush your basket with melted butter or oleo, place on a cookie sheet in a 350° oven for about eight or ten minutes.

Just until it is golden brown then cool and store at room temperature, wrapped, until needed.

To fill your basket at party time, try a roll up sandwiches such as cream cheese/water chest ones.

Trim a loaf of sliced bread of its crusts, flatten each slice with a rolling pin ending up with about a three inch square of bread.

My recipe called for four loaves of bread, enough to make about 64 little rolls.

The filling is simple: 12 ounces of cream cheese with chives, creamed with 2 tablespoons lemon juice and 1/2 finely chopped water chest. Spread each slice with about two or three half-tablespoons of cheese mixture then roll up as if you were making a jelly roll. Top each little roll with a sprig of water chest.

Until you are ready to serve these "dainties" keep them covered with a damp paper towel in the refrigerator. To serve, stand up in your bread basket.

But back to the pickle. They discussed medium size pickles. But when it came to finding the recipe, it called for an 8 ounce jar of gherkins, drained, two packages of sliced ham from the deli and again that old standby cream cheese, about one and half cups whipped.

They simply spread their ham slice with cream cheese, laid the pickle on it and rolled it together. The smaller the pickle the more pickles you need to lay across the narrow side of the ham slice.

Use no toothpicks to keep the roll together, the cream cheese acts as its own "glue". Chill and when ready to serve, use a sharp knife and slice crosswise the pickle.

There are as many different ways to put an array of reception food together as there are cooks. Some of those cooks guard their secrets with an iron fist, others are happy to share with everyone. Lucky are those of us who know that type of cook.

Just remember, no matter what type of table you are setting, that old standby rule of "a sweet, a sour, a salty and a drink" is a good one to follow.

I wonder now though if we need to add a "hot" to the list, not hot as in heat, either.

Comedy Show Thursday

Trio of critically acclaimed comedians to appear

The Special Events and Residence Life Committees of the University Program Board will sponsor a comedy show featuring Fred Stoller and Philip Nee. The show will be at 8 p.m., Thursday, April 23 in room 100 of the University Union. The public is invited and admission is $1.

Stoller's comedy concentrates on a single target: himself. Watching his act you wonder if his mother really is that weird. Because of the many references he's made about her on his many appearances on "Late Night with David Letterman" she may already be famous.

The New York Post states "Fred Stoller was perhaps the most fascinating, with a marvelously sustained performance in both character thought and visual presentation...at the West Coast Comedy Club."

Stoller is appearing on "Nightlife" with David Brenner this fall on the ABC television network. He also appeared on "Saturday Night Live," "Comedy Tonight," was a champion on "Star Search," "The Richard Belzer Cinemax Special," "MTV Comedy Break" and "Stand-Up USA" for BBC television.

Fred Stoller has appeared on most of the late night comedy shows.

Nee is one of the country's handful of Asian comedians. He was announced as the New York state winner of Showtime's 1985 "Funniest Person in America" competition in April of 1985. Nee impressed the judges with his unique comic style, garnered from his experiences as a child growing up in a Black/Latino neighborhood in Manhattan's lower east side.

Phil has appeared at several New York comedy showcase clubs such as Catch a Rising Star, Carolines, Comedy Cellar, Comedy U, Improvisation, as well as the West Bank Cabaret, Who's on First, Tyson's, Silver Lining, Mostly Magic, The Bitter End, Folk City and Barnaby's.

On radio, Nee has appeared on "The Joey Adams Show," and WBAI-FM's Comedy Night Benefit. He has appeared on television on WNBC-TV's "Newscenter 4." Other engagements include "Night of 100 Comics," "The Soho Comedy Festival," "Fools' Night" at Off-Broadway's Manhattan Punchline Theatre, New York's First Official Comedy Day Marathon, and as a guest comedian with the comedy troupe, Chicago City Limits.

Humor/Magic show on Wednesday

The Coffeehouse Committee of the University Program Board will present "Off the Wall Magic" with Steve Richardson at 8 p.m., Wednesday, April 29 in the University Union courtyard. The public is invited and admission is free.

"Off the Wall Magic" is a combination of bizarre magic and crazy humor. Richardson does magic with things he's found in the trash...garbage like pantyhose, roller skates, baby shoes, soap bubbles and an electric toothbrush. The show is captivating with his offbeat material and wit. The audience gets involved in each performance and has fun while being fooled. His mad-hatter look and "twinkle in the eye" personality are the tools that he uses to create his one-man magical circus. Steve's fresh approach to comedy/magic is a treat for all.

Richardson has been a magical entertainer for over 15 years. He has performed at college and university shows from Niagara Falls, New York to Miami, Florida. His performances have included the Village Voice Festival of Street Entertainers, the children's zoo in Central Park, magic for public television's "Fun and Stuff" program and New York Public Library events.

Steve will appear at Thursday night's comedy show.

MUSICNEWS

MUSICIAN • MAGAZINE

"I don't think it's up to me as a singer to have answers. It's wrong for pop stars to be politicians." — Bono (U2)

For Immediate Release: The world's favorite rockers-with-a cause are back, and MUSICIAN magazine's got them! Throughout their career, U2 have been closely associated with the many causes they represent: Band Aid, Amnesty International, Live Aid, Artists United Against Apartheid, and Self-Aid (for the Irish unemployed). In the May issue of Musician, the members of U2 discuss their roles as the conscience of Rock 'n' roll, even though leader Bono seriously questions the validity of such a label:

"Musicians are only ordinary people. It's the music which is extraordinary. What comes to mind is Elvis Presley who meets Nixon and is made an anti-drug marshal, and the man is loaded out of his brains. I don't think it's up to bands to have their politics worked out. You're put in a position where because you have made music that means something to people, your point of view is given far too much importance."

U2's support of human interest groups has, however, helped to effect a change in the socio-political environment of America. Amnesty International membership has doubled since the "Conspiracy of Hope" tour, and U2 clubs around the country donate membership fees to Third World concerns. Bono comments: "If you can inspire something on that small scale, that's everything I could ask for. All, in fact, I would ask for."

With the first leg of the band's American tour just beginning, and their new album, The Joshua Tree, quickly climbing the charts, U2's politics and passion are guaranteed to reach their largest audience ever.

"It's taken us a year to come down from the high of the last tour. But now we're about to step on another up escalator. I suppose we're dreamers and so far our dreams have come true."

Stevie: He's still big brother to me. And he plays that way. I'm still amazed every time I hear him. Tone, touch, ideas, maturity...

Jimmie: I shouldn't be here for this.

Stevie: ...his knowledge is incredible to me. I play different than him. I play what I play better than him because he plays what he plays better than me.

Jimmie: If you listen to either one of us, you can tell that we come from the same place. We just did it and listened to it. It's just havin' ears. 'Cause I don't know what the name of the stuff is anyway, just what it sounds like.

Robert Williams has the ability to make his saxophone talk. The current Visiting Artist at Wilmington's Cape Fear Technical Institute performs virtually every style of music, and does so with impressive virtuosity. He performs on soprano, alto, and tenor saxophones, and the result is always the same. The saxophone talks, and the audience is absolutely captivated—regardless of whether the musical idiom is classical, jazz, or ragtime.

Williams is currently winding up his stay at CFTI after two years at the community college.

Most of William's energies, at this point, are being directed towards distributing his newest recording, Smooth Sailing. The LP cassette, was released last month and features Williams playing jazz saxophone. The cassette was recorded by engineer Bobby Michaels at Wilmington's Studio Ranch Recording sound studio, and features the talents of Duke Ladd (piano), Danny Pera

The selections range from Herbie Hancock's super funky "Watermelon Man" to the beautiful "What Are You Doing The Rest of Your Life" to the dreamy and moving Don Sebesky number, "Olvidar."

Williams and the other players will be performing cuts from the recording at a free concert at Thalian Hall on Tuesday, April 28th. The curtain will rise at 8pm.

'King and I' Cast Announced

A cast of forty-two people have been chosen by director John Rushton to appear in the upcoming Thalian Association community theatre production of the musical "The King and I" to be staged in Thalian Hall May 13 thru 18.

"The King and I" is a play which deals with the real-life story of Mrs. Anna Leonowens, an English governess (played by Beverly Skinner of Rocky Point) who went to Siam in 1861 on an assignment to tutor the Siamese Crown Prince (Matt Titterton) and stayed for seven years doing as much tutoring of the King (Vincent McCoy) as she did for his son.

Local performers appearing in the cast include Amy Brannock as Lady Thiang, K. Scott Leider as the Kralahome, McCall Thompson as Lun Tha, Will King as Louis Leonowens, Amy Plaskett as Princess Ying Yawalak, Michael Titterton as Sir Edward Ramsey, Bob Daum as the Interpreter, and Bill Reilly.

The royal wives of the king will be sung by Janice Clark, Posie Ewart, Andrea Henderson, Susan Magnabosco, Judy Miller, Angela Phillips, Pat Plaskett, Cathy Poulos, Chris Steele, and Maria Trobaugh.

The children of the court include Joseph Biggestaff, Laura Clark, Tommy Male, Michael McNeill, Evan Scott, Benjamin Clark, Carol Magnabosco, Karen Rochelle, Helen Veit, Courtney Wright, Becky, Wyatt, and Christa Yopp.

Dancers for the play are Ross Caperton as Simon Legree and Beth Bache, Jennifer Joye, Shelley Joye, Kimberly Kirby, Marshall Perry, Kristi Sanders, and Allison Ward.

The boxoffice opens for members of the Association for reservations April 29 and for the general public May 4. Tickets may be obtained by calling 763-3398 or 763-9328.

Jane Powell will sing April 22

The Minority Arts Committee of the University Program board will present Jane Powell at 8 p.m., Wednesday, April 22 in room 100 of the University Union.

The 35 year-old native of Roanoke, VA shies away from comparisons to other singers. While her musical idols have been Della Reece, Otis Redding, Ella Fitzgerald, Aretha Franklin, and other soul greats, she doesn't categorize herself. Powell is a little bit jazz, a little bit rhythm and blues, and a little bit of soul. Much of what she sings in concert depends on her mood at the time.

Jane Powell & Company consists of four gifted musicians who include a drum player, bass, sax and keyboard players. Alone, the band is superb and with Jane Powell, it becomes better than superb! As the "Charlotte News" has described her, "...one thing's for certain: She's Terrific. That, and flamboyant, outrageous at times, totally unselfconscious, witty, sexy, playful -- and with a velvet voice big enough to fill a canyon and sweet enough to soothe a savage."

The show promises to be an outstanding event. The public is invited to attend. Admission is $1.

Hot Jazz in Chicago

The jazz combo deserves a hand for their Musicfest performances...

by Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The UNCW Jazz Combo traveled to Chicago two weeks ago for a Downbeat Magazine-sponsored national music competition. Although the combo as a whole were not awarded a medal, piano player Rudy Tyson was named as an All-Star at the competition.

Musicfest USA was nothing short of a musical extravaganza. It was virtually impossible to even begin to check out all of the activities, let alone hear all of the competing bands.

The Jazz Combo played excellently, and I was very proud to be there with them. I will never forget the intense look of concentration/prayer/pride that was written on band director Frank Bonjorno's face during the eighteen minutes of the combo's presentation.

The adjudicators praised the combo for their "spirited performance," and pointed out that they both looked and sounded like they were really enjoying themselves while they played.

Our combo competed against the nation's finest musicians, many of whom have played professionally for years. They were pitted against players from all across the country, and I was especially impressed with their afternoon concert performance at McCormick Center Hotel.

The concert featured the works the group had performed for the judges, and also included a killer rendition of Larry Price's original "From Now Own." The arrangement of that song for the combo players was an absolute show stopper.

Kevin Winegar's hot guitar leads, Rudy Tyson's magic piano, and the added expertise of all the players on "Caravan" is also worthy of mention.

There was a dizzying level of excitement in the air as the awards ceremony neared closer and closer. The ballroom of the hotel was packed—there must have been over a thousand people in the room to hear who would be lauded as "The Nation's Finest Musicians."

The fact that only a few of the groups were named as winners didn't daunt the crowd one bit. The hundreds of people who traveled from all over the country for the competition were hustling around all over afterwards—tracking down those people who had impressed them the most.

And there were a lot of them. I had never even imagined that so much talent could be packed into so few city blocks. It was simply overwhelming.

As Rudy Tyson put it several months ago, "We won just by being asked to go."

And he was right. Only those who were considered to be the hottest around were even invited to this year's festival. And our group was one of those.

Once again, I would like to say that I applaud all of the combo players and band director Frank Bonjorno for their outstanding performances in Chicago. No one could have asked for a better performance than they gave there.

And next year...

The festival organizers have decided that the next competition will be held in April 1988 in Orlando, Florida. They are scheduling a series of regional competitions to determine the finalists for that event.

I wouldn't mind going to that competition myself. I just need a band. Are you listening, combo players?

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. Then, under the New GI Bill, I'm getting another $5,000 for tuition and books.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back — up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000 — or more — for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

Sports Talk

with

Matt Shanklin, Sports Editor

More than just UNCW opponents

With UNCW and East Carolina again battling for first place in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) baseball race, it brings to mind the topic of Seahawk rivalries.

A rival, as defined by Webster's Dictionary, is "one of two or more striving to reach or obtain something that only one can possess."

With this in mind, you must add to this definition, "two teams competing for one goal, but having a dislike for each other."

UNCW has quite a few rivals, some weak, some very intense. When you talk about rivals, the first one that comes to mind is East Carolina. The Pirates are a natural rival and our closest conference foe.

With East Carolina comes memories of many confrontations in the past couple of years. The most recent would be the Seahawks match up against ECU in the CAA men's basketball tournament when the Pirates tried to knock off the second-seeded Hawks.

It was a Brain Rowsom three-point bomb that saved the Seahawks that day and gave them their sixth straight win over the Pirates, but it was more than that. UNCW had once again dumped ECU, taking another notch out of the Pirate's armor and adding another level to the growing prestige of UNCW's program.

But basketball isn't the only battleground ECU and UNCW have met on. There are constant battles in baseball, swimming, women's basketball and soccer. Yet, it's baseball and men's basketball that have seen the fiercest confrontations.

Other rivals of UNCW consist of Navy, George Mason, James Madison, Campbell, and Coastal Carolina.

Navy's rivalry is limited to basketball because the Middies were always on top of the conference, nationally ranked, and a likely squad to aim for. Unable to beat them also added to the atmosphere and provided many memories for the fans.

With the graduation of David Robinson, the intensity of this rivalry could diminish or will when UNCW returns the favor to Navy for knocking the Seahawks off in the CAA finals.

James Madison is another new rival that has caused some problems with UNCW, especially since both schools continue to have top-notch programs.

The rivalry may have gotten an added spark this year when the Dukes dropped UNCW twice and then edged out the Seahawks for an NIT bid. UNCW can only hope to return this favor very soon.

Next is George Mason. Because of their excellent soccer program, their nasty basketball coach, Joe Harrington and his bunch of hoodlums, and because of an incident in the baseball tournament selection in the old ECAC-South, the Patriots have been high on the UNCW hit list.

Harrington, an almost constant crybaby, started many feuds with his arrogant and aggressive attitude. His players, following his lead, have always been on the suspicious side, starting many showing matches with UNCW, and since entering the CAA, they always seem to cross the Seahawk's path.

The baseball incident I referred to is the "Snub Incident" of 1985. After the Seahawks swept GMU during the regular season and finished one-half game out of first-place, the ECAC officials decide the two teams that should make the post-season tournament would be ECU and Mason, based upon their hot finish. It was an occurrence that boils the blood of the Seahawk faithful to this day.

But Harrington has left for Long Beach St. and the baseball teams have been relatively kind to each other. Only time will tell if the Seahawks-Patriots rivalry will grow even more.

Finally, there is Campbell and Coastal Carolina. Basketball and baseball are the biggest battlegrounds, with neither side liking each other at all. The rivalry between UNCW and these teams has probably been the strongest of all.

Coastal seems to be the least of UNCW's worries, as the Seahawks have had little problem in trouncing on the Chanticleers, but they are always gunning for their competitors to the north.

The only real spark to the regional-rivalry was the Seahawks trip to the Chants high school-style gym back in January. With the Seahawk's bus involved in an accident, forcing a late arrival, Coastal tried to make UNCW play without a warmup. Only Head Coach Robert McPherson's strong will kept Coastal from pulling a "fast" one.

Battles on the baseball field have also been heated, with Head Coach Bobby Guthrie getting flustered in more ways than one.

Yet it is the Camels of Campbell University who are probably the most despised opponent of the Seahawks. Their backwoods attitude and constant bad manners have more than lit the fire under UNCW's hottest rivalry.

This year has probably been the best example of anti-Campbell sentiment.

"I wanted to burn the place down," said one disgruntled UNCW fan. "I've never been so upset before. I hate them and I really despise their fans and the redneck attitude they have."

Many people are now knowing this attitude towards Campbell. After beating the Seahawks in overtime at Fayetteville, a loss that probably cost UNCW a post-season bid, their baseball team showed what true sportsmen they are by throwing rocks at the UNCW pitchers in a game at Brooks Field last Tuesday.

It is one thing to hate another school for constantly beating you, it is another to show the kind of attitude and behavior that Campbell and their fans show on a daily basis.

Campbell fans may counter by accusing UNCW fans of being out of line, but Seahawk fans are very conservative when it comes to the backwoods antics of the Campbell Camels. Campbell has such an immature attitude, their mascot rides around on a tricycle.

East Carolina, George Mason, James Madison, and Navy may be rivals, but they are rivals that UNCW fans have showed plenty of respect for. Campbell doesn't deserve respect.

In summary, UNCW has many rivals, with their conference rivals being high on the hit list. But this is normal in competition circles. The rivalry with Campbell is pure hate.

If UNCW teams could put a 100-point hurld' on any team they could, Campbell would probably be the safe bet. Because nothing is better for a hated rival than to embarrass them.

The UNCW men's golf team shot a three day total of 957 to finish fourth in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) men's golf tournament.

The Seahawks finished only five strokes behind third place finisher James Madison. East Carolina won the CAA championship with a three round total of 929, while Richmond placed second with a 936.

Individually, the 'Hawks were led by freshman Richard Kimble's 235 allowing him to place 10th overall. Kimble fired a 77 on Sunday.

Medalist honors were received by Rob Gai of Richmond who sank a birdie putt on the final hole of the tournament to record a 235 for the weekend.

The CAA tourney was held at the Fairfield Harbor golf course in New Bern.

Virginia Commonwealth in a doubleheader this weekend. The Lady Hawks split the twinbill with VCU shutting them out in the first game 8-0, but dropping the second by the score 5-1.

In the initial contest, winning pitcher Lisa Primovic ran her record to 15-9 by holding VCU scoreless. Primovic was aided by the offense of Wanda Carroll as she connected for a double, triple, and two RBIs. Mel Cope, Collen St. Ledger, Karen Rogers, and Norman Warwick each added two hits and drove in a run.

Jones closes out career with 'Hawks

by Leslie Capps
Special to the Seahawk

UNC Wilmington first baseman Chuck Jones isn't accustomed to warming the bench. Period.

That's why the Charlotte, NC native decided to continue his baseball career at the Colonial Athletic Association member school.

Jones came to UNCW because "it was an opportunity to play right away. I didn't know if I could handle sitting on the bench somewhere else."

The 6-2, 190-pounder is one of 11 seniors on the team. He's been a fixture for the Seahawks with his hitting and defensive plays.

A graduate of Independence High School, Jones was recruited by UNCW Head Baseball Coach Bobby Guthrie after his senior season.

"I was looking for a first baseman who could swing bat," recalled Guthrie. And swing the bat he has.

Jones ranks second on the club in batting with a .353 average, including four home runs and 29 runs batted in. Last season he averaged .320 at the plate. Guthrie said "At first base Chuck has been a very steady performer."

"Chuck makes very few errors. He is probably the best first baseman we've ever had. His offensive stats are great and his defensive stats overshadow his offensive play."

Jones was named Offensive Most Valuable Player for the Seahawks last season and is a strong contender again this spring. In 1983, he competed in the National Sports Festival in Colorado Springs, Colo. He also played on the U.S. team in the World Friendship Games in Johnstown, Pa.

Last summer he participated in the Valley League, an amateur summer league for college players, in Madison, Va.

Along with his impressive stats, Jones has also drawn the praise of his teammates. Senior outfielder Calvin Garret, Jones' roommate for the last four years, should know him better than anyone.

"Chuck is one of the nicest people you would like to meet. He contributes leadership to the team. The freshmen and sophomores look up to him."

"He works the hardest. He is always the first one on the field and the last off the field. Chuck's strong point is his consistency...he has improved a lot."

That consistency shows in his ability to combine academics and athletics. While the business management major has maintained a high grade point average, he still has hopes for a pro career.

"I hope to get a shot at getting drafted by a professional baseball team," he said. "If not, then I would like to get a job in sales. Hopefully I will have my own business one day."

In Guthrie's opinion, Jones has pro potential. "He deserves the opportunity, although many first basemen aren't drafted. Last year there was some interest by pro scouts."

Jones has improved his playing skills and also the mental aspect of the game. "He has become a smarter player. The improvement in the mental part of his game has helped him at the plate. He now gets better pitches."

Second baseman Mitch Wells, from Fayetteville, NC has also seen improvement in Jones' game. "He has improved all his skills on the college level. Chuck is one of the best first basemen I've played with."

Jones says the team's goals are to capture the CAA baseball championship and advance to the NCAA regionals. His personal goals include displaying leadership and experience as his collegiate career closes. "The seniors on the team decided to take it on ourselves. We want to encourage the younger players to play well."

"My advice to the younger players is to keep the Seahawk tradition alive. You've got to work hard, give it all you have and don't get down on yourself. Nobody's going to do the work for you."

At a time when many college and pro athletes talk a good game, Chuck Jones goes one better. He has taken his own advice en route to becoming one of the best first basemen in the school's history.

Speech Communication professor Dr. Betty Jo Welch died in New Hanover Memorial Hospital Sunday afternoon. She was 53.

Dr. Welch, a native of Tennessee, was chairperson of the University of North Carolina Faculty Association and had recently been re-elected to that position. She was the first member of the UNCW faculty to hold that position. Dr. Welch was a member of Who's Who Among American Women and a member of St. James Episcopal Church.

Dr. Welch was the first female chair of the faculty, and had served as chairperson of the Faculty Senate since its beginnings.

Dr. Welch was highly respected in the University as well as throughout the system. Dr. Kathleen Kowal, chair of the Faculty, said, "Dr. Welch was

The UNCW chapter of the national honor society, Phi Kappa Phi, initiated 26 students and a faculty member at its eighth annual initiation ceremonies April 8.

Phi Kappa Phi is an honor society recognizing good character and superior scholarship in all academic disciplines. Seniors and second semester juniors are elected to membership based on class standing and Grade point average. Seniors must be in the top ten percent of their class and juniors in the top five percent of all second semester juniors.

Keynote speaker was Curtis Welborne, instructor in social science at Southeastern Community college in Whiteville, where he has taught for 16 years. The title of his address was "The Importance of Education."

Hall '85 volleyball pit nears completion

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

Hall '85 residents and staff members were busy Monday constructing their own volleyball pit behind the residence hall for future use by UNCW students and faculty.

The project was built solely by hall government members, interested students, and staff members and is being funded by the SGA, who donated over $200.00 for building supplies.

Among the staff members participating in the event was Todd Brady, resident director at Hall '85, who described the time-consuming process of getting the project underway.

"We began one month ago," Brady explained, "drawing plans, calculating finances, and getting approval for the project. We finally got the pit dug six days ago and until today we have been waiting on the arrival of building materials and sand."

The sand Brady mentioned is being provided without cost by the Physical Plant of UNCW, who was scheduled to arrive "sometime Monday afternoon to pour it," Brady said.

Darrell Cheers, a resident assistant in Hall '85, was another staff member contributing his aid in the effort.

Cheers said that "hall government members saw a need to have a better volleyball playing area complete with sand and decided it was something they wanted to do."

Gospel Choir bringing acclaim to UNCW, selves

By Jennibeth Kennedy,
Staff Writer

Walking through Kenan Hall on Thursday nights, have you ever heard the joyous singing that is floating through the air?

It's the UNCW gospel choir, of course, practicing faithfully, but loving every minute of it.

The choir was founded during the fall semester of 1979, by a group of Christian-minded students who enjoyed singing gospel.

With the help of Elder Perry, a campus employee, the choir was founded and has been growing stronger every year.

The choir was originally part of the black student union, but later became a separate campus organization.

According to Michael Smith, the choir's outgoing president, most of the members sang in choirs during high school and really enjoy carrying on that tradition during college.

The choir has 32 members and is open to students, faculty and staff.

"Auditions aren't necessary," said Smith. "Gospel singing is something we all enjoy; we don't want to feel as though it's something you have to be picked to do."

The choir usually travels every Sunday to churches of its members and often performs for various organizations as well.

When not performing, the members work on special projects. A Thanksgiving food drive was their fall project and was a big success.

This semester, March 19-22, the choir performed on tour to help recruit minority students for UNCW. They traveled to Meigs, N.C., Newport News, Va., and Washington, D.C.

The choir performed at churches and local schools. Ralph Parker, director of minority

Phi Beta Lambda names awards, officers

The Phi-Beta-Lambda chapter of UNCW represented our campus well at the State Leadership Conference held April 3-5 at the North Raleigh Hilton.

Ten of our members were present at the conference. Five of those placed highly in the competitions.

Suzie Dimiatis placed 5th in Accounting I.

Melissa Blackburn-Walton, Frankie Tillman, and Doug Swain received 5th in Business Decision Making.

Eric Oates won first place in the Mr. Future Business Executive competition representing the North Carolina Phi Beta Lambda state chapter in Anaheim, California.

The Phi Beta Lambda also elected new officers recently.

Doug Swain was elected the new President for the 1987/88 year.

Mary Margaret Heath will be Vice President with Swain. Secretary will be Tony Harrelson. Joanna Hollaway was elected treasurer and Michelle Frey Historian.

Career Center's survey has interesting results regarding past graduates' experience in real world

By Ruthie Matthews, Staff Writer

Graduating is usually a time of looking forward, staring future in the eye and trying not to be the first to blink.

The Career Planning and Placement Center decided to look backward and see how well our 1986 graduates were staring future in the face.

"A survey was made of 786 graduates," said Dr. Dave Allen, Special Assistant to Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and project coordinator of this survey.

The survey was sent out approximately six months to one year after the students had been out of school. 395 (51%) responded. 38% of the respond-ents were business graduates and 31% were social science majors.

Two-thirds of the 51% were employed full-time in a permanent position. 29% said they learned of their present position from family or friends. Almost half said they were very satisfied with their current employment.

The median income was between $16-18,000 a year.

One-third of the 260 that were employed full-time are also continuing their education with 39% seeking CPAs or MBAs.

"The only ones not represented well in this study were students with a low G.P.A., nursing students, social science majors, and blacks, simply because they didn't respond," said Allen.

UNCC student falls to death on campus

By Art Weinstein and Tonya Carrick, Staff Writers for The Fort Niner Times at UNCC Used by permission

Rumors are still circulating around campus concerning the death of a UNCC student early last Friday.

Robert E. Tuttle, a freshman Political Science major from Winston-Salem, fell to his death from the eighth floor of Scott Hall around 12:30 a.m. Friday. He was pronounced dead on arrival at 12:57 a.m. at Charlotte Memorial Hospital.

Tuttle's death sparked many rumors among resident students, who spread them throughout the campus as students and faculty arrived for Friday morning classes. There is still a great deal of uncertainty over the manner of his death.

UNCC Public Information Director Ken Sanford said that Mecklenburg County Police Investigators immediately ruled out any possibility of foul play.

Witnesses with Tuttle at the time he fell reported that the 19-year-old student was in 821 Scott Hall, where several students were playing Pass Out, a drinking game. It is not clear how long Tuttle was involved in the game.

After the game broke up, the students continued talking and watching television. A female student who lives in the room and who saw Tuttle fall said she had never seen him before that night. She said she was the only one watching him at the time.

"I'm going to sit out on your ledge," Tuttle is reported to have said, according to the witness.

Ted Phillips, Associate Director of the Residence Life Office, said that, contrary to popular thought, it is unusual for students to venture out onto the ledges, and that there are strict policies to deal with offending students.

"We have a severe policy dealing with students [climbing out the windows], because of the risks involved," said Phillips. "If we catch them, they are referred to Student Court, where we recommend termination of their housing contract."

As Tuttle started to climb out the window, the witness said she told him not to sit on the ledge, because of the possible RLO penalty.

Tuttle ignored her warning and climbed out the window. He fell seconds later.

The witness said that he apparently slipped or misjudged his step. When he fell, he cried "Oh my God," the witness reported.

"It was just a freak accident," said the witness. "There was no way I could have stopped him."

Riots rock western campuses

CPS — Street parties erupted into large riots at two campuses last week.

At California State University at Chico, a street party "two or three blocks off campus" abruptly turned rowdy as 1,000 to 2,000 students rioted April 24.

Police eventually arrested 37 people.

At Colorado State University, the annual "College Days" weekend April 24-26 was marred by almost continuous rioting in which 124 were arrested and 100 were injured.

Chico State President Robin Wilson quickly cancelled the remainder of the annual "Pioneer Days" fest, while Colorado State President Philip Austin said he was "very pessimistic" he'd allow College Days to be celebrated next year.

CSU officials blamed the disruptions on too much student drinking without adequate supervision.

Chico State officials, on the other hand, placed some of the blame for their riot on MTV, the cable music channel, says Bob Pentzer, the campus' spokesman.

MTV, adds Dr. Herman Ellis, the school's director of student activities, had been urging viewers to go to Pioneer Days at the school, which Playboy magazine recently called the top party school in the country.

Pat Kopp, Chico's coordinator of public events, thinks such urgings may have brought an unusual number of outsiders contributed to the rioting.

Campus rioting usually conjures up images of wild drinking meens like at Chico State and Colorado State universities last weekend or even of huge political demonstrations, but all of it harkens back to a long tradition, one criminology researchers says.

Dr. Michael Smith, assistant professor of criminal justice at the University of Southern Mississippi, cites plenty of precedents for the campus unrest of this century in his book "Coping With Crime On Campus," to be published by MacMillan later this year. The book, written in cooperation with the American Council on Education, traces campus rioting back to the Middle Ages.

In 1354, for example, two Catholic priests were flayed alive when Oxford students and village residents battled in a classic confrontation between "town and gown."

In the New World, colonial colleges kept up the tradition with occasional riots fueled by ale and sparked by strict regulations.

Rum and ale also provided students with liquid courage in 1807, when half the student body of Princeton was suspended in the wake of riots against the university's strict code of conduct.

Strict disciplinary rules were also the catalyst for riots that rocked the University of Virginia campus in Charlottesville during the late 1830s.

Not to be outdone, Yale students took on the town residents in a melee in 1837. The Yale students also took to the streets in 1854 and in 1858, when some university buildings were set ablaze and a fireman was shot by a demonstrator.

"There is really nothing new about campus riots," says Smith. "Everything was not invented in the 1960s."

Summer months bring diet concerns

By Carla Garrison, Staff Writer

We have all awaited and dreaded it at the same time for nine months now, summer.

It's almost here and everybody is excited about days on the beach and other related summer activities. The only draw back is that those extra pounds around the middle and thighs acquired over the long winter months are going to be bared to the world.

There is still time though to lose that flab as well as begin to feel healthy. The college life is rough on everyone, mentally and physically. There is the stress of constantly studying, and the lack of time to stop and think about what we put in our bodies as nourishment.

It is actually fighting when you stop and think about what is consumed daily. We as Americans have many misconceptions about dietary needs. We also rarely stop and consider whether or not what we eat is good or bad for us.

Due to convenience we stop at Hardee's or MacDonald's or just grab anything from the refrigerator to curb our appetites. We eat when we are hungry and what is good not when it is needed or if it is nutritional.

Harvey and Marilyn Diamond, both noted nutritionists, have composed a book called "Fit For Life." The book is not on fad diets nor does it push any rigorous program. It simply states a lot of facts about nutrition and how to eat the right way which goes hand in hand with weight loss. The following facts have been adapted from the book and are provided so more uninformed people can begin to lose weight if necessary, or simply experience days with energy to work at full capacity rather than drag around wanting to go home and crash.

First of all, why do we gain weight? The main reason for weight gain is because practically all we eat is processed (fried, boiled, barbecued, etc.) That is, the food has been changed from its original form and humans are not built to deal with this kind of overload.

It is the by-products from the processed food that cause us to gain weight. All the residue which cannot be digested forms toxins which are acidic.

In order to deal with the acid water is retained. All of this must be stored somewhere until it can be eliminated, and what better areas for the body to store than places like buttocks, upper arms, thighs, and under the chin.

Once an understanding is gained of how to avoid the build up of those toxins anyone can lose weight easily and feel better. Most important is what you eat and in what combinations.

It is not really hard to eat right once those old habits are broken. Following is basically the schedule to go by according to Harvey Diamond.

First and most important is eating only fresh fruit and juice before noon. You can eat as much as you want, but no other types of food.

The reason for this is because fruit is easily digested by the body and therefore takes little of your energy supply. Actually you do not need any food before then because you are still operating on the food from the day before.

Digestion takes up the majority of our energy what is left over is what we must think, walk, talk, and function with. So if you eat a lot of food that takes most of your energy in digesting and you can not operate effectively.

Black groups name officers here

UNCW's Black Student Union and the University chapter of the NAACP installed officers this past Friday. Avery Tate, former BSU president, state NAACP Vice-president and an employee at UNCW served as master of ceremonies.

Ralph Parker, Dean of Minority Affairs, was guest speaker. Parker gave the history of both organizations on the UNCW campus.

Tanya Moore read the poem "I can" to the delight of all present. Ms. Moore also sang a solo number, "Surrender."

Former presidents Malcomb Coley (BSU) and Tracey Johnson (NAACP) inducted new officers with the charge "to carry on the torch." New presidents Chris Meredith (BSU) and Ms. Pamela Moore (NAACP) were sworn in and thanked the outgoing officers for their "outstanding work."

Advisors for the two groups are Dr. Earl Sheridan (NAACP) and Dr. Phillip McGuire (Black Student Union.)

Marijuana confiscated

By Robin Hudson,
Staff Writer

UNCW Public Safety closed an investigation Monday involving the manufacture of a controlled substance on campus property.

Capt. Billy Dawson said that officers received information from an unidentified source around 11:00 a.m. May 1, which led them to a wooded area behind parking lot "S" where they found three marijuana plants and several containers lying around.

A May 2 incident involving attempted bicycle larceny presently under investigation by police officials.

Capt. Dawson confirmed reports that two unknown persons tried to remove locked bicycles from the area in front of a campus apartment. He said that when a witness spotted the subjects they noticed him and fled the scene. Investigation into this case is continuing.

Also this weekend was a first degree burglary upon a Galloway Hall resident.

Reports said that, while the victim was sleeping, an unknown person entered the room and removed some personal items, such as a stereo system.

There was no total estimated value of the belongings stolen, but Dawson said the investigation is still underway.

relations and Doug Johnson, associate director of admissions, talked to the students about the opportunities at UNCW.

Next year's goal for the choir is to perform for commencement in the spring.

The choir celebrated a successful year and honored several special people at a banquet April 30 at Morrison's Cafeteria, Independence Mall.

Those honored were four graduating seniors: Quintan Murray, Dierdre Coley, Roberta Young and Phoebe Jeter. Also recognized was Elder Perry, who will retire from UNCW this year.

The choir is helped by several volunteers from the community. They are Vern Alford, accompanist, Bill Pickett, drummer and their advisors, Joyce Johnson and Debra Price, UNCW librarians.

NAMES AND NEWS 1986-87

Student drowns in pool

SEPTEMBER — 19-year-old Freshman Stephen Praisner was found drowned in the Trask Coliseum Pool. Lifeguards were on duty at the time of the drowning, but no charges were filed. Investigators concluded the investigation later that month after determining that no foul play, drugs or alcohol was involved.

— UNCW's Department of Military Science was expanded to a four-year program, elevating the school to host status.

— Some students were barred from attending classes here and at other schools because their immunization records were not up to date.

— UNC-General Administration Attorney Betsy Bunting addressed Residence Life workers, students, and faculty members on the new alcohol laws which, among other things, curtailed drinking on college campuses and raised the drinking age to 21 years of age.

Fire Disco banned

OCTOBER — An underground newspaper, The Hawke, which was first distributed on campus in September, reported that construction on the new wing of the William Madison Randall Library was far behind schedule. Eugene Huguette, Director of the Library, refuted those reports in a Seahawk interview.

— LIVINGWELL '86, a health promotion event, was held on the Union grounds. More than 1,000 students attended and participated in the events which ranged from diet awareness to emotional well being.

— 22-year-old Brian Keith Averitt, known to his friends as Guido, was killed by a shotgun blast to the stomach. No arrests were made in connection with the death.

— Riverfest '86 swept into the Cape Fear area, with festivals and events which attracted thousands of merrymakers from across the state for days of drinking and carousing at the Wilmington Riverfront.

— Two arrests and two citations were made at a dance held in the University Union. The disc jockey for the dance, Fire Disco, was banned from performing on the campus after the incident. Officials cited the actions of "non-students attending the dances played by Fire Disco" in the decision. The DJ threatened to sue the University, but no such suit was filed.

— Alcohol awareness week was held at UNCW in an attempt to inform students about the dangers of alcohol abuse.

— The Seahawk became the first newspaper in the UNCW system to publish a two-section college newspaper.

— A student building manager was charged with embezzling $178.25 from the University Union. The student was eventually cleared of all charges in New Hanover County Superior Court.

Dr. Keeling visits

NOVEMBER — AIDS expert Richard Keeling spoke to hundreds of students in what were some of the best attended programs ever offered at UNCW.

— An English instructor pleaded guilty to misdemeanor solicitation for crime against nature.

— The Student Senate voted against advertising in The Hawke.

— Dean of Residence Life Charlie Maimone addressed the Senate after former senator (now president) Lee King reported to the Senate that elevators were being turned off in the Residence Life area as a means of punishing students. Maimone refuted these reports, stating that the elevators were shut down for repairs.

— Two statues from the Tri-State sculptors exhibit in the Union were stolen. Neither "Adam" nor "Sentinel" were ever recovered. Two more statues were stolen later in November but both were recovered.

— Blonde-haired, blue-eyed Denise Jenkins, a 17-year-old Freshman here, was crowned Miss UNCW and went on to represent UNCW in the Miss North Carolina Pageant.

— An attendance policy which was defeated and finally approved for the Student Senate came under fire from the amendment's author, Lee King, after the senator's excuses for two absences were refused. In that same Nov. 19 meeting, King reported that asst. Dean of Students for Residence Life had told his staff members to "turn off the elevators (in the dorms) whenever they felt like it." Maimone denied making those statements.

— 26 drug and alcohol citations were issued at a concert by the rock group REM here in Trask Coliseum.

Student killed in auto

DECEMBER — Administrators and senators went head to head after Senators Patrick Toal and Gina Mathis proposed a plan designed to relieve parking problems on campus. Administrators discussed the problems with the Senators and unveiled plans to eliminate parking in the center of campus by the year 1990.

— The Seahawk basketball squad nailed Army in the opening game of a season that gave some Seahawk fans the hope that UNCW might make it to the NCAA tournaments.

— A $60,000 scoreboard was installed in Trask Coliseum.

— The Senate voted to give the UNCW Gospel Choir $2,000 to help the Choir's student recruitment drive.

— A 20-year-old female student died after a collision with a transfer truck in Onslow County. Tammy Lynn North was an assistant in the Student Affairs office and was the third UNCW student to die in this school year.

— Second ranked Indiana University barely defeated the Seahawk Basketball squad in the Indiana Classic over Christmas break. Final score was 73-72 in favor of the Hoosiers.

Library reopened

JANUARY — The new wing of the William Madison Randall Library was opened for use, and the old wing closed for remodeling with a projected re-opening date of June 1987.

— Deborah K. Watts, 21, a junior communications major, was killed in an automobile accident near Asheboro, N.C.

— K. Allen Daniel resigned his position as Student Government Vice-President and Joseph Pressley stepped up from Senior Class President to the SGA Vice-presidential position.

— The UNCW Board of Trustees announced plans to limit admissions in the 1987-88 school year, after more than 3,000 students applied as incoming freshmen before the end of January.

— The University Program Board was refused a $1,500 loan designated for renting the Hilton Hotel downtown for the Homecoming dance. The refusal sparked a feud between President Allan Dudley, who supported the loan, and Senators Louis DiCello and Lee King, both of whom expressed reservations regarding the UPB's liability for drunk drivers and the possible lack of student attendance.

— Dean of Students Richard Mullendore addressed the SGA on student behaviour at basketball games as Seahawk spirit gained momentum heading toward the UNCW - Navy game. Despite fears to the contrary, behaviour was on the most part good, laying the rumors to rest.

— The first annual Indonesian Culture Week at UNCW was cancelled due to scheduling conflicts and several other problems, said Dr. Gerald R. Shinn, Acting Director for the Museum of World Cultures.

— Cindy Zeiher was hired as the new advisor to the University Program Board.

— Joseph Pressley was sworn in as S.G.A. vice president.

— The seventh annual North Carolina Jazz Festival was held at the Hilton in Wilmington.

the biggest athletic event in the history of UNCW and will be remembered as one of the greatest games ever played in the history of Trask Coliseum. All-American David Robinson's 15-foot jump shot at the buzzer erased a one point Seahawks lead and sent the sellout crowd of 6,100 home stunned.

— Black History Month was celebrated. UNCW arranged a wide variety of special programs and displays in recognition of this celebration.

— The University Union Snack Bar changed its name to the 'Hawk's Nest'.

— S.G.A. President Allan Dudley and Senator Lou DiCello clashed over S.G.A.'s participation in the homecoming dance to be held at the Hilton.

— Media Publications Board ends 'paper war' between The Hawke and The Seahawk. The board found both organizations to be at fault and no hearings were held.

— An ice storm closed the campus and classes were cancelled.

— Over 200 students attended the Homecoming Dance at the Hilton.

— Ralph Pendori and Jennibeth Kennedy were crowned Homecoming King and Queen.

— 61-51: UNCW defeated East Carolina during the Seahawks' homecoming. This game was the second sellout of the season.

King wins presidency

SPRING BREAK — MARCH

— The fifth annual "Business Week" was sponsored by the Cameron School of Business Administration.

— The Friends of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington awarded gifts and grants totaling more than $6,000 to support and enhance a variety of academic programs on campus.

— T.V. Broadcaster Frank Blair, veteran of NBC's "Today Show", received the Albert Schweitzer Award for Artistry for Broadcast Journalism.

— Murray Abraham, Academy Award winner for Best Actor for his performance in the motion picture Amadeus, received the Albert Schweitzer Medal for Artistry in classic film.

— The University Union celebrated its fourth birthday.

— Patrick Toal and Lee King came within seven votes of each other for the presidency of the S.G.A.

— Senator Ray Loftus resigned after the Senate started final impeachment proceedings against him.

Goode drowns at sea

APRIL — UNCW student John Goode, 21, was a victim of a boating accident that claimed his life and the lives of two others.

— William "Bill" Bondurant II, a 21 year old senior Business Management major was killed when a truck drove through an apartment in Leland where he was spending the evening.

— Cadets were honored at the Fifth Annual ROTC Awards Banquet and Military Ball.

— The 41st Senate convenes for the first time.

— ROTC sponsors Military Science Career day.

— Disability Awareness Week was planned.

— "Grove for Peace" festival, which was to feature bands and speakers on subjects from animal rights to world peace, was cancelled until Fall Semester.

UNCW recruiting class grows

The UNC Wilmington men's basketball team signed three more recruits last week, giving Head Coach Robert McPherson and his staff their final pieces for the 1987-88 season.

The three new signees bring the recruiting total to eight players that will join the six returning Seahawk players.

Added to the lineup are six foot-seven inch Tim Brewer, 6-6 Major Wiggins, and 6-3 guard Antonio Howard.

Brewer, a 230-pound post-player, joins the Seahawk program after a stellar career at Westark Community College. The incoming junior led the Lions to a 29-11 record in 1986-87 and a berth in the National Junior College Tournament where he was voted to the All-Tournament team in the regionals.

Brewer, who possesses good jumping ability and quickness for a big man, averaged 11 points and 7 points per contest.

Antonio Howard is a quick guard that should bolster the UNCW backcourt. A 6-3, 175-pound shooter from Emmanuel College in Franklin Springs, Ga., Howard averaged 21.9 points, 3.9 rebounds, and 3.7 assists per game. Originally from Charlotte, Howard connected on 51 percent of his field goal tries and 75 percent from the free throw line.

As an honor student, he was named All-Conference, All-Region, and All-State. He was also awarded several honors by the Atlanta Tipoff Club for basketball prowess. Howard will have two years of eligibility remaining at UNCW.

The last recruit is Major Wiggins, a prep star from Jones High School in Orlando, FL.

The 6-6, 190-pounder averaged only five points and five rebounds for Head Coach Willie Jones, but is considered to have a lot of raw talent. He is a consistent performer and could develop into a solid college prospect.

He shot 63 percent from the floor and added a 75 percent aim from the free throw line.

Wiggins helped lead his high school team to a 25-9 record and runner-up finish in the 3A classification in Florida.

With the signing of these three recruits, in addition to the five signed previously and the six returning players, Head Coach Robert McPherson and his staff have the final pieces of the 1987-88 Seahawk basketball puzzle.

Newcomers Willie Williams, Antonio Howard, sharp-shooter Brannon Lancaster and returning players Adam Porter, Mark Gary, and Kenny Mickens should give McPherson one of the stronger backcourts in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) and will give him plenty of options in getting a leg up on the conference crown.

Forwards Larry Houzer, Major Wiggins, Scott Tierney, and Troy Georgia should blend in nicely with returning front court players Greg Bender, Ricky Griffin, Roy Walker, and Jeff Brannen.

Walker, who could be one of the sleepers next year, along with Griffin, Bender and newcomers Houzer and Brewer should give the Seahawks a quick and powerful front court. This band of leapers has plenty of potential for a Seahawk club trying to build upon last year's second place conference finish.

On paper, the Seahawks may just do that, but as the coaches will tell you, it is easy to speculate. Only time will tell if the recruiting class of 1987 will bring bigger and better fortunes to the Big W.

Here is a list of the 1987-88 UNC Wilmington pre-season men's basketball roster.

Wild Pitch

'Hawks have won 13 of their last 15

UNCW takes two from Fla. Atlantic

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

The UNC Wilmington baseball team continued their torrid pace, downing Florida Atlantic in a weekend series at Brooks Field. The Seahawks have now won 13 out of their last 15 and now have a record of 28-18.

UNCW took control of Saturday night's game early, scoring three runs in the first.

Mitch Wells led off with a single, John Catalano then knocked Wells in with a double, Mark Maultsby singled, and Chuck Jones added an RBI single. Maultsby later scored on a wild pitch, the third Seahawk run of the inning.

In the third, Eric Hickman led off with a walk and scored on Mike Byers triple.

The Seahawks continued to pour it on in the fifth, scoring two runs behind a Jones single, a Hickman single, a passed ball, and a Dwayne Graham two-run single.

UNCW later tacked on a run in the sixth and in the seventh.

Winning pitcher Wesley Currin (7-2) twirled a two-hitter, walking six and striking out eight.

The FAU Owls' only hits were a single to center by Gonzalo Carcoche to open the game and an infield single by Rick Fleming in the eighth.

FAU's only scoring threat came in the fifth when Currin walked the first two batters of the inning.

Currin, a left-hander from Oxford, NC, then promptly picked the first runner off second, with the runner on first advancing to second during the rundown, and then picked the other runner of second on the very next pitch.

Loser Mike Fascetti (3-4), struck out six, walked four and gave up 11 hits.

In Sunday's game, Mike

Freeman (6-5) scattered five hits and struck out four in gaining his second shutout of the season.

Tim Langmeyer provided all the offense that was needed with a three-run home run to right off loser Joe Poede (6-2). The blast was the third of the year for Langmeyer.

UNCW later added a run in the seventh on a Mark Maultsby RBI single.

The losses dropped Division II Florida Atlantic, of Boca Raton, to 33-21-2.

Sunday's game was also the last home appearance for 11 seniors; John Catalano, Chuck Jones, Wesley Currin, Calvin Garrett, Mark Maultsby, Mike Freeman, Dwayne Graham, Mitch Wells, Jay Stott, Kevin Davidson, and Keith Moore.

The Seahawks will play again this weekend at James Madison in their final regular season series.

One win in Harrisonburg will give the Seahawks the first conference championship and the number one seed in the upcoming CAA Tournament at The Diamond in Richmond.

In early action this week the Seahawks used the hot and powerful bat of Eric Hickman to cruise to an 8-2 victory over Campbell University.

Hickman connected for a three run blast in the first inning, his 16th of the season, giving the 'Hawks an early 3-0 lead.

UNCW pushed an additional run across on a Chuck Jones single in the fourth.

In the eighth inning the 'Hawks erupted for four runs, highlighted by Hickman's two run blast, his second of the night and 17th of the season.

Freshman Jerome Hunt pitched the entire game for his first collegiate victory.

UNCW's record after this week's action now stands at 28-18.

Marching to a title

Senior Chuck Jones and the rest of the Seahawks celebrate after defeating East Carolina in a crucial CAA series last weekend. The victory moved UNCW into first place in the conference. The 'Hawks have a chance to win their first conference title in any sport by winning one game out of three against James Madison this weekend. UNCW has won 13 out of the last 15 games.

Seahawks look to wrap up their first conference title

from staff reports

The script couldn't be any better for Coach Bobby Guthrie and his UNC Wilmington baseball team. With three games remaining in the regular season, the Seahawks need just one victory to clinch first place and the ensuing top seed in the upcoming Colonial Athletic Association post-season tournament. It would mean UNCW's first diamond championship since joining the league two years ago.

"We want to win, no question about it," Guthrie said of UNCW's three-game set at James Madison this weekend. The Seahawks stand 28-18 overall and 9-3 in the CAA, giving them at least first or second in the league. JMU is 24-17 in all games and will finish fifth in the conference regardless of the weekend's outcome.

"We've talked as a team and the main thing we want to do is play well at James Madison. We want to go into the tournament playing good baseball and I feel like it's important to go up and have good games in Harrisonburg."

The regular season standings determine the seeding for the post-season tournament, set for May 14-17 at The Diamond in Richmond, Va. The tournament champion then represents the league in the NCAA regionals.

UNCW captured its fourth straight victory Sunday by blanking Florida Atlantic, 4-0. The Seahawks have won 13 of their last 15 games and took series from league rivals Richmond, George Mason, William and Mary and East Carolina.

According to Guthrie, the common denominator in the recent hot streak has been "our ability to adjust with the score. We've been able to run when we're ahead, and come from behind. I think the strong point of this team is its ability to fight back. They have overcome some adversity."

Eleven seniors - and one surprising junior - have helped Guthrie tackle adversity. Seniors Chuck Jones, Mitch Wells and Mark Maultsby, along with third-year man Eric Hickman, have sparked the Seahawks at the plate. Wesley Currin, Kevin Davidson and Mike Freeman are also faring well on the mound in their senior season.

Jones, a first baseman, leads the club in batting (.355), hits (54) and runs batted in (44). Wells has started all 46 games and leads the conference in stolen bases with 23 thefts. Maultsby is batting .301 with a team-high 12 doubles.

Currin tops the pitching staff with a 7-2 record and 2.40 earned run average. Davidson stands 6-2 on the season with five complete games. Freeman has an E.R.A. of 3.90 and two shutouts in 1987.

The Ducks are also enjoying a late-season surge. JMU won all six games it played last week.

"They got off to a slow start, but they're playing good baseball now," said Guthrie of the Harrisonburg, Va., club. "I think they have the most talent of anybody in the league. They had a lot of players coming back and if I had to pick a team to win it, it was definitely them."

For information concerning the post-season tournament, interested persons can contact the Sports Information Office at UNC Wilmington (919) 395-3236.

UNCW begins annual drive

UNCWilmington's Seahawk Club will seek $130,000 in contributions during its annual membership drive, according to Jim Bass, executive director of the organization.

The drive runs from May 1 to May 28. May has proclaimed Seahawk Appreciation Month by Mayor Berry Williams and New Hanover County Board of Commissioners Chairman Nolan O'Neal.

"One of our principal goals," Bass said, "is to involve as many people as possible in Seahawk athletics, through the Seahawk Club, athletic scholarship program and basketball season tickets."

Jordan sets camp at Trask Coliseum

from staff reports

Hometown favorite and current Chicago Bulls star Michael Jordan will stage one of only two nation basketball camps this summer at UNCW Wilmington.

Jordan, the National Basketball Association's scoring champion, grew up in the Port City and attended local schools. He went on to star at UNC Chapel Hill and is enjoying an outstanding career with Chicago.

The camp at UNCW runs from June 14-19 and will feature Jordan, other professional players, and a ratio of one coach for every nine campers.

The camp, co-sponsored by Nike and based at Trask Coliseum, is open to boys entering grades 5-12.

Cost for the camp is $335 for resident campers and $275 for commuters. A $100 deposit is required to insure a reservation in the popular camp.

Each camper will receive a Michael Jordan basketball, a T-shirt, a certificate of participation, and a player profile card outlining strengths and areas of improvement.

Jordan's other camp is scheduled for July 12-17 at Illinois Benedictine College outside Chicago.

For information on the camp, contact the Department of Athletics, UNC Wilmington, Wilmington, N.C., 28403, 919-395-3232.

Goodbye, good luck, and come back some time

Once again, it is the end of the school year, and we are forced to bid farewell to the graduating seniors.

UNCW is celebrating its fortieth anniversary; in this fortieth year we are graduating more students than ever before. In all probability, these 900+ graduates are a more diverse lot than ever before — ranging from those who are graduating "on time" in four years or less to some whose college careers have spanned two decades — politely called "non-traditionals," an oft-forgotten segment of our college population.

We are graduating singles and grandparents with biology, accounting, English, history, political science, and communications degrees. Some will start work before commencement exercises a week from this Saturday and others may hunt for years.

There was a professor at Wake Forest University years ago who bowed deeply to each of his classes at the first class meeting. When the gentleman was asked why he, an oft-honored scholar, was bowing before a class of "mere lowly freshmen," he always replied the same.

"One of you may be a future President of the United States; one of you may find the cure man's most dreaded diseases; one of you may find the answer for world peace. Perhaps none of you will do any of these things; perhaps you will have greater or lesser accomplishments. Whatever the case, I wish to salute you now, because I may have gone to my reward before having the opportunity to congratulate you."

Perhaps we too should offer our congratulations to those of you leaving for bigger and better things. There could conceivably be a cure for cancer or heart disease or AIDS in the future of one of our grads; there could be the first female President (or Vice President), or the first black in either of those offices.

Is it too far fetched to believe in the possibility of another Kissinger or Ghandi in our Political Science Department? A Pulitzer Prize winner in our Creative Writing Program? Stranger things have happened in far less likely places.

To the class of '87: good luck, and come see us some time, y'hear? —JW

There is a higher authority

Like the old quote from the epitaph for Julius Caesar, "The evil that me do lives after them, the good is oft interred with the bones."

The late unlamented Warren Supreme Court may or may not have done some good, but we're living with a lot of the evil done by these left-wing activists who seemed to base their rulings on the theory that the end justified the means.

And that end appeared to be to create a society where there were no state lines, no races and no identifiable religions.

Perhaps the farthest-reaching and most enduring scars left by the Warren Supreme Court's assault on American traditions and mores are in the field of religion.

The section of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting and establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people to peaceably assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

I quoted the entire amendment for a good reason, so that I couldn't be accused of employing a tactic so popular with the liberals, using an incomplete phrase or taking words out of context.

I also intended to show that those first words are the last reference to religion to be found in the amendments. And they were "interpreted" by the Warren Court in 1964 to make prayer in public schools illegal.

That took some pretty good imagination, but these justices were not lacking in that by any means.

But the prayer ruling has been followed by a series of anti-Christian edicts by federal courts.

The late Chub Seawell, a brilliant homespun humorist, but also an expert on the law and a well-known lay speaker for his church, had a favorite word for the Warren justices and like-minded people.

Seawell, often called "The Will Rogers of the South," used to describe them as "intellectual atheists."

Please note that the first amendment says, "Congress shall make no law..." but the laws and policies attacked under the Warren heritage are made by states, towns, and sometimes by non-government groups.

Nativity scenes, a beloved

Christmas tradition, have been outlawed on municipally-owned properties. Religious programs have been banned from public facilities.

Recently, I learned that an inter-denominational, inter-racial ministers' organization had been denied the use of a public auditorium to stage a play, all proceeds to be earmarked for charitable projects, because the sponsoring organization was church-related. How ridiculous can you get?

But a pastor in a small Eastern North Carolina town offered a rebuttal to the "intellectual atheists".

He was scheduled to lead a program in the local public school, and a friend reminded him of the rulings against such things in public buildings, as ruled by the Supreme Court.

"There is an authority higher than the United States Supreme Court," the pastor said, and proceeded with his program.

We will miss Dr. Welch

UNCW lost a great person this past Sunday — Dr. Betty Jo Welch of the Speech and Communications Program.

Dr. Welch was the epitome of grace and academia; a well-learned and well-mannered scholar who represented UNCW well as the chair of the UNC Faculty Association, which is comprised of all the faculty of all the schools in the University of North Carolina system.

Dr. Welch held the ear of two UNC presidents; she had a place of honor on the speaker's platform at UNC-President William Spangler's inauguration. She probably could have taught at any "big school" she liked, and she decided to stay here to help get the communications program — now one of our fastest growing areas — off the ground.

She will be sorely missed by all here, and one can only hope that she will be remembered in a way appropriate to her grace and dedication to the University.

Thank you, and so long

We at the Seahawk would like to take this opportunity to say thanks to all our dedicated readers over this past year. We have occasionally blundered, as everyone does, and you have been both patient and impatient at times.

Without your comments and complaints we would never have been able to serve you — if we don't know what you want, we can't satisfy you.

The smiles and the compliments on Tuesday nights as we drop off the newspapers around campus were also good to see and here. It does each of us a world of good to hear a kind word or to see someone excited about seeing the newspaper after a hard night's work.

And to the editors and typists and photographers and writers and layout tech's and ad people — thanks especially to you for doing such an absolutely outstanding job. To the seniors we are losing — you know there is a special place in our hearts for the long hours you worked when you could have been striving toward that higher average. We couldn't have done it without you. An even more special pat on the back to those who spent Monday nights up in Room 205E until the wee hours of Tuesday morning making sure the paper was just right.

Many thanks to Steve Gnad and Linda Moore, for letting us have the extra hours we needed to get out as finished newspaper.

Many more to Mimi Cunningham and the whole Advancement Office for all their help and tips. Ditto for Joe Johnson and the whole police department, and to the folks at physical plant, for those wonderful state cars (which we have back again!) We love you, Margie.

Thanks to three of our favorite administrators — Drs. William Bryan, and Richard Mullendore, and of course, Chancellor William H. Wagoner himself. On second thought, add Dr. Charles Cahill to that list, also. We can honestly say that they returned every phone call, every memo — no matter how ridiculous it may have been. True, they weren't always the answers we wanted, but this is life.

Thanks to Mark Bremer, Beth Riffe, Dawn Clodfelter, former president Allan Dudley, and the other members of SGA who weren't out after us with red hot pitch forks.

Thanks to the entire departments of Military Science and English, for their help, support, and understanding. A special thank you to each and every instructor who was understanding when a sleepy staff member staggered into class late on Tuesday morning.

To any and all who supported the paper, either through going out on a limb to help or just picking one up to read it, we thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

See you May 26.

Stillpoint

With Bob Haywood—Campus Minister

As the school year comes to a close, I find one of those "life principles" that I value coming to mind. My principle is that, "We should do all that we can to leave as little unfinished business as possible."

It was in my study of Gestalt Therapy that I discovered the notion of Unfinished Business. It seems that we have an innate tendency to want things finished. If events that happened in our past that we find ourselves still thinking about or worrying about or feeling guilty about, then we are experiencing Unfinished Business. The problem is that Unfinished Business remains a part of the present context of our lives and uses up energy that would be available to us if we could bring some kind of closure to those events. There is an apocryphal story about the great composer Bach that tells how one evening after he had gone to bed, a guest was playing his piano downstairs and played through a beautiful piece all the way up to the end, but for some reason stopped before the conclusion. Bach tossed and turned in his bed and finally, got up, marched downstairs to his home to the piano, finished the piece, went back and went to bed. That's Unfinished Business.

This school year is coming to a conclusion for you. Some of you will be graduating and moving on to a whole new dimension of your life. Some of you have significant friendships that may be coming to an end or, at least, facing some change. Others can look back to some very significant experiences during this year that have shaped you and your development. There have been people that have been important to you.

One of the things that you can do for yourself is to give yourself some time before you leave to think about the events and the people that have been a part of

to the various buildings and remember the various things that have gone on in them as a way of bringing them to a close. If there are people in your life that were important, you may want to push yourself to find a way to say "Thank you" or "I appreciate you".

The issue is not insignificant, for it really can be an important life issue to move throughout our life seeking feelings of being finished and working to bring about appropriate kinds of closure to the various dimensions of our life. In my work with Hospice, I have discovered how important it is to help people move to and through the experience of their death or the death of a loved one leaving as little unfinished business as possible. How good it is when people can finish their life and not have feelings like, "Oh, I wish I had done so and so," or "I wish I had told him how much I loved him".

Take some time. Make sure you have a sense of being finished, a sense of completeness about all the various dimensions of your life as you leave this place to move on into whatever your future may hold for you.

Mama's Kitchen

With Claire Covere

LITJ Features

Bugs and other unwelcomed things

A plea came over the phone, "Are you going to come down this weekend?"

What mother could resist that type of question? A second and perhaps the most important question came in another minute, (like the second shoe falling), "Can you bring me some bread?"

After consulting schedules, (a freelance writer never knows when an "assignment" is coming up), checkbooks, gas gauge and tires, parents quickly agreed to the trip.

Mama also proceeded to check the freezer, that's right, the freezer. She knew without looking that there was no homemade bread in there but the makings should be. If not, it would be off to the store.

Everything was there except the bread flour but Herman had to be thawed before he could be fed.

As Herman was thawing, I thought about my father's family who had traveled across the United States by covered wagon to Nebraska about 125 years ago or more.

That Grandmother several times back had no freezer to go to check for flour, just a big barrel. We purchased flour in a five, ten or in some rare cases, a 25-pound bag. But these barrels held hundreds of pounds of flour. On the way to Nebraska there were no grocery supermarkets at the next shopping center. In fact, the next "shopping center" was more like a tiny frontier town where goods were packed in just like those being carried in the wagon train.

Years ago, much like some of you now, college students, those of us who traded military life to the life of a college student lived from pay day to pay day. Meaning a pay check once a month.

We purchased one big grocery order a month and "filled in" the rest of the time. That meant figuring a menu for at least 30 days. There were big sacks of dry beans, big sacks of flour and such.

One day shortly after payday, I opened my newest bag of flour and there were wiggling around, some bugs.

All of a sudden, I was not in a small western college town, I was back crossing the Kansas plains with my grandparents.

In almost terror I called a neighbor and asked what those little bugs were. She looked and without much to do she said, "weevils."

To me a weevil was something that ate cotton and the government was trying to get rid of with poison.

My education came from all sorts of directions, not just the classroom, patiently she instructed me to do one of two things.

Either bundle the flour up and take it back to the store (which I did) for a refund or sift the little demons out. I shuddered at this thought.

It seems that summer time and weevils in grain products such as flour and oatmeal and in dried beans go hand in hand.

We had a standard joke which went something like this, "Did you have meat with your biscuits this morning?" Meaning of course had the weevils struck your house and pantry yet.

Before you curl and feel like dying at the thought of eating a weevil, my children are all grown adults, several with children of their own and really have felt no effect of having possibly eaten a weevil.

Perhaps they are an untapped source of protein. But anyway, the only sure way to keep weevils out of your flour is to keep it in the freezer. It does not freeze to a solid mass and takes no thawing time, only a little warmup time before you toss in the yeast. Since I have been keeping the several flours for bread making in the freezer I have not seen the first weevil. At least not in the sacks of flour.

But back to Herman. If you keep Herman in the refrigerator you have to feed him every three to five days. With everyone gone from home now except for parents, who want that bread.

Herman really is the start of sour dough bread and got that name several years ago when there were several types of bread starter around. Mine was not "Herman" to begin with but one of those gangling teens that roosted on my door step called it that and it stuck.

He used to knock, come in and yell, "Have you made any Herman lately?"

I almost always had him a loaf in the freezer. I don't always make Herman though. I have a friend who loves brown bread (better for you, he says) so once in a while I will make him one.

You need several types of grain flour: speltin, wheat and rye plus oat meal. This one is called Hearty Oats 'N' Wheat loaves and came from Pillsbury. You will need:

2 to 2 1/2 cups bread flour, 2 cups whole wheat flour, 1 cup rye flour and 1 cup rolled oats.

Now:
Combine 1 1/2 cups of bread flour, oats, 2 teas of salt and 3 packages of active dry yeast in a big bowl. Blend well.

In a medium pan, heat 1 3/4 cups water, 1/2 cup corn syrup and 1/2 cup oleo until very warm, (120-130 degrees).

Separate one of two eggs and add the one egg yolk and one whole egg plus the warm wets with your flour mixture. If you are lucky and have a heavy mixer this will work fine, if not man power works too.

At any rate, blend at low speed until moistened and then at medium speed for three minutes. By hand, stir in the two brown flours to make a soft dough.

On a cloth towel, place the reserved 1 cup bread flour and turn out dough on this to mix and knead until smooth and elastic, about 10 minutes.

Have a second big bowl ready, well-greased. Place dough in this and cover with plastic wrap, loosely; it has to breathe. Toss a clean bath towel over it to help keep "the warm" in. Let it rest and rise in a warm place until light and doubled in size. About an hour.

During this hour generously grease two loaf pans (5 X 9 in).

Punch your dough down, divide into two parts, shape into balls and let it rest for 15 minutes, covered with an inverted bowl. Now shape into your loaves and place in pans. Cover and let rise again until doubled, another hour.

Combine your reserved egg white and 1 ts. of water, brush over the tops of your loaves and then sprinkle with 4 teas. of sesame seed.

Bake in 375 degrees oven, 30 to 40 minutes, the loaves will sound hollow when lightly tapped. Remove immediately from pans and if you can stand it let them cool, if not reach for the butter plate.

Dancer/Choreographer Shizumi Manale to visit area

Dancer/Choreographer Shizumi Manale, the second artist sponsored by the Affiliated Artist program, will arrive in the Port City next week to spend a twelve-day residency here. The dancer's presentations have been described by the Sacramento Bee as "Dramatic and delightful to watch...a molding of ancient Japanese mime, Kabuki drama, classical and contemporary dance and the intuitive observation of a thoroughly modern young woman."

The residency in the Cape Fear area is being co-sponsored by Affiliated Artists, Inc., the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, and the General Electric Foundation.

By blending elements of traditional Japanese dance and theatre with Western Classical and interpretive modern dance, Ms. Manale creates performances that are excitingly original, powerful, and unique. Through the medium of dance, she shares the experiences of being an artist, a woman, and Japanese. In her choreography, she seeks to evoke the painting of a traditional oriental brush painter; the simplicity of movement belies the artist's depth of experience and enhances the emotive power.

The dancer chooses universal themes that transcend ethnic and cultural barriers. Japanese, Chinese, Korean, and European fairy tales often serve as her inspiration. Others are drawn from traditional Japanese theatre, such as Kyogen farces and Noh plays. By using modern dance in new settings, she invigorates old themes; through the use of traditional techniques, she presents modern themes in a new light.

Growing up in Japan, Manale was exposed to diverse artistic influences. At the age of three, she began formal study of classical ballet and Japanese and oriental dance, receiving special training from her aunt, a pioneer in Japanese modern dance. Her mother, a teacher of folk songs, koto, samisen, and piano, instructed her in Japanese folk dance.

During her developmental years, many of Manale's aesthetic influences derived from non-dance sources: an award-winning potter; a master calligrapher and a classical Japanese musician; a Noh theatre artist; Zen priests; and Mamako Yoneyama, the famed Japanese mime. She also studied classical Japanese theatre under the tutelage of Shigeyama Sengoro, the great Kyogen master. Further studies of ballet, modern, and jazz dance followed at the Conservatory of Ballet in San Francisco and in Los Angeles.

The dancer will be in the Cape Fear area for 12 days.

Shizumi Manale

Since her solo debut in 1967 at the Kyoto Jazz Festival, Manale has appeared in numerous performances both on stage and on national and regional television throughout Japan, India, Nepal, and the United States. She was selected for the distinguished roster of Affiliated Artists, Inc. in 1984, and is also currently Artist-in-Residence with the San Juan Unified School District through a grant from the California Arts Council.

The critically acclaimed dancer will offer seven "informances" during her stay in the Cape Fear area, including a free masters class and a public performance at Thalian Hall.

The "informances" consist of performances sprinkled with dialogue between the audience and the performer. She is scheduled to appear at numerous schools and community organizations, including the initial Welcoming Party planned for Monday, May 11 at the offices of the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear. The Welcoming Party is set to start at 7pm at 20 Market Street, and is open to the public.

The free master class will emphasize hand positions and facial expressions, and is scheduled for 7 pm on May 18th at the Community Arts Center. Persons interested in attending the master class should call the Arts Council at 763-ARTS.

Manale's public appearance at Thalian Hall has been incorporated into the Arts Council's annual meeting, which is scheduled to take place at 8 pm on May 22nd. The public performance is free to Arts Council members and $3 admission will be charged for the general public.

Delightful jazz at both concerts!

Ramsey Lewis concert was a real treat

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

Superb jazz artistry was the name of the game when pianist Ramsey Lewis, his backup players, and the Eve Cornelius/Chip Crawford duo appeared in concert last Friday night. Between the players' musical expertise and Ms. Cornelius' mesmerizing vocal abilities, both acts supplied the notes needed to weave magical musical spells for the many music fans who were gathered to hear them at the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts.

The "exciting evening of jazz" that the promoters had promised was certainly no disappointment, although there were a few obstacles along the way. The Ramsey Lewis Trio missed the concert scheduled for 7:30pm that evening, and the second show, slated to begin at 9:30 pm, was postponed for a half hour.

Eve Cornelius and Chip Crawford filled in like champions for the first show audience, and many of the concertgoers remained for the final performance.

The highly talented musicians were warmed up, ready to play, and willing to show their stuff by the time the second show rolled around. Their performance was impressive and memorable.

Eve Cornelius knows how to use her elegant, sensual stage presence and beautifully controlled, four-octave voice to totally mesmerize the audience. Chip Crawford knows how to maximize the effects of her vocal abilities by showcasing her with beautiful piano and synthesizer accompaniments.

The two regional musicians trade solos with ease and grace while they make the best out of each and every song. They complement each other nicely, gracefully weaving their colorful spectrum of talents into a tapestry of musical delight.

The duo opened the show with striking renditions of "This Will Be My Shining Hour" and "Til I'm With You Again." The soft rainfall synthesizer-enhanced piano and percussion effects that the keyboard player included in the song contrasted nicely with the vocalist's singing ability. She shifts back and forth between octaves with almost astounding ease.

Lauded by the Carolina Times as being "one of Durham's top natural resources," Ms. Cornelius definitely lives up to her reputation for being "reminiscent of Billie Holiday, with the voice clarity of Sarah Vaughn, and the ability to scat like the great Ella Fitzgerald."

Her vocal abilities are breathtaking, which she proved beyond doubt when she sang "Windows," a three-movement song that the duo penned. The

Last week's jazz concert, sponsored by Cape Fear Technical Institute, featured the talents of saxophonist Robert Williams, who is CFTI's current Visiting Artist. The sax man, accompanied by local players Duke Ladd (piano and synthesizer), Danny Pera (bass), and Greg Eavey (drums), performed an array of dreamy, mood-setting numbers that captured and maintained the interest of every music lover there.

It was definitely an evening of high quality entertainment. The musicians opened the concert with Don Sebesky's unforgettable composition, "Olvidar." The song, whose title means "to forget," was performed beautifully and tastefully. The players captured the intense, dreamy mood of the number, combining the intricate sax and piano parts nicely with the subtle bass and drums.

After another mellow mood number, Paul Desmond's "Wendy," Williams and the others picked up the tempo with an entertaining rendition of Stanley Turrentine's "Sugar." Eavey kept the steady beat for the funky number, Ladd was cooking on his keyboards, the sax was hot as always, and Pera changed his facial expressions from solemn concentration to the excited look he always gets when the song has funky, thumping bass.

When "Just The Two of Us" rolled around, the band was obviously ready to strut their stuff. All of the players looked really INTO what they were doing, and it came across by the way they played. Pera was tearing it up on his bass, Ladd was going to town on his synthesizer, and Eavey was ready to tackle anything with those drums. Williams was blowing his sax to maximum capacity, and only the dead could have resisted getting into it.

Beautiful and moving saxophone and piano solos came next, when the band played Paul Desmond's dreamy song, "Blue Dove." Williams and Ladd really outdid themselves on the sensitive solos.

The wildly intriguing synthesizer intro of the next number, "The Dream," even sounded like a harpsichord at times. The renditions of "Mercy, Mercy, Mercy" and "Black Orpheus" were pleasing to the ear, as was "What Are You Doing For the Rest of Your Life?"

The latter song showcased Williams' beautiful tonal quality, which he demonstrated ably with perfect, moody leads. It also proved that no matter how many hundreds of times one hears Ladd on piano, he continues to improve every time.

The whole band was cookin' for "Bernie's Tune," and they played the up-tempo swing number with memorable style. By the time they had finished, I was hanging off my seat, because I knew that they had saved the best for last—at least in my opinion.

I'm really a sucker for this particular group's rendition of Herbie Hancock's "Watermelon Man." Pera does an excellent job with the bass on that song, and he kicks it off right with the hot intro. Ladd's crying, teasing, funky synthesizer cooks throughout the song, Eavey really goes to town on the drums, and Williams epitomizes funky sax when he breezes his way through it.

It was, without a doubt, a very enjoyable evening of jazz.

Poplar Grove fashion show slated for Saturday

A fashion show will be held on the front lawn of the Manor House at Poplar Grove Historic Plantation on May 9 beginning at 11:30 a.m. Television and radio personalities, as well as beauty queens, will be part of the entourage of models and will model fashions from the year 1850 to the present. Cappuccio of the Wilmington Market Place will provide the present-day fashions, including a line by Maick Harold who designs fashions for recording artist Stevie Nicks.

A showing of the latest in exercise garb will also be provided by Fitness Fever. To make the fashions complete, each model's hair will be styled in accordance with her era by stylist from Water Street Hair Design.

Tickets are $5.00 in advance and will include a light lunch with all proceeds going to the Cultural Arts Center of Poplar Grove. Tickets are available at Cappuccio, Fitness Fever, Water Street Hair Design and Poplar Grove's Country Store. For more information, call Peggy Avison at 799-7466 or Ann Marley at 686-4868 or 763-2455.

'The King and I' opens May 13

The UNCW Seahawk May 6, 1987 Page 11

The final offering of the Thalian Association community theatre season, the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical "THE KING AND I" will open May 13 at Thalian Hall and play through May 18 at 8 each evening with a matinee performance Sunday, May 17 at 2. Tickets may be reserved by calling the box office at 763-3398 or 763-9328 daily.

Featuring a cast of 43 volunteer performers led by Beverly Skinner of Rocky Point and Vince McCoy of Wilmington, director John Rushion and music director Lawrence Mitchell have worked with a cast ranging in age from 4 years old up! The action of the play takes place in and around the palace of the King of Siam in 1862 and involves an English governess hired as tutor to a royal prince.

Featured players include Amy Brannock as Lady Thiang, K. Scott Leider as the Kralahome, McCall Thompson as Lun Tha, Kim Weeks as Tuptim, Will King as Louis Leonowens, Amy Plaskett as Princess Ying Yaowalak, Matt Titterton as Prince Chulalongkorn, Michael Titterton as Sir Edward Ramsey, Bob Daun as the Interpreter, and Bill Reilly as Captain Orton.

Royal wives of the king include Janice Clark, Posie Ewart, Andrea Henderson, Susan Magnabosco, Judy Miller, Angela Phillips, Pat Plaskett, Cathy Poulos, Khrys Steele, and Marla Trobaugh.

The royal children are Joseph Biggerstaff, Laura

Clark, Tommy Male, Michael McNeill, Evan Scott, Benjamin Clark, Carol Magnabosco, Karen Rochelle, Helen Veit, Courtney Wright, Becky Wyatt, and Christa Yopp.

Dancers for the production include Ross Caperton in the role of Simon Legree and Krisit Sanders as Poor Eliza and a company featuring Beth Bache, Jennifer Hoye, Shelly Joye, Kimberly Kirby, Allison Ward, and Marshall Perry. The ballet choreography has been directed by Leslie Shamblin.

Gary Ralph Smith is the designer of the production with Ron Smith as Technical Director. Bev Cobb is stage manager, Marsha Watson is costume, Tim Woods is the lighting designer, and Sandra Tracy and Jan Piner are in charge of properties.

Disney World holds auditions

LAKE BUENA VISTA, FLA. — Walt Disney World talent scouts are holding auditions in early May for vocalists to perform in a new professional group that will sing a year-long salute to the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

Twenty-four male and female singers will be featured in the Spirit of American Singers who will perform from mid-August 1987 through September 1988.

Those auditioning must memorize at least two vocal selections, ballads and uptempo, bring sheet music in their best key, be able to sight read, be 18 years old by Sept. 1, 1987, and bring a current resume and photograph. Accompanist will be provided.

Auditions will be held in Birmingham, Ala., May 5, Harrisonburg, Va., May 7, Cincinnati May 9, Indianapolis May 10 and Orlando May 16. Call times for females is 9 a.m., for males, 12 noon.

For more information, call (305) 828-1576 Mon. - Fri., 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. EDT.

The Entertainment Editor humbly apologizes for last week's picture mix-up in her section. Bass player Jeff Collier was mistakenly identified as guitarist Kevin Winegar. Thirty lashes with a broken guitar string! P.S. I still think that I was set up by my photographer!

The next meeting of the Cape Fear Musician's Association will be held on Monday, May 11 at 7:30 pm at Roy's in the Riverboat Landing Restaurant downtown. A jam session will follow.

number will be released soon on their upcoming album, "Faces of Eve."

"Windows of the World," "Raindrops," and "Mirrors," the three individual movements in the beautiful, moody song, all combine to comprise a very dramatic and climactic work of art.

There is a very subtle shift from each movement to the next, and the duo ably enraptures the audience with the smooth, graceful flow of music. There is even a hint of Janis Joplin in "Raindrops," and the intriguing synthesizer intro of "Mirrors" added memorable impact to an already intoxicating song.

Winding up their opening performance with a warm rendition of "My Romance," the duo then turned over the microphone to the flight-delayed Ramsey Lewis Trio. Lewis and his players appear on stage in their street clothes, since they arrived from the airport just minutes before the second concert. The curtain rose before a receptive and nicely warmed up audience, and with a grin, the famed pianist faced them and said, "Well, it's a long story that we won't tell you."

Kicking off their performance with a captivating rendition of "Strangers," a Larry Dunn composition that combines hot drums and percussion, tasteful bass, and piano playing that ranged from soft and intricate to flying fingers, the Ramsey Lewis Trio won the audience from the start.

Bass player Bill Dickens and drummer Frank Donaldson, who tour regularly with the famed pianist, know exactly the right formula needed to build up musical tension to the point of a delightful piano resolution. He had hinted that they compliment him nicely, and that was no exaggeration.

In a telephone interview prior to the concert performance, Lewis promised to provide the audience with a mixture of new and classic songs, many of which have titles that now absolutely escape me. There were many familiar melodies, including "Quiet Storm" and "Misty."

Lewis also said that he would combine solo piano with songs that spotlighted his backup players, and much to the audience's delight, he kept his word.

The real show-stopper was their rendition of "Autumn Leaves." Lewis introduced the song as "a different arrangement that features someone who's not only a good accompanist, but also a good soloist in his own right."

The pianist provided a very apt description of bass player Bill Dickens, whose use of a six-string bass highlighted not only his Stanley Jordan-like abilities on his axe but also demonstrated the interesting tonal boundaries of the extra-stringed instrument.

Though comparing a bass player to the world-renowned guitarist sounds a bit out of the ordinary, his ability to create duo musical expressions with such speed and grace makes it hard to ignore the striking resemblance.

The point is that the outstanding bass player is able to sound like he is playing the guitar and the bass at the same time. Dickens let out with some very hot solo licks, Donaldson provided drum accompaniment that was almost teasing, and the man who is smart enough to showcase his backup players in such a manner came out from behind with very tasteful, easy flowing piano.

Lewis combines the best aspects of the jazz, gospel, classical, and soul musical idioms to create musical entertainment well worth hearing. He and his players obviously enjoy themselves on the stage, and the slightest little indication of extra audience enthusiasm was quickly rewarded by big smiles and hotter licks from the trio.

All three members of the Ramsey Lewis Trio play with ever-so-much subtle skill when they're musically in the background, but come out front storming with the force of a hurricane when it is time for their individual solos.

Lewis is a masterful pianist, and his keyboard expertise, when coupled with entertaining facial expressions, serves to captivate even the most disinterested listener. He is a definite showman.

And last, but definitely not least, there's the drummer.

Donaldson is without a doubt the most entertaining drummer that I have ever seen, and he makes something as simple as waiting for the next drum beat into an entertaining, almost comedic experience for the audience. He teases the listener with steadily building tension—just enough to keep one hanging—then uses silence to its most effective maximum before breaking bad on the drums once again.

All in all, the excellent performances by each of the five musicians who took their turns on the stage at Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts made for a very enjoyable evening of musical entertainment. The show was well worth the price of a ticket and then some. Whoever decided to bring in the evening's players deserves a round of applause.

"Concept Help" holds reception

"Concept Health," a service of the Department of Health Promotion and Wellness of Cape Fear Memorial Hospital, will sponsor a "meet the cast" reception for children who attend the Sunday, May 17 matinee production of the Thalian Association musical, "The King and I."

The reception will be held at the Cotton Exchange and will feature refreshments. The event will allow audience members to talk to the cast and get a closer look at characters and costumes.

This is the second such reception sponsored by the hospital department, the first was staged for the matinee audience and cast of the Thalian Association production of the December musical, "Cinderella."

Chancellor William H. Wagoner expressed sorrow at the loss of "a good friend and a great teacher."

"This year has been one of the most successful but heartwrenching I have known," he said. "Our (UNCW's) fortieth anniversary, with the loss of five students and two loyal faculty members, has been one of much exultation and an awful lot weeping."

In a statement released by the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Dr. Welch was remembered as an excellent teacher who placed herself at the complete disposal of the students' whose love for the University "was shown through her generous dedication to the promotion of the faculty."

Dr. Welch is survived by her mother, Mrs. Ruth Kemp Patterson of Old Hickory, Tennessee; her husband, Allan, two daughters and a son.

Funeral arrangements were incomplete at press time, but faculty members expected the services to take place in Tennessee.

The Wait is over: Health Center now taking appointments

By Ruthie Matthews
Staff Reporter

Students must now begin making appointments if they need to go to the Health and Wellness Center here at UNC-Wilmington. Before, it was first come first serve.

This change came about due to grievousness from students. "There was a lot of complaints from the students of a long waiting period... the students felt it was excessively long... sometimes one to two hours," said Katie Gilbert, Family Nurse Practitioner of the S.H.W.C.

This past Fall and Spring semesters the Student Health and Wellness Center saw approximately 55 students a day and in the Summer of '86 approximately 20 students were seen per day said Gilbert.

This new arrangement will be tested during both summer sessions and if all goes well it will be implemented permanently in the Fall Semester.

The hours will be the same: 8:00-12:00 and 1:00-5:00. Students must call the front desk to make an appointment, 395-3280.

Of the three staff members available to see students; Allen Riggs, P.A., Catherine Vangellow, P.A., and Katie Gilbert, N.P., one will be designated each day to be on call to work in students that weren't able to make appointments.

Vangellow, P.A. and director of the S.H.W.C., along with Vice-Chancellor Bryan of Student Affairs made the decision to follow the students suggestion.

Editor-in-Chief

"Who in 1947 could have foreseen that the germ planted in that fateful year would have matured so quickly into a major university?" Chancellor William H. Wagoner asked a packed Trask Coliseum May 16 as he delivered his address to the 960 graduates of the University of North Carolina Wilmington.

There are members in this audience today, "said Wagoner, "...Trustees, former trustees, and friends who remember and dreamed those dreams."

Wagoner spoke on the topic of "What is a University?" and said that "She (the university) should remain the castle on the hill, the fortress (for) the free exchange of ideas."

Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Dr. Charles Cahill delivered a prepared message from Dr. Raymond Dawson, Vice-President for academic affairs for the University of North Carolina. Dawson was unable to attend the ceremonies due to illness.

University installs safer doors in Union

By Jenni Brown
Staff Writer

The University Union has taken into account the numerous times you've been slammed in the face with an exterior door when entering a building simultaneously while someone is exiting through the same door, so they added panes of glass to the doors so you can see if someone's coming on the other side.

Linda Moore, University Union Administrator, said "We had a problem with people coming in and out of the buildings safely without getting bumped in the head."

Last fall, wheelchair-bound student Michael Gruber, was asked by the chancellor to make a review of all the buildings on campus in regards to their accessibility for handicaps.

"I'd have to credit Michael for bringing it up," said Moore.

Moore also added that doors with the design suggested by the handicapped access code were expensive, so Jimmy Mathis, the Maintenance Operations Supervisor of the University, made

$4500 in scholarships awarded to UNCW minority students

(UNCW News Bureau)

Twenty-five scholarships with a potential value of approximately $4,500 each have been awarded to minority students from 17 North Carolina cities and towns. Of the thirty-three scholarships offered this year, twenty-five have been accepted. The students will enter UNCW as freshmen in the fall of 1987.

The scholarships will finance academic tuition and fees and are renewable through the senior year based on academic performance. This is the third year that the academic scholarships have been awarded to minority students in a program known as the Minority Achievement Award Scholarships.

"Of the three minority winning classes to enter UNCW, this group is the strongest academically," according to Diane Zeeman, director of admissions at UNCW. "Now in its third year, I feel the program is becoming stronger by word of mouth from students already enrolled in the scholarship program."

This year the group is made up of 8 males and 17 females.

The Minority Achievement Award Scholarships are an extension of the Minority Presence Grant Program, a program of the UNCW system designed to attract freshmen minority students. UNCW has expanded the program in an effort to provide additional financial assistance as well as an incentive to remain in school.

Olympic Torch will make visit to UNCW

This July, our state is going to host the biggest, most exciting sports event we will probably ever see - U.S. Olympic Festival - '87. As you may know, U.S. Olympic Festivals are held each non-Olympic year. This year's festival is, of course, the year before the Olympics and the very best athletes are expected to compete.

McDonald's is the Grand Patron of the festival as well as Torch Run sponsor. Everyone is invited to attend, to help get the Olympic Festival Flame from Wilmington to Raleigh. You can carry the Olympic Festival Flame and receive a free Torch run T-shirt.

Exact length of torch run segments as well as placement in the route will be determined by the torch run organizing committee. As the number of miles through Wilmington is limited, preferred positioning will be based on the date the entry is received. Entry forms may be obtained at any local McDonald's. If you have any questions, please call 799-7548.

Police confiscate 75 bicycles

By Mark Boggis,
Staff Writer

UNCW police have had their hands full since final exams with dozens of abandoned bicycles. Crime Prevention officer Regina Lawson reported that students left behind 70-75 bikes.

At this writing they remain impounded awaiting returning students.

University police are attempting to locate owners of registered bikes by sending out "ransom" letters. Lost bikes will be held for 6 months before they are turned over to the New Hanover County Police Department for public auction.

In other police briefs citations were issued as follows. A non-student driver was arrested May 9, 1987 at 12:30 a.m. for Driving While Impaired on B Street.

On May 11, two non-students were arrested around 9:40 p.m. in the process of taking bicycles beside Belk Dormitory.

Another non-student was arrested May 22 on Breaking and Entering and Larceny charges for stealing a girl's bike at Dorm 85.

As of July 1986 the Center of Disease Control had confirmed 22,173 AIDS cases in the U.S. The Department of Health and Human Services predicts that, "By the end of 1991, 270,000 Americans will have received a diagnosis of AIDS, and 179,000

UNCW Accountancy and Special Programs office sponsor Shell Island Business conference

WILMINGTON — A week-long Summer Institute of professional development programs, offering non-academic credit for certified public accountants and other professionals, is scheduled for June 15-20 at Shell Island Resort Hotel, Wrightsville Beach. Now in its second year, the Institute is sponsored by UNC Wilmington's department of accountancy and Office of Special Programs.

"This is a series of high quality programs that were selected after we surveyed the professional community for their needs," Dr. James C. Edmundson, director of Special Programs explained. "Each one addresses a specific need often found in the every day work environment."

The courses include:

*Time Management for Professionals — using time productively; 8:00 a.m.-Noon, June 15, Dr. Stephen C. Harper, professor of management and marketing, UNCW.

*Auditing the Small Not-For-Profit Entity — auditing charities, United Way agencies, or other entities where revenues are under $200,000; 8:00 a.m.-Noon, June 16; Charles Earney, assistant professor of accountancy, UNCW.

*Effective Communication — discussing basic and advanced methods of communicating; 8:00 a.m.-5:30 p.m., June 17; Dr. James E. Vann, former executive director of Science and Technology Research Center, Research Triangle Park.

*Investment Strategies in Financial Planning(Basic) — basic investment strategies to form a base for an individual's financial plan; 8:00 a.m.-Noon, June 18; Dr. Ronald E. Copley, associate professor of finance, UNCW *Investment Strategies in Financial Planning(Intermediate) — developing investment strategies and portfolio management; 8:00 a.m.-Noon, June 19; Dr. Copley.

the new doors with the added panes of glass on campus.

"Right now the doors are just on the outside of the Union and the Bookstore, but I haven't gotten the bill yet so I'm not sure how much the total cost is," Moore said.

After a few weeks of summer school Moore will check the cost of prefabricated doors and depending on the feedback of present students, faculty, and staff, he hopes to have all external doors on campus redone by the fall.

DeVries attends meetings

(UNCW News) Dr. Walter DeVries attended the Lord Harlech Memorial Conference on Ideals and Values in Politics and Public Service held May 8 through 10 at Harvard University.

The conference also marked the 20th anniversary of the Institute of Politics in the John F. Kennedy School of Government. Dr. DeVries was a Fellow of the Institute during 1968-69. All former Fellows of the IOP were invited to the conference.

Dr. DeVries participated in a panel discussion on "Covering Politics: Responsibilities of Observation and Influence." Guests and former Fellows who participated in the conference included Senator Edward M. Kennedy, former Governor Richard Thornburgh of Pennsylvania; former Congressman Robert F. Drinan; David Broder of the WASHINGTON POST; E.J. Dionne of the NEW YORK TIMES and Marvin Kalb of NBC News.

DeVries is a part-time lecturer in the speech communication program of the UNCW department of creative arts.

honorary doctorate of letters during the commencement exercises. Miss Gibson was the first black tennis player to win at Wimbledon in 1957. In September of that same year she won the U.S. national women's grass court title at Forest Hills.

This was the first year that UNCW conferred the degree of Bachelor of Science in Nursing. Eight students were granted the degrees in the program which began at UNCW in 1985.

Because of the sheer numbers of graduating students, individual diplomas were handed out in separate departmental ceremonies. Only the actual conferral of degrees took place in the main exercise.

Students in each field of study were asked to rise, and they were then presented to the chancellor by the dean of each school. Champagne and sparkling cider corks flew with each conferral, and one group of students produced a beach ball that was tossed through the crowd.

Three cheers for Southern Iron and Metal Company

Three cheers for the Southern Iron and Metal Company, located at the corner of Front and Wright Streets, Wilmington for their decision to begin accepting recyclable glass.

As far as we know, Southern is the first such company in this community to begin accepting glass. While several places offer to buy aluminum cans (and in some cases, steel), and everyone is familiar with deposit credits for returnable soft drink bottles, no one was willing to go to the extra trouble of redeeming glass until now.

Glass, unlike many other types of garbage, does not deteriorate easily. Paper dissolves, metal eventually corrodes, but glass is forever and ever amen unless ground to a dust or melted.

Since it is so durable, it makes sense to recycle glass rather than to merely cover it up and forget the stuff is there.

Less glass in the garbage means less trash in the landfills that cannot be broken down into the earth.

According to producers of glass containers, it takes less energy to melt down used glass than to create new glass from raw materials — and while there is no real crisis regarding sand, limestone, and soda ash, every little bit of conservation helps in today's world.

Other cities — such as Chicago — use city sanitation trucks to gather discarded glass. Monies gained from the recycling then goes into the support of community service groups such as baseball teams, etc. thus saving such organizations from relying on the mercy of tax dollars.

Last December we met a Canadian father and his son who were bicycling from New York to St. Petersburg, Fla.

They remarked as to the large numbers of beer and soft drink bottles they saw along the roads in North Carolina.

Seems in Canada they have a deposit law recycling is not merely accepted as a good idea to our neighbors in the North, but throwing an empty out the car window carries a financial penalty — and unlike our state's own $200 fine for littering, Canada's is enforced.

Sounds like a doggone good way to ease the litter problem, save natural resources, and help uncover the natural beauty our state really does have — under a layer of trash.

Now, if someone could find a way to recycle toxic wastes.....

Memorial Day is more than the beach

Why doesn't this University observe Memorial Day?

According to the administration, the day of vacation normally reserved for Memorial Day is one of four days of vacation the University has over Christmas Break.

It gets treated as merely a space on the calendar. Memorial Day is not just an extra day to go to the beach, or to cook out with the family.

Memorial Day is dedicated to the memory of those who died for our country. Government offices shut down, stores close, and even the regular workers at most military bases have the day off.

Without the sacrifices that these men and women made, we might not be able to have a university.

Attempts to call several other universities Monday were futile. Those schools had shut down for the day.

Before anyone gets the wrong idea, we at the Seahawk would have had to work anyway. Monday is the day we go to press — nobody on the Seahawk staff gets a Monday off if school is open on Tuesday.

Should Memorial Day be just another day of vacation? Of course not. It is meant to be a day dedicated to those who fought to protect our way of life.

However, the powers-that-be seem to consider it

To the Mercedes driver ... Someone cared, even if you didn't.....

The brake lights of the Mercedes flashed in the late afternoon sunlight. The two-lane highway carried a typical Memorial Day weekend load of traffic, so the Mercedes' driver was well cursed by the string of vacationers intent on a few hours in the sun and surf.

The silver car sat idling beside the road until the string of cars had passed by, and then the door on the driver's side opened.

A dark haired man in his mid-thirties got out, and coaxed a German shepherd out into the lush grass strewn with beer cans, paper, and styrofoam containers. The shepherd was a bit nervous about the highway but she still followed her master, wagging her tail as he tossed a sandwich into the field beside the road. The dog raced after the morsel, and had wolfed half of the unexpected treat down before she realized the Mercedes was speeding away.

The dog panicked and ran after the car for a hundred or so yards, barking as loud as she could, imploring her trusted master not to leave her. The big silver auto moved off, speeding up and heading on towards Wilmington.

The episode had lasted less than a minute, just long enough for the drivers of a station wagon, an older sedan and a green pickup truck to watch all that happened.

The dog saw the cars, and in her hysterical state ran out in the road, perhaps thinking her owner was returning, perhaps in some animal way hoping that someone would help her.

The station wagon, driven by a greying man in his late thirties, staunch middle class with the wife and the kids on the monthly trip to the beach, managed to avoid the dog. The black Galaxie, about a 1973 model, didn't.

The front driver's side fender hit the dog first, and the pickup driver heard the dog cry out as she rolled under first one set of wheels, then the second set.

She then hit the bottom of the rear bumper, was dragged a few feet, and then rolled to the side of the road.

The Galaxie slowed just slightly, then sped up, passing the station wagon, and was gone around a curve.

The truck stopped, and the driver got out.

Pickups, Politics and Hound Dogs

With Jefferson Weaver

The dog was still breathing. All four legs were crushed; her rib cage was visibly pushed in on one side, and blood was flowing from both her nose and mouth. She was whining in that quiet way that hurt dogs do, when they seem to sound almost apologetic for getting hurt.

The driver spoke reassuringly to the dog, who managed to thump her tail twice, very slowly. He knelt down, offered the back of his hand, and then caressed the animal's head.

The station wagon pulled in behind him. There was a child crying in the steamy afternoon heat.

The driver wandered up, looking embarrassed, as if he felt he should do something but didn't know what. He had a slight belly, and was dressed in a bright blue tank top and dark shorts. He wore flip-flops, and they made that irritating sound that gives them their name as he walked up. He wore glasses, and there was sweat on his bald spot.

"My wife and I felt we should stop," he began. "I didn't know what we could do, but we couldn't just go on and leave the animal to suffer. Poor thing." The truck driver did not look up from the dying animal.

A pilot fired and a man died.

He wasn't a particularly handsome or outstanding man, but he was friendly, polite and easy to talk to, at least for the short period of time we spent with him. He didn't talk very much unless you spoke to him first, and he was always ready to steer a lost visitor in the right direction.

When one of those visitors slipped on a wet spot left by a cleaning crew, he was on hand immediately help her up, and the sailor who left the wet spot probably will never make that mistake again after the chewing out he received.

His name was Vernon Foster. He was Chief Petty Officer in the United States Navy, and he was a navigator on the USS Stark. He was killed last week when an Exocet missile from an Iraqi fighter plane attacked the ship "by mistake".

This isn't necessarily our shot at discussing the rights and wrongs of the Persian Gulf, but yes, we feel the USA has the responsibility to protect what few friends we have there. This is more of a time to remember someone who was just a person like you or me who happened to be in the "right place" at the wrong time.

We don't have any information on CPO Foster; we don't know whether he was married with kids or single. We don't even know if he was a career sailor or not but we would assume so, since he had reached the rank of Chief Petty Officer, roughly the equivalent of sergeant first class, and his main speciality was navigation, something that is not learned in a classroom but through years of experience.

CPO Foster was just a man doing his job, a small part of serving his country. And now he and thirty-odd others who were just doing their job are dead. By mistake, according to the Iraqis.

The Iraqis claim that they will pay recompense to those who lost family members on the Stark; they also claim that they will cooperate fully with the investigation into the attack, but they said Friday that they will not allow anyone to question the pilot of the Mirage jet that fired the two Exocets into the ship which visited here last year.

No matter who questions whom, or who doesn't question whom, it won't bring back CPO Foster or any of the rest that were killed and injured on the Stark that day. The Armchair Defense experts in Capitol Hill and the editorial pages of quite a few as to what they know or don't know about the running of a multi-million dollar ship, they are chomping at the bit to take a bite out of the captain's hide because the air defense systems onboard the Stark were not activated. However, these same people would scream even louder if the Stark had nailed the Iraqi fighter

The officers we spoke with back in October stressed that they would do their best to avoid a confrontation at all costs under any circumstances. All that weaponry that the Stark has is designed only as a last resort.

If the Stark had shot down the Iraqi Mirage, it would have — and knowing the stability of the schools of thought in the Iran-Iraq war, would have — resulted in a confrontation of even larger proportions than there was, with even more people getting killed.

We don't feel it was handled well, but there are no pentagon strategists or frigate captains on staff. But that is not the point.

The point is that there were a lot of people that got killed out there, needlessly, and we knew one of them — while not very well, well enough that it hit home when that Exocet smashed onto the side of the USS Stark.

More of Mama's bread

Just recently I entered a sun drenched field and with bent back picked up a portion of those ripe and luscious berries that grew there.

Nothing, but nothing, in this world is as good as that first bowl of strawberries, fresh picked from a local field, topped with a smidgen of cream.

Unless it is that first one, the one that never makes it to the basket but is eaten there in the field on the spot, straight from the vine.

As I write this I can look out my window to bushes laden with blueberries which will be turning ripe soon.

In the back yard garden the zucchini squash are beginning to poke their first leaves out of the ground. We broke ground too late for carrots but there are always plenty of big fat ones at the grocery and they are so much easier to grate.

If there had been another row available we might have planted some sweet potatoes but there in the heart of North Carolina there are plenty available.

We don't have a pear tree and our apple tree is the wrong variety, but neighbors are kind. We repay them with pecans in the late fall.

Why all this rambling about things which grow in the garden?

The answer is simple, they all can be used to make breads and no matter what the season, there is always something that can be used to make a fruit, vegetable or nut bread. And as you know, making bread is just about my favorite thing to do in the kitchen.

But we have strayed from the strawberries.

Several years ago I ran across a delightful bread that had a different taste than the normal finger breads found at receptions.

It wasn't long before I tracked down the hostess, pinned her down and was given a copy of her treasured Christmas strawberry bread.

And no, you do not have to use those fresh picked berries these call for frozen and thawed ones. So save those others for your berry pie or shortcake, cereal or ice cream. You could just eat them out of hand.

Just an idea, when you invest in your bread pans, pick a good stainless brand. I have more cheap bread pans filled with bits and pieces of everything gathered off the work bench than I do in the kitchen cabinet. Cheap so often means expensive in the long run.

You just need two bowls and either two or three pans depending on their size, (two 9 x 5 or three 4 x 8 ). Thaw your berries, you will need 20 ounces or two packages of berries.

In your larger bowl, sift 3 cups flour, 1 tea baking soda, and 2 cups sugar. In your smaller bowl, beat 4 eggs, and these and 1 1/4 cups cooking oil, plus 1 1/4 cups chopped nuts to the dry stuff. Mix all of these and then add your berries.

To make your bread a little redder, add some red food coloring, not much, just by the drops.

Pour the dough into the oiled pans and bake for one hour at 350 degrees.

Try it with some of that spreadable cream cheese and don't wait until Christmas to discover it like I did. — LTJ Features

"Could you see the license plate?" The older man shook his head no.

"Can I do anything? Is there a vet or anything nearby that we could take her to? I have some blankets in the back of my wagon..."

A sign nearby said that they were thirty miles from Wilmington. The pickup driver shook his head.

"You'll better go on. I know you don't want your kids to see me shoot her." The older man nodded, and flip-flopped away.

The dog was still whining, and her stomach was beginning to swell. Although the man was no veterinarian, he knew it was a sign of internal bleeding.

Cadets Grady Shue, Chris Schenk, David Brock, and Joseph Bird were sworn in by ROTC Instructor Major John Gillette. Cadet Brenda Thompson was sworn in by her husband, Lieutenant Clarence Thompson. Cadet Mark Bremer was sworn in by Captain Dale Fish.

Both Thompson and Fish are graduates and commissioners of the UNCW Military Science Program and are officers in the United States Army.

Major Gillette delivered an address on decision making to the cadets and their families under the skylight in the William Madison Randall Library. Col. Ronald Martin, head of the Military Science Department, congratulated the cadets and wished them luck in their careers as Army officers. After receiving their oaths the cadets signed the contract officially making them officers.

A reception in the lobby of the library followed the ceremony, which was attended by about fifty friends and family members.

Thanks go to Donna, or the right results for the wrong reason

The next time some legislator is looking for a birthday to establish as a holiday, he or she might do well to take a good look at the contribution by Donna Rice.

Because that shapely young lady may very well have saved us all from living four years under the widest-eyed left winger ever to desecrate the hallowed halls of the White House.

Not that Gary Hart is all that much worse than most of the other Democratic hopefuls, but he stood a good chance of getting elected to the Presidency next year.

I assume his status as front runner was due to his record and philosophy weren't as well known as those of some of the others. Of course the front runner a year before the convention isn't really so sure of holding on to the lead, as Ed Muskie can testify.

But more elections are lost on the basis of the candidate's personal life and activities than on political issues.

And Donna fixed that very well.

All sorts of organizations rank U.S. senators and representatives, and if the voter understands the nature of the compilers and the issues considered a pretty good idea of the candidate emerges.

Well, according to an analysis of these rankings, Hart got off to a bad start and got progressively worse as a senator.

The most respected and objective conservative group gave him a very poor 36 in 1980, which fell to 17 in 1981 and 15 a year later.

Americans for Democratic Action, the voice of socialism in America, rated him 61 percent for 1980, pretty horrible if you happen to be a conservative, but for the next two years he earned a 95 from the lefties.

The worst long-range threat to free enterprise and individual liberty — I believe — the organized labor movement, through their political action committee, rated him 47 in 1980, but he danced so well to their music that he soared to 77 the next year and then up to 79.

Maybe the majority of Americans are ready for that kind of a president, but I don't think the majority has completely reversed its thinking as demonstrated in practically all elections during the last 20 years.

It is, of course, possible that we could get a worse president than Gary Hart, but it is not probable.

Even if Sam Nunn, the only relatively conservative Democrat mentioned as a possible candidate, should get the nomination, he would have to run on a platform as bad as Hart and Kennedy's records.

The Republicans are in trouble, and I would not pretend they are above criticism, but of the GOP possibilities the worst is head and shoulders above the best the Democrats can offer right now.

Thanks, Donna, for taking a dangerous radical out of the race. He's out for the wrong reason, true, but no matter what the reason, better he's out than in. — LTJ Features

'Dance for Heart' To Benefit American Heart Association

Volunteers from all over Wilmington will participate in Dance for Heart, May 31st from 12:00 to 4:00 p.m. A four hour dance-exercise, Dance for Heart is sponsored by Spa Health Clubs to raise funds for the American Heart Association's programs of cardiovascular research and education.

Dance studios, recreation facilities, spas, health and exercise clubs participate in Dance for Heart as part of a nationwide effort to fight heart disease and stroke. Dancers collect donations from friends, relatives and co-workers for every minute they dance. Each dancer can win prizes based on the amount of money collected.

Dance for Heart demonstrates dance-exercise as a benefit to cardiovascular health and the AHA.

According to local Dance for Heart coordinator, Nicole Stefanelli, "Dance-exercise is a popular activity because it emphasizes fun and fitness. Participation is not limited by age, sex or shape, so anyone can try it. Through Dance for Heart, we have the opportunity to help in the fight against heart and blood vessel diseases, as well as show that dance-exercise is fun, easy and heart-healthy."

Since it began in 1980, more than 200,000 men, women and children have danced and exercised in Dance for Heart events all around the country. Their efforts have raised millions of dollars to help in the fight against heart disease.

This Dance for Heart event will be held at Spa Health Club of Wilmington. To support the event in your area, call Spa Health Clubs 791-4070 or The American Heart Association of Wilmington.

Opera House Productions season finale opens next week

"COMPANY," Opera House Theatre Company's 1986-87 Season finale, will be presented June 3-7 in Thalian Hall. This contemporary musical is noted to be Steven Sondheim's best work. A musical comedy, the show revolves around five married couples and their unattached friend, Bobby. Stressing the fact that everyone needs some "company", each couple tries to get Bobby married off.

Director for COMPANY is Jim Martz, theatre instructor at Campbell College. Mr. Martz is also set and lighting designer for the show, along with being music director. Alice Morgan is Production Stage Manager, with Assistant Stage Managers Kathie Williams and Susie Lee. Technical Director is John Sutton. Costumes are by Cindy Miles of Jacksonville. Executive Director is Lou Criscuolo.

For reservations and information, call the Thalian Hall Box office at 763-9328 or 763-3398. Tickets are $8 and $10. Showtime is 8:00 p.m., June 3-7.

Students encouraged to enter poetry contest

The American Poetry Association sponsors several poetry contests a year with 430 winning poets selected from thousands of entrants. Prizes awarded total more than $16,000, including Grand prizes of $1,000. The current contest's deadline is June 30.

Poets interested in entering the contest should send three poems, each no more than 20 lines, with

"We especially enjoy seeing poetry from college and university students. That's why we set deadlines that are easily met," said John Frost, chief editor for the Association. "After final examinations are over, students will still have time to send us poems by June 30th," he added.

Poets who qualify in an APA contest later receive invitations to other APA contests, also endowed with $1,000 Grand Prizes. During six years of sponsorship the American Poetry Association has run 18 contests and awarded over $60,000 in prizes to many hundreds of winning poets.

Thalian Hall announces campaign leadership

The Board of Trustees of the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts announced the leadership for its capital campaign, which begins the effort to secure the remaining monies needed to complete the renovation, restoration and enhancement of the 1853 City Hall and theatre.

Funds raised will supplement the $1.7 million in bond support voted the facility in 1985 and approximately $700,000 in city funds allocated for the City Hall portion of the project. The public phase of the campaign to raise the full $1.4 million needed to complete the project will conclude in the fall.

Serving as overall Campaign Co-chairmen are Mrs. Franklin L. Block and Mrs. William H. Sutton. Both Block and Sutton also serve on the Board of Trustees for the Center.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Wright, Jr. Co-chair the Initial Gifts portion of the campaign effort.

Heading the Major Gifts Division are Mrs. Carter

Lambeth and Thomas H. Wright, III. Assisting Wright and Lambeth are F. Peter Fensel, John W. Murchison, Dr. R.V. Fulk, and Don Britt.

The Primary Gifts Division is chaired by C. Douglas Brown and James Lea, III.

The Special Gifts Division of the campaign is chaired by Mrs. James Noe and Mrs. Eric Rosenberg.

Each of the Division heads has recruited a team of volunteers to assist in the solicitation effort. Approximately 600 individuals corporations and foundations will be contacted during the coming four weeks on behalf of Thalian Hall.

Constructed in 1855-58, Thalian Hall/City Hall is the last remaining theatre of its kind. Its architect, John Montague Trimble designed about half of the theatres standing in New York City during the mid-19th century. All, but Thalian Hall, have either burned or been destroyed. Following a small fire at Thalian Hall in 1973, a successful fund raising campaign secured the monies necessary to return the interior to its turn of the century appearance.

The campaign, named "Our Future on Stage", will raise the funds needed to renovate the backstage area, install new lighting, dressing rooms, and a public Green Room. A new public lobby, multi-purpose area, box office and administrative office areas are also to be added. The City Hall's old Assembly Room, which served as Wilmington's first public library, will be renovated and will become a public meeting room for the City Council and the Planning Commissions.

Construction for the project is tentatively scheduled for January 1987. The building will re-open in mid-1989, coinciding with the celebration of Wilmington's 250th anniversary.

Thalian Hall: Our future on stage

The Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts has kicked off the first phase of its public effort to secure the $1.4 million in private monies necessary to renovate, restore and enhance the 1855 Thalian Hall/City Hall. This first phase will be complete on June 13.

"It is our goal to secure $500,000 in support in the next four weeks," said campaign Co-Chairman Mrs. William H. Sutton. "In this first phase, volunteers will be talking with many of the area's leading citizens and asking them for their support."

Campaign Co-Chairman Mrs. Franklin L. Block announced that $125,000 has been pledged to date by board members and some of the city's top leaders. "We are confident that local citizens will not let Thalian Hall/City Hall down."

According to Thalian Hall executive director Tony Rivenbark, the total cost of the entire project is approximately $3.8 million. To date, more than $2.5 million has been secured on behalf of Thalian Hall/City Hall. Of that

More than $700,000 has been designated by the city for renovation to the Old Assembly Room in City Hall and the replacement of the building's heating and air conditioning systems. # Out of Africa: lots of fun

by Tim Riley (CPS)

The members of King Sunny Ade's band, the African Beats, take the stage one at a time, each adding a different instrument and rhythm: first hand-held talking drums, then three guitarists, then two more percussionists, a steel guitarist, a synthesizer player, a drummer and, finally, four vocalists.

Even before the headline appears, the place is jumping with physical energy.

All the players wear colorful African smocks and radiant smiles, and when Ade joins them he seems to beam at the prospect of playing for 90 minutes with these ebullient backers. Their joy is contagious. Though none of the Boston audience (mostly made up of white people) I happened to see the band perform for understood the Yoruba tribal words Ade sang, the message—shared singing, communal celebration—was abundantly clear.

Most pop music in America is so far removed from its origins that, to the average listener, King Sunny Ade's seems primitive. In fact, it is complex stuff.

Ade is the most popular musician in his homeland of Nigeria, where he sells millions of albums. His music draws from the Yoruba tongue, his ethnic heritage, and is vaguely similar to other tropical genres like reggae.

But Ade is eclectic. The simple ostinato chants are driven by polyrhythmic verves and kicked by syncopations of uncommon vitality. To listen to his music is to move.

Into it all, Ade weaves electric guitar, whooping and soaring steel guitar and synthesizer breaks of disarming precision. Everything flows to melody as it indulges in rhythmic flexibility. Immersing yourself in this music is like being carried along in a warm stream, buoyed by crosscurrents and tidal patterns that suspend the ear's expectations. A song like "Ja Funmi" can float along for 10 or 12 minutes before you notice the sweat dripping from your brow. This is music in which you can get lost.

Ade and his 20-piece band are currently on their first tour of America since their triumphant 1983 dates, which were hailed by Robert Palmer of the New York Times as "the popular music event of the decade."

Seeing Ade is different from listening to one of his many records. On vinyl, the chatter of drums and layers of instrumental texture are a constant fascination.

But onstage, they take on a new dimension. As the players progress, the physical qualities—the band members' great pleasure in the music-making—of the sound become more apparent. Ade is the leader, but his exchanges with his partners are genuine. He dances with his singers, and duels with his guitarists.

The steel guitarist, Adiodun Fasoke, motions with his hands as he sings, as though praying. The lead guitarist removes his shirt and claps his hands. The drummer widely mouths the words. The party onstage easily extends to the front rows of the audience, and soon the rafters seem to be swaying.

Members of his group brought dollar bills up onstage, and passed them by Ade's smiling face. Somehow the actions—usually an African ritual of celebrating the musicians' work and what they earn—accentuated the different ways Americans and Africans approach music and life. Imagine David Lee Roth or some other smug western pop star bringing money overtly into his act. The result would be fairly obscene.

I couldn't help thinking about our own obsession with commercialism. Why shouldn't musicians be open about the money they earn while playing? And more, importantly, how can any music be ascribed a purely economic value?

By openly delighting in the process of the music industry—listeners paying musicians to entertain them—Ade showed how flimsy our own monetary arrangements with music really are, and he did it without offending a soul.

These are virtues that modern technological drum machines, digital samplers and even the ultra high-tech sheen of CDs have made origin to our ears. King Sunny Ade's pack of exuberant musicians made clear our distance from music's best values even as it reminded us how great it is to have them back.

Tim Riley comments on pop music for College Press Service, the Christian Science Monitor, and National Public Radio.

Guthrie will have to rebuild 'Hawks

For the UNC Wilmington baseball team to repeat as Colonial Athletic Association regular season champions, Head Coach Bobby Guthrie will have to rebuild a team that will be decimated with losses due to graduation. Those losses, 11 seniors to be exact, include most of his pitching staff and his entire infield.

The Seahawks finished the year with an outstanding 32-21 record, a record that equaled the school record for the most wins in a season. Their 11-4 conference mark gave UNCW its first title since joining the CAA. If UNCW is to repeat this feat, Coach Guthrie will have to do the best job he has ever done recruiting.

Chuck Jones heads the group of players that leave the Big W. Jones, one of the best all-round first baseman to play the game at UNCW, was a career .300 hitter, including a .361 mark this season. He also set career records for games played, hits, doubles, total bases, and RBI. The native of Charlotte came within two home runs of setting the career mark in that category.

Calvin Garrett, who made a smooth transition from outfield to second base this season, ranked fourth in hitting with a .311 clip. The Academic All-American also solidified an infield that was error-prone the previous year.

Shortstop Mitch Wells helped make Guthrie have a better outlook towards the infield as he moved from second base to short and responded with a banner year. The UNCW career leader in at bats, stolen bases, runs, and walks, Wells led the team with 145 assists.

John Catalano was also a key member of the UNCW drive to the title. Converted from the outfield, "Cat" hit near .300 all year long and was second on the team in stolen bases with 16.

Catcher Dwayne Graham performed very well after being a backup for most of his career. The Wilmington native ranked fourth on the club with 28 RBIs.

Pitchers Wesley Currin, Mike Freeman, and Kevin Davidson bore the brunt of the work for Guthrie. Currin led the conference in earned run average and tied with Kevin Davidson for victories at eight. Freeman led the club with six complete games, including a one-hitter. Lefthander Keith Moore and righty Jay Stott gave Guthrie plenty of depth in his bullpen.

Guthrie has already strengthened his pitching corps for next year with the signing of two area pitching stars, Lane's David Morrison and Jacksonville's Keith Jarmen.

The signing of a catcher and some infield help should get the Diamond 'Hawks back on track towards the CAA crown. Immediate help may be found in the junior college ranks, the same avenue that brought John Catalano and power-hitting catcher Eric Hall.

If the Guthrie finds the right newcomers to blend with veterans Eric Hickman, Mike Byers and pitchers Jerome Hunt and Tony Tillman, the Seahawks could be in the thick of it again.

East Carolina captures title over James Madison

Seahawks fall in CAA Tourney

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

The 1986-87 Colonial Athletic Association baseball tournament opened on a high note for the top-seeded Seahawks of UNCW. After winning the first two games in the tourney, UNCW fell to James Madison 5-2, and 10-3 to the eventual champs, East Carolina.

UNCW opened the tournament against sixth-seeded William & Mary on May 15. The Seahawks, behind the pitching of senior Kevin Davidson (8-2), who limited the Tribe to just three hits, came back from a 2-1 deficit to take the opener.

John Catalano, Chuck Jones, Dwayne Graham, and Calvin Garrett each collected a run batted in.

Other first round games had East Carolina downing George Mason 5-3 and James Madison beating Richmond 6-1 in the nightcap.

In their second round game May 16, the Seahawks came from behind to eliminate defending champion University of Richmond, 12-6, on a Mark Maulsby grand slam.

Freshman Jerome Hunt (2-3) relieved starting pitcher Mike

Freeman in the fifth inning and stymied Richmond on just three hits.

Maulsby collected five RBI and Mike Byers added two.

George Mason sent William & Mary packing with a 7-3 win over the Tribe, while James Madison sent ECU into the losers' bracket with a 6-2 victory.

UNCW then faced James Madison May 17 to remain in the winner's bracket and a berth in the finals.

Head Coach Bobby Guthrie had saved his ace Wesley Currin for the Dukes, but the Seahawk fortunes would run dry.

Currin (8-3), who was ahead of the count, no balls and two strikes, on the first 10 of 11 batters, fell behind early, 5-0, when the Dukes tallied three runs in the first and two in the second.

Currin settled down to hold JMU the rest of the way, but the UNCW offense was held at bay by lefthander Mike Linskey (2-5).

UNCW had many threat, coming through with two runs in the sixth by way of a Mark Maulsby RBI-single, but left seven men on base.

UNCW had many threat, coming through with two runs in the sixth by way of a Mark Maulsby RBI-single, but left seven men on base.

The defeat dropped UNCW into the losers' bracket where the met East Carolina. The Pirates eliminated George Mason, 8-4, to stay alive.

The Seahawks faced another lefty in Gary Smith and hurt of the early defeat to JMU carried over.

The 'Hawks tried to relieve the hurt early, taking a 3-1 advantage over the Pirates.

But Smith (10-5) settled down and the Pirates inflicted a six-run fourth inning on UNCW to take control of the game. With the Seahawk base cold, East Carolina coasted to a 10-3 win, eliminating the 'Hawks.

Freshman Tony Tillman (2-3) took the loss.

The Pirates then found a pitchless James Madison in the final, taking two from the Dukes and the automatic NCAA Tournament bid.

John Thomas smacked a 10th inning home run in the first game to keep the Pirates alive, 11-10.

The final game saw East Carolina sting JMU for nine runs in third inning. The Dukes crept back, closing to within three at 14-11, but left the bases loaded in the ninth.

East Carolina advanced to the Atlantic Regional of the NCAA Tournament, but was dispatched quickly when eighth-ranked Florida State beat the Pirates 10-5 and Central Michigan outslugged ECU 17-9.

UNCW finished the season with a 32-21 record, tying the school record for most wins in a season.

East Carolina finished 26-17, while James Madison completed the season at 28-21.

With the end of the season, comes the end of an era at UNCW with the graduation of 11 seniors from Coach Guthrie's squad.

The look of frustration

UNCW Head Coach Bobby Guthrie and players Chuck Jones, Eric Hickman, and fellow teammates watch in bewilderment as East Carolina eliminated the Seahawks from the CAA tournament. UNCW finished the season at 32-19.

Jordan camp scheduled for Trask Coliseum

from staff reports

Hometown favorite and current Chicago Bulls star Michael Jordan will stage one of only two nation basketball camps this summer at UNC Wilmington.

Jordan, the National Basketball Association's scoring champion, grew up in the Port City and attended local schools. He went on to star at UNC Chapel Hill and is enjoying an outstanding career with Chicago.

The camp at UNCW runs from June 14-19 and will feature Jordan, other professional players, and a ratio of one coach for every nine campers.

The camp, co-sponsored by Nike and based at Trask Coliseum, is open to boys entering grades 5-12.

Cost for the camp is $335 for resident campers and $275 for commuters. A $100 deposit is required to insure a reservation in the popular camp.

Each camper will receive a Michael Jordan basketball, a T-shirt, a certificate of participation, and a player profile card outlining strengths and areas of improvement.

Jordan's other camp is scheduled for July 12-17 at Illinois Benedictine College outside Chicago.

For information on the camp, contact the Department of Athletics, UNC Wilmington, Wilmington, N.C., 28403, 919-395-3232.

LIFE SENTENCE PARDONED FOR ITALIAN MOTHER

Italy's President Francesco Cossiga has pardoned a 61-year-old mother convicted of killing her son after he refused to be treated for a drug addiction.

Franca Corti was convicted in January 1984. She shot her 27-year-old son after he came home and told her he decided not to enter a drug treatment program.

Corti was quoted as saying, "The pardon? Yes, perhaps it will be more peaceful, but I feel like I have a life sentence inside me."

TEEN PILOT CRACKS SOVIET AIR DEFENSES

Matthias Rust, a 19-year-old West German, amazed the world by landing a single-engine plane in Moscow's Red Square Thursday around 7 p.m.

Valentin M. Falin, former ambassador to West Germany and now chief of the official Novosti press feature syndicate, said Rust would probably not be punished for flying across the heavily defended area. "On one side he will be thanked that he made us aware of the gaps in our air defense system," he said.

Defense Minister Sergei L. Sokolov was relieved of his duties and the Soviet military was ordered to investigate the incident. Defense for Personnel, General Dmitri T. Yazov, will replace the 75-year-old Defense Minister.

D. C. POLICE OFFICERS ARM AGAINST A.I.D.S.

Washington, D.C. police officers will now wear gloves and surgical masks to guard against exposure to the AIDS virus.

This came about as the result of reports last week that three health care workers became infected with the virus after being splashed with the blood of an AIDS patient.

All three workers had skin abrasions or chapped hands, which are conditions that could allow the infected blood to mix with theirs. Vehicles that transport prisoners or used by crime scene technicians, who encounter blood at the scene of a violent crime, will also carry disposable uniforms for officers.

"We're making protective clothing available because police officers are frequently confronted with situations where people are bleeding or they are infected with AIDS," Police Chief Maurice T. Turner Jr. said Wednesday. "The medical community has advised us that police officers ought to have protective wear."

STRIP-MINING BEGINS AMIDST CONTROVERSY

The North Carolina Environmental Management Division approved a one-year permit that allows Chatham Coal Company to open an exploratory strip-mine near Gulf in Chatham county.

This permit allows the company to discharge treated wastes into a tributary of the Deep River. Area residents have opposed the mine because their drinking water comes from Deep River.

This will be the only active coal mine in the state.

Schools disregard SAT as unreliable for standard

Union College in Vermont has become the fourth private college in recent years to drop Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores as an entrance requirement.

Two weeks before Middlebury dropped the SAT, Union College in New York announced it will no longer require SAT scores, either.

Last year, Bates and Bowdoin colleges in Maine had dropped SATs.

Union College spokeswoman Brin Quell says future Union applicants will submit a piece of creative work -- artistic, scientific and/or written -- along with high school records, and an achievement -- not an aptitude -- test score.

Dean John Emerson says Middlebury dropped the SAT to help attract a broader spectrum of students.

He also cited research that indicates students who can afford SAT coaching courses can score up to 100 points higher on the tests, and to concerns the SATs may be biased against women and minorities.

Union President John S. Morris also said he had come to agree with research showing the SATs are "culturally biased" against some students.

The SATs consistently performance, says Blair Horner, a program analyst with the New York Public Interest Research Group (NYPiRG), a long-time critic of the tests.

NYPiRG researcher Joe Sammons notes one SAT question, for example, requires knowing that some boat races are called "regattas," but that people who aren't white or from upper middle-class homes probably would not be familiar with the term.

Women, moreover, tend to score lower than men on SATs, although "women have higher high school and first-year college grades than men," he says.

That translates into fewer opportunities for women. Of the 1,000 Empire State Scholars chosen on the basis of SATs and American College Test scores, 67 percent were male while only 27 percent were female, a review by NYPiRG and SAT critic group called FairTest found.

The gender of the remaining seven percent of the winners could not be determined from official lists.

Nationally, girls average 61 points lower than boys on the SAT: 50 points lower in math and 15 points in verbal categories. "SATs," Horner says, "are only nine percent better at predicting performance than pure chance."

Yet, argues Fred Morino of the College Board, the agency that sponsors the SATs and other standardized tests, "admissions officials know that. They take (the discrepancy) into account if they're using (SAT scores) properly."

"The SAT is measuring developed learning to see how a student might perform in college. It doesn't measure motivation or willingness to learn," Morino says.

"There is not a divided opinion" about the SATs' usefulness in admission, counseling and placement, he says. "We don't agree that there's racial or sex bias in the tests, either."

He says the lower scores for women and minorities are "sociological."

"Women take less math than men. Girls are not very often encouraged to go into math and science. They tend to go into liberal arts, where they do very well," Morino says.

Any SAT sex bias would be hard to explain, Morino says, since "slightly more women (than men) are making up the tests."

have accelerated a trend away from SAT use is difficult to say, observers say. Some graduate schools have relaxed testing requirements in recent years, too.

Harvard University two years ago stopped requiring Graduate Management Admission Test scores, and John Hopkins' med school no longer requires applicants to take the Medical College Admission Test.

On the other hand, Morino notes that since 1978, 400 colleges have picked up the SAT requirement. "Now 75 percent of all four-year colleges use it," he says.

Music Dept. receives $10,000 grant

The music division of UNCW's creative arts department has been awarded a $10,000 grant from the A.J. Fletcher Foundation of Raleigh.

The grant establishes an A.J. Fletcher Music Scholars Program for the 1987-88 academic year and will provide scholarships for students majoring in music at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Five $2,000 scholarships have been awarded," said Dennis J. Sporre, chairman of the department of creative arts, who applied for and will administer the grant. "The A.J. Fletcher Music Scholars Program will assist the music division in attracting exceptional, musically talented students."

Recipients of the 1987-88 scholarships are Randy Barnhill, sophomore, Renee L. Griffin, junior, Patrick S. Hudson, junior, and Jennifer S. Stallings, junior all of Wilmington and Jeff Estep, freshman, of Riegelwood.

Two levels of criteria were employed in selecting recipients: general academic standards and musical performance ability. Further information may be obtained by writing or calling Dennis J. Sporre, UNCW, 601 South College Road, Wilmington, N.C. 28403-3297, (919) 395-3415.

The music program at UNCW is accredited by the National Association of Schools of Music.

LAHNN AND LOFTIN

The unique sounds of Lahnn and Loftin will be featured this weekend at Gabriel's in the Wilmington Hilton. The multi-talented duo has toured the east coast college circuit, much to the delight of every audience along the way.

The players have recently concentrated their efforts on penning original tunes for several films and recording their own material to send out to labels. Their show features superior musicianship and mesmerizing vocals, so take the opportunity to enjoy their musical magic.

The duo will take the stage at 8 p.m. both Friday and Saturday nights.

The next meeting of the Cape Fear Musician's Association will be held next Monday, June 8th, at Roy's in the Riverboat Landing Restaurant downtown. The meeting will convene at 7:30 p.m. and will be followed by a pick-up jam session for anyone interested in playing.

Last month's jam session featured the talents of many Blues Society of the Lower Cape Fear players, and the subsequent jam with CFMA members was an absolute delight. Check it out.

Kevin Winegar and Steven Lewis

The guitarists Kevin Winegar and Steven Lewis will be appearing this weekend at Front Street News. The duo dropped by to promise that the show would be highly entertaining, but they were secretive about the details. The guitarists assured me that the show would be well worth the mystery. We'll see. Showtime is at 9:30 p.m. both Friday and Saturday, and cover charge is $2.

Some of the jammin' at last month's CFMA meeting.

Saxophonist Frank Bonjiomo will be joined by the likes of pianist Duke Ladd, bass player Danny Pera, and drummer Greg Eavey when AFFINITY takes the stage at Kingfish's Oarhouse next Sunday. Their hot jazz sounds will start at 9 p.m., and the cover charge is $2.

Affinity will take the stage at Kingfish's Oarhouse on Sunday night.

Sound and Light Show opens Friday

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The U.S.S. North Carolina, affectionately nicknamed "The Showboat," was considered the most powerful sea weapon ever built by our country. Literally a floating city, housing a powerful fighting unit, the U.S.S. North Carolina was one of the country's biggest advantages during the course of WWII, and was the first American battleship to initiate fire and bombard Japanese territory.

When the war was over, the mighty ship had earned twelve battlestars, having participated in every major naval offensive on the Pacific, including support of the Marine landing force at Iwo Jima.

When the war ended, the veteran of 40 fighting months in the Pacific had steamed over 37,000 miles while touring the war route from Guadalcanal to Tokyo Bay, had entered 26 different ports, had downed 24 Japanese planes, had sunk a merchantman, and had bombarded nine different Japanese strongholds.

The end of the war meant the end of the Showboat's usefulness, and after being decommissioned in June of 1947, the great battleship spent the next 14 years swinging at anchor with the mothball fleet at Bayonne, New Jersey. She was condemned to the scrap heap in 1960, and the people of North Carolina sprang into action to save her.

Thousands of people tour the great ship every year. They are allowed to roam over the deck and through the wide array of open sections that so greatly illustrate the quality of life on the great naval warrior ship that won so many honors so few years ago.

Self guided tours are available for a minimal fee, and next week will see the kick-off of the annual summer-long sound-and-light spectacular, "The Immortal Showboat," that highlights the ship's greatest moments in history.

For seventy minutes, the audience is treated to a blending of voice and music sound effects, the unique combination of over 400 various lights, and numerous special effects that serve to simulate 20 and 40 mm anti-aircraft gunfire, and the blast and flame of large 5 and 16 inch guns.

Even simulated torpedo attacks are included in the show that tells the story of the ship's creation, construction, and participation in all twelve of the major Pacific Ocean naval campaigns of World War II.

Spectators sit in a grandstand just across from the ship's bow to enjoy the spectacular show that is offered at 9pm each evening throughout the summer.

Admission fees are $3 for adults and $2 for children, with a 10% discount offered to groups of 20 or more people. The shows will premier on June 5 this year, and will last through Labor Day.

Opera House's season finale, 'Company', opens Wednesday

COMPANY, Opera House Theatre Company's 1986-1987 Season finale, will be presented June 3-7 in Thalian Hall. This contemporary musical is noted to be Steve Sondheim's best work. This musical comedy revolves around five married couples and their unattached friend, Bobby. The fact that everyone needs some "company" is what each of the couples stress to Bobby while they try to get him married off.

The cast of COMPANY includes many familiar faces from past local productions, among them Angela Barnett, Denise Baas, Heide Berge, David Clark, Gloria Criss, Clifton Daniels, Fred DeLaco, Jim Grimshaw, Helene Henagen, Ray Kennedy, Ann Smith, Rhonda Stone, Marsha Uterback and Tony Pender.

Jim Martz, a theatre instructor at Campbell College in Buies Creek, is serving as set and lighting director, along with being music director. Alice Moran is production stage manager, with assistants Kathie Williams and Susie Lee. Technical director of the show is John Sutton, and costumes are by Cindy Miles of Jacksonville.

For reservations or more information, call the Thalian Hall box office at 763-3398. Tickets are $8 and $10. Showtime is 8:00 p.m. June 3-7. For best seats, call early!

'Scrapbook of a Dancer' preview slated for Friday

SCRAPBOOK OF A DANCER, a dance concert directed by Dorothy Nesbitt, will be previewed Friday, June 5 at the Community Arts Center, located at the corner of 2nd and Orange Street at 8 P.M. Admission for the preview is $3.00 at the door.

A performance will be given at Thalian Hall, June 14 at 8 P.M. The concert features both ballet and contemporary dance plus live jazz. Advance ticket sales are available at Thalian Hall, the Art Center, Arts Council, Dancers Choices and Pivotal. Admission is $5 and $6 at the door the evening of the concert.

- BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN

For Immediate Release:

The June issue of MUSICIAN magazine features the first installment of a two-part interview with Bruce Springsteen, excerpted from Dave Marsh's Glory Days: Bruce Springsteen in the 1980's.

Marsh has had exclusive access to Springsteen, accompanying him on the long journey to stardom. But Bruce encountered one very significant obstacle on that road, both personally and musically, when he faced the transition from the bleak, stark world of Nebraska to the cut-loose rock 'n' roll of Born In The U.S.A. He broke down somewhere near the border of success the latter album would bring, questioning the worth of massive popular acceptance at the expense of personal freedom:

"Basically, I'm a private person. And there's nothing more intimate than working with yourself...your own thoughts and your own ideas. The thing I liked about Nebraska was that it was a kind of private record. And in a way, I was able to maintain more privacy making that type of record."

Bruce could not have recorded Born In The U.S.A., a kind of public record, without the assistance of his manager-friend, Jon Landau. Upon its completion, Springsteen and Landau discussed the album's potential to hurt Springsteen into superstardom, obliterating the privacy Nebraska had afforded him:

"I'd bring up the ghost of '76 (Springsteen's brief fling with national fame, with simultaneous Time and Newsweek cover stories) and say, 'Oh, that was a pain.' And then, of course, Jon tends to argue the other idea. There were a lot of consequences that Jon was arguing for. And generally I guess I felt I'm the guy who has to face 'em. And I was right."

The final mile was his to walk, but Springsteen considered retracing his steps: "Part of myself was saying, 'Hey, don't do that. Why do that? It's nice like this.'" But the other, louder part was determined to see if he could cut some place of his own. He did not retreat:

"This was '84 when this was happening and I started in '84. And where I was at that moment was the result of thousands of small decisions I'd made daily since I was fifteen. The decision to play guitar, to watch the band all night instead of chasing girls around the CYO. The decision to quit school, to watch the guy's hands on the guitar...I had created an opportunity for myself. Why cross the desert and not climb the mountain?"

"Why are you coming to Summer School?"

"So I can get finished earlier," said graduate student Charlotte Armstrong.

"I just thought I'd make it easier on myself next year... I graduate in May," said Steve Carter.

"We are coming to fill requirements for our major," said senior Beverly Ellis and her friend junior Sharon Bursell laughingly added, "So we can graduate on time."

"I graduated in May and I'm going to my Officer's Branch School in November. I needed to kill some time and I started on a second degree in Economics," said Mark Bremer.

"To make up failed classes, so I can come here for the fall semester," said Mark Carter.

"So I wouldn't have to take as many classes in the fall," said senior, Jim Bogan

Donations to colleges up around the nation UNCW gathers over $800,000

(CPS)—Private contributions to higher education skyrocketed last year, an increasing partly fueled by stagnant state funding of public colleges and universities.

And most of the money is coming from private pockets, not from corporations, the Council for Financial Aid to Education (CFAE) reported last week.

In 1985-86, colleges took in an estimated $7.4 billion in contributions and gifts, a 17.1 percent gain over 1984-85, the New York-based Council found.

Alums gave $1.83 billion of the total, a 25 percent jump over the previous year, and gifts from non-alum individuals rose 25.8 percent to $1.78 billion.

Corporations, many saddled with sluggish profit outlooks, gave only eight percent more after a 25 percent increase the prior year.

The figures indicate many public colleges, facing drastic state budget slashes or spending freezes, are pursuing contributions more aggressively.

Traditionally, independent campuses have been the most aggressive fundraisers in academia.

"There's a really unprecedented increase in individual giving," says Paul R. Miller Jr., spokesman for the CFAE. "Without question, colleges are now going out to solicit funds. There's an increased commitment from college presidents on down to making schools' fund raising enterprise work harder."

The University of Minnesota Foundation, for instance, last year embarked on a campaign to raise $300 million in three years to fund endowed faculty chairs. In its first year, the drive raised $250 million.

"There's a much more aggressive posture among public institutions these days," says endowment-building campaign. Now at least nine are in the midst of such a campaign or planning one."

Roszell says public colleges finally have discovered what private schools have known for years: alums can be prime donation sources, but they must be reminded to give.

"Public colleges don't work their alums like private colleges do," he explains. "And they should, because there's lots of market potential there."

Unlike private schools, which have always relied heavily on alumni donations, "public colleges didn't used to keep track of their alums," Miller adds.

"Now they're keeping track of them. And what was, in the 1950s, a fairly small base of individual private donations, has shown one of the largest increases ever. The bulk of the gain in donations has been from individuals."

And colleges are approaching this big-bucks potential with lots of fire power, says another funding expert.

"There's been a tremendous explosion in telemarketing and mass mail solicitation of alumni," says John Milner, vice chancellor

Compiled by Mark Boggis

UNCW reported $838,760 in private donations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1986. Those funds were contributed through the Alumni annual fund, the endowment, the University foundation and general university support. UNCW also received contracts and grants for research totaling $1,057,105, and private scholarship support totaling $91,771. Figures for this fiscal year will be released at the end of June.

Jim Bakker is no stranger to show business

We tend to agree with columnist Montague Britt when he says that the entire Jim Bakker affair (no pun intended) has been beaten into the ground, milked to death by the media in what we call a blatant show of laziness (they know that no matter how bad their copy may be, they can almost always get a story published if it has the name Bakker or Jessica Hahn typed across the top of the page).

A twist that few of the reporters have hit on so far is one that was brought to our attention by a retired actor and playwright who lives right up the road in Atlantic Beach, North Carolina.

Our friend (who promised lawsuits against anyone associating his name with the Bakkers) worked with the Bakkers twenty odd years ago when Jim and Tammy were first entering into the wonderful world of show business.

Note that designation — show business — not evangelism.

You see, the Bakkers used to host a puppet show before they "got religion" and joined a fledgling business that was just rearing its head but promising to be a success.

Television Evangelism.

And we all know what happened after that.

An interesting cycle that has been more prevalent in past years. Celebrity becomes infamous after a scandal breaks, reels from repeated attacks by media and authorities, and falls from grace.

Job offers pour in from all over everywhere, but eventually the fallen star/retail falls into seclusion, only to emerge several years later with a bestselling book that makes the celeb a few million more to help belay whatever losses that may have been accounted in the long fall from grace.

Jessica Hahn may cost Jim and Tammy a few hundred thousand before its over with, but she may also have helped make what may be at least a modest income of several million a few years from now.

Depression in sidewalk gives depressing view of university

While it has been a few days since the last rain storm hit campus, some of you may remember the mud and water that flowed across the front lawn of Randall Library and made a nasty mess on the sidewalk there.

No, we have not degenerated to the point that we wish for so-clean-you-can-eat-off-it streets and walkways. What we are referring to is the six inches of mud and muck that filled the junction of the sidewalk leading from King Hall and that of the library walkway.

It would appear that any common idiot — or engineer — would be able to figure out something so simple as water puddling where a hole or depression is present.

With the beautification work that has been going on for months all over campus, it seems that the powers that be would realize that if folks touring the campus — many times prospective students and parents — had wanted to walk on the dirt, they would have done so purposefully. They wouldn't be walking on the cement with the idea of getting a little UNCW sand in their shoes.

From a less aesthetic viewpoint, the sand must be coming from somewhere, and if it is building up below the library then it would make sense that the sand is coming from around the foundation of the library. Perhaps our great grandchildren will see the William Madison Randall Library keeling to one side like an oceanfront home at Long Beach after a particularly bad tide.

Long Beach, a quaint little place that hit national news last winter when a storm combined with extremely high tides, doesn't really live up to it's name. The strand is about thirty feet in the best spots. The residents down there hold their collective breath every time there is a full moon, hoping they won't be washed away.

With the amount of rain that usually comes with a good old summer thunderstorm (much less, God forbid, a hurricane), we might be seeing our own version of Not-so-Long Beach in the near future.

Wilmington, N.C.

Dear Editors,

As this year winds down, I want to express to you my appreciation for the Seahawk this year. In my eight years at UNCW, this year's Seahawk is outstanding in at least two ways. First, its size and secondly, its consistency in appearing each week. I think that in these and in many other ways the staff has done an amazingly good job and I want to commend Jeff and Anne and the rest of the staff for their hard work and long hours. I know there have been hassles (I've even hassled you a little bit!) but I hope you wind up the year feeling good about the efforts that you have made. Thanks again.

Peace,

Bob Haywood

Jim is not the first

Disgraceful as the Bakker scandal is, I think it is being milked to death by the media, and I've heard a lot of people who don't condone this sort of conduct any more than I do express the same feelings.

But it must be kept in mind that clergymen are human beings, just as butchers, bakers, candlestick makers, politicians and newspaper columnists are, so there are bound to be a few that are less than they ought to be.

I believe that 99 percent of ministers and evangelists are sincere, devout, dedicated and trying their best to carry the word of the Lord as they believe it to the people.

There may be some good coming out of the sick PTL mess, as I've heard more kind words for Jerry Falwell for his efforts to help resolve the tragic situation than I've heard good about Falwell in years.

He is, perhaps, the most misunderstood, misquoted and misrepresented man on the American scene since Barry Goldwater during the 1964 presidential campaign.

I can't help but wonder if very many of his critics have listened to him and heard what he actually did say, and in what context, as I have many times.

But there have always been, and in spite of everything that can be done to prevent it I expect there always will be a very small minority who will use the Lord's name for their personal gain and gratification.

Most readers will remember the terrible escapades of Jim Jones, and the tragic end to which his followers came.

But most of my generation must also have vivid memories of Sweet Daddy Grace, Bishop Johnson and Father Divine.

All of them were simply less sophisticated forerunners of the likes of Jim Bakker, but they didn't have television to sell their "religion."

I had the most first-hand information from some of Johnson's "converts" who had seen the light and returned to their old churches.

And I remember well hearing the self-ordained "bishop" on the radio.

I wasn't told about this by anyone, I heard it myself. Johnson said "Your preacher is leading you straight to Hell, and he knows it. Your only hope for going to Heaven is to listen to me and do as I say."

The escapees from his influence told us that one of the first prerequisites to a ticket to the Pearly Gates was to deed all property to "the church," which, as nearly as we could ever find out, was him.

We were told of other specially sanctified acts, including wedding ceremonies, the bishop would perform if the price was right.

We didn't know any followers of Divine or Sweet Daddy as far as we know, but according to reliable reports there were many similarities in their operations, including offering the only path to Heaven.

But remember these types are few, and don't let them make you lose faith in the church of your choice and your pastor. In these times you need them more than ever.

Parks and Recreation to sponsor silent celebration

The 3rd annual Festival Without Words will be held Sunday, June 7, from 3:00 p.m.-8:00 p.m. at the Community Arts Center, 2nd and Orange St. Highlighting this silent festival will be an exhibit of local art & photography, music, nonverbal performing artists and a special screening of the film classic, "The Mark Of Zorro". Held in honor of National Deaf Awareness Month. Sponsored by the Wilmington Parks & Recreation Dept. Admission is free. Call 341-7860 for more information.

Garfield celebrates ninth birthday

June 19 is Garfield's ninth birthday and the world's favorite cat is ready to kick up his paws and celebrate.

Garfield is the most popular comic strip character in the U.S. today, according to a very recent independent national survey, the Cartoon Q Study by the 21st Century Comics Research Committee.

From Paris to Peoria, Garfield reaches millions of adoring fans through the comic strip, which appears in 1,900 newspapers worldwide.

This fabulous feline has starred in six animated prime-time television specials and won three Emmy Awards for Outstanding Animated Program. Since his first book, in 1980, 23 Garfield titles have appeared on The New York Times Best Seller List: seven of them simultaneously.

Garfield is in demand for all kinds of exciting projects. In 1987, he will celebrate the Bicentennial of the Constitution with the American Newspaper Publishers Association. Through 1988, he will join forces with the American Library Association to promote their summer reading program, with thousands of Garfield posters and bookmarks distributed to libraries and schools

MARGARET GAYLE SPEAKS AGAINST CENSORSHIP

Margaret Gayle, associate director in vocational education for the N.C. Department of Public Instruction, spoke before the American Association of University Women last Wednesday on the threat of censorship in public education.

"If we don't teach children to think, who is going to make the decisions?" she asked, noting that choices involving complex social and medical issues such as genetic engineering will require well-informed minds.

She suggested that a system of screening textbooks based on community standards and involving parents could prevent censorship issues that are being dealt with now."

"Dr. A" to offer advice to students

In response to student request, the Seahawk staff has decided to begin an advice column for students to write in and receive advice through the column, which will be run each week.

The syndicated columnist who will be answering the letters is known as "Dr. A" and has had six years of experience dealing with college students and the problems and questions that arise throughout one's college life.

To receive an answer to any questions you may have, write your letter addressed to Dr. A and mail it to the Seahawk office in room 205E of the University Union. All letters will be read by Dr. A. only—not the Seahawk staff—and will remain confidential with him. He will answer through the newspaper only.

Feel free to write about anything that has been on your mind. We hope this will prove to be an opportunity for students who wish to remain anonymous to find help to the questions they have.

MOONLIGHTING'S WILLIS STRUGGLES WITH POLICE

Actor Bruce Willis, 32, who plays a detective on the comedy series Moonlighting was arrested at his home in Hollywood Hills May 25.

Neighbors telephoned police several times to complain about a wild party at his home. Officers couldn't get the attention of anyone in the house so they entered through an unlocked door, asking for the owner.

"Willis rushed at the officers with his hands out stretched, while yelling abusive language at them," said Lt. Neil Zachary. He said Willis demanded to know what the officers were doing there without a warrant.

There was a brief struggle, but Willis was finally subdued and handcuffed. He was then treated at a local hospital for a fractured shoulder bone, which he had injured previously.

No charges have been filed yet.

for university advancement for Cal-Irvine and spokesman for the National Society for Fund Raising Experts.

"Universities are just realizing that 85 percent of all philanthropy is from individuals."

Miltner says even small community colleges are bolstering their development staffs to chase funding.

"They've identified this important source of money and are finding it's fairly flexible," he explains. "Resources from individuals can be applied to a college's priorities, but they can also be used as leverage with legislators and with other funding sources."

"Corporations just aren't making those big contributions any more, and schools must provide individuals with good reasons to want to contribute support."

Experts say the trend toward increased individual contributions will continue.

"For all the problems higher education has with public relations about increasing tuition and the quality and cost of education," Miller says, "the American people remain persuaded that education is a useful and charitable use for their contribution."

Old herbs from grandmom's time help new problems

Light years ago when I was a little girl a visit to my grandparents home in a little beach resort on the Potomac River in Virginia always had its own collection of odors.

Some were good, like fried chicken, others not so good, like cabbage being boiled. The fresh smells of new vegetables being brought in off the hucker's wagon, earth still clinging to new potatoes and corn silk just the right golden color.

Not the least of odors connected to that home, especially to Grandpa, was the old Lifebuoy soap smell and of fresh mown grass in the morning. Grandmom was more of a cantaloupe-cream-in-coffee-smell.

And always fresh mint from the garden. After years of trying I have finally gotten a bed of it to grow and there is nothing like crushing a mint leaf in iced tea which has been topped by a slice of lemon.

Another trick of Grandmom's, that I remember, was that a sprig of parsley was always placed on the meat platter. She grew her own and managed somehow to keep a pot of it growing in the window of her kitchen every winter.

Eons before that, every household had its own herb garden and today so many families are beginning to grow their own herbs again.

In our yard we have a clump of tansy, I really don't know what it is used for but for now it just looks good. There is, of course, the mint and parsley and we are never without a clove of garlic.

The neighbors share a large clump which grows just where our yards come together.

In a delightful little book which was given to me, "Household Ecology" almost every page is filled with ideas for getting rid of lots of things.

Every suggestion uses some common household something.

For instance, vinegar, simply pour out a bowl of it and room odors fade away.

A favorite necklace dirty? With a soft brush work dry baking soda all over the pieces. The soda, plus the brushing will clean off the dull film which has accumulated from your skin oil and then all you have to do is rub it gently with a soft cloth.

Do you have a beloved string of "real" pearls. The book suggests storing them in rice and of course wear them as often as you can. Pearls are "live" and needs the warmth of your skin to achieve its glow.

And don't forget to use your herbs in cooking, be adventuresome; add a dash of nutmeg to your carrots, a black pepper corn to your stew and cinnamon to your applesauce.

Not many years ago at a family dinner there was a platter of fresh cut asparagus, barely cooked surrounded by crisp thin slices of white onion and tomato, all sprinkled with vinegar and spices. I have never discovered what spices were used but recently found a delightful recipe for herb butter to pour over my newly grown and cut "veggie". Yes, out in the far corner of the yard there is an asparagus bed, but you can buy fresh in the store, providing your "care check" from home has just arrived.

Have the majors become pitchless

Surveying the latest statistic for major league baseball, one has to wonder, "Is there any dominant pitching staffs in baseball this year?"

The answer to this question is "No." If you have seen any games on television or taken a look at the box scores in the newspaper, you have probably noticed a lot of 9-6, and 7-5 ballgames. There have been very few 2-1 and 3-2 games.

The first reaction is that the hitters have gotten wiser. Well that may be the case, but most of the hitters that are at the top in batting average, are not newcomers. They are just getting more mistake pitches to hit.

Your second reaction may be that "The ball is juiced up." But you have made contact if the ball is going to go anywhere. A good pitcher doesn't allow a hitters to make good contact.

That leaves only one conclusion. The quality of pitching is down, causing higher batting averages and more runs. The reason for this is there are fewer prospects in the minor leagues, leaving many clubs short on pitching. When their starters get knocked out early in a game, that puts stress on the bullpen, thus the whole staff gets worn out early in the season. With no help in the minors, major league clubs face a serious situation.

Look at the National League's Eastern Division. The Mets were supposed to have the most dominant staff in recent years. Due to injuries and the glory that comes with a World Championship, the Mets have slumped.

St. Louis, who without a revitalized offense would not be leading the division, has patched a staff together after John Tudor went down with a broken knee. Bob Forsch and Danny Cox were excellent starters in the past, but both now have earned run averages (ERA) above four runs per game.

Last year, New York, St. Louis, Los Angeles and Houston all had team ERA's below 3.50, with the Mets leading at 3.11.

This year, Houston and Los Angeles lead the National League in pitching, but both are above 3.50. The Astros are at 3.56 and the Dodgers are at 3.62. The Mets have dropped to 4.33 and the division leading Cards have a bloated 4.36.

In the American League, Kansas City has the most impressive staff with a team ERA of 3.16, but after the Royals comes Detroit at 3.62. What could the problem be? Maybe it is just the year of the hitters after two years of dominance by the pitchers. Maybe the pitchers are tired.

The best explanation is that the pitching supply has run dry. The existing pros are tired, especially after 162 games a year. But that wasn't a problem in the past, why now?

It could be that the lack of depth has hurt the major league pitching staff more than anything. General managers are now looking deep within the farm system for their top pitching prospects.

Other big league pitchers have been rushed into the majors by clubs needing help as soon as possible.

Just last week, the Texas Rangers reached deep within their farm system to pull up Bob Malloy from single A-club Gastonia. Malloy was 5-0, but most players at that level are never considered ready for the majors. Last season, Texas rushed college phenom Mike Loynd straight from the College World Series to a starting spot on their staff.

Another college pitcher rushed to the major league level was Cleveland's Greg Swindell. He has shown his lack of season, pitching with the finesse of an old pro one day, and being shelled the next time out. Considering these circumstances, Swindell and Cleveland should be extremely proud of the lefty's 3-3 record and 3.84 ERA.

The jump from college ball to the majors is too big for most and Loynd showed his lack of seasoning.

If you take a look through every team's farm system you will see that the well has run dry. No longer are there organizations with loads of rising pitching help. Instead, you see clubs pulling at every thread of hope that comes through, hoping for another Dwight Gooden.

The Mets will admit that their system has bore all its fruit. That was evident when they made an early season trade with Kansas City for prospect David Cone. Cone weathered an early storm to contribute only recently for the struggling World Champions.

The Dodgers have recognized the fact that their once productive system is dry. No Fernando Valenzuela's are in the near future.

St. Louis pulled up their last prospect this month in former college star Joe Magrane. No other Todd Worrell's can be seen in the immediate future for the Redbirds.

That brings us to an interesting topic. Should major league baseball expand?

With a lack of pitching, where would baseball find 20 more arms to throw for the two new teams they are talking about bringing in.

Maybe the owners have seen the light in regards to free agency and have decided that the millions spent on the farm system to generate the stars of tomorrow.

If not, baseball's complexion may fade a little with 10-9 ballgames being the rule instead of the exception. Television executives will be less likely to show baseball games because high scoring games last in excess of three to three and one-half hours. Too much for a game that used to finish in under three.

As a fan you might think that more runs would liven the game, but baseball has been the way it is for nearly a century. Why mess with it now. Everyone likes offense, but eventually everyone will get more than their share.

Baseball needs to improve its farm system before it's too late. It needs to help cultivate the college talent, quit spending millions on today and save a little for the tomorrow, and realize that expansion will only hurt the game not help it.

Remember the joy of seeing Dwight Gooden or John Tudor perplex the opposition. Remember the tension created with the score 2-1 in the bottom of the ninth and a man in scoring position.

I like offense, but I also like to see good defense. Baseball needs a balance to be successful. Too much of one may spell serious problems for our national pastime.

Will baseball ever see another Steve Carlton or Nolan Ryan? As baseball fans, we can only hope so.

Garrett named Academic All-American 1st Team

Garrett receives 1st team honor

from staff reports

WILMINGTON, N.C. - UNC Wilmington's Calvin Garrett, who was presented the university's Chancellor's Cup Award for Academic Excellence just weeks ago, has collected yet another prestigious academic honor.

The senior second baseman from Ft. Bragg, N.C., was named Friday to the GTE-CoSIDA Academic All-America Baseball First Team. A second-teamer last year, Garrett joins an elite group of only 10 players on the first team in 1987.

"Calvin's goal was to do the very best he could and he accomplished that," said UNCW Head Baseball Coach Bobby Guthrie. "He worked very hard on his studies and it's a tribute to his determination to receive this honor."

General Telephone Company and the College Sports Information Directors of America sponsor the program each year to recognize the nation's top collegiate scholar athletes.

A graduate of E.E. Smith High School, Garrett played in the outfield for the Seahawks his first three seasons, but was shifted to second base this spring to "give us more speed in the lineup. He made a good adjustment, and played well defensively for us," Guthrie said.

The 5-11, 170-pound Garrett responded brilliantly to the move, batting .296 with 18 RBIs and nine extra base hits on the season. He played in 45 of the team's 55 games, sitting out eight contests late in the season because of a wrist injury.

"Calvin was really having a great year for us," Guthrie continued. "He was bothered by the injury the last half of the year, but still contributed down the stretch."

Garrett became a big factor when he returned from the wrist injury. He made a game-saving catch in a tide-clinching victory at James Madison, and drove in the tying run late in the contest.

A native of Vernon Parish, La., Garrett graduated Magna Cum Laude with a B.S. Degree in Business Administration. He is making plans to attend graduate school in the future.

ESPN's Gardner, Kelly anchor festival coverage

BRISTOL, COMM. — ESPN, The Total Sports Network, has announced that Gayle Gardner and Jim Kelly will serve as "floating anchors" for ESPN's 43 hours of live coverage of U.S. Olympic Festival-87 in North Carolina July 13-26. Gardner and Kelly will co-host each ESPN telecast from the day's main venue.

Gardner, who joined ESPN in 1983, will be working her first U.S. Olympic Festival for ESPN.

Gardner serves as co-host on ESPN's Sports Center and was the on-shore host for ESPN's 1987 America's Cup coverage from Australia.

Kelly will be working his third U.S. Olympic Festival for ESPN. The first two years, he provided play-by-play for the figure skating, gymnastics and swimming events. Kelly also reported on two Olympic Games while working for CBS Radio Sports.

UNCW offers a multitude of sports camps

from staff reports

WILMINGTON, N.C. - A plethora of sports camps are available again this summer at UNCW Wilmington, giving individuals and teams an opportunity to learn while having fun during the summer months.

Eleven camps are scheduled at UNCW, including eight individual camps and three team camps.

The camping season kicks off June 14-19 with the Michael Jordan/Nike Boy's Basketball Camp. Co-sponsored by Nike, Inc., the camp is open to boys entering grades 5-12 and costs $335.00 for resident campers and $275.00 for commuters.

National Basketball Association scoring champion Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls and UNCW Head Coach Robert McPherson will conduct the camp, which will be held at UNCW's Trask Coliseum.

Two tennis camps, one each for residents and commuters, are next up on the schedule, running from June 21-26 and June 28-July 3. The cost is $190.00 for resident campers and $125.00 for commuters.

With men's tennis coach Larry Honeycutt as camp director, the Seahawk Tennis Camp is suitable for all players at different skill levels. Each camper is afforded an opportunity to learn the basic strokes of tennis and how to use them in match play.

Advanced players benefit from additional instruction in improving their skills and strategies.

McPherson will direct the Seahawk Boy's Basketball Camp July 5-10 and a team camp from June 28-July 3. The individual camp's objective is to teach the fundamental skills necessary to improve as a basketball player.

The Seahawk coach and his camp staff will teach and demonstrate techniques to sharpen the offensive and defensive phases of the game. They plan to stress quickness and sound judgement on both ends of the floor.

Head Coach Marilyn Christoph and assistant Cathy Gerdes are offering two team basketball camps this summer for girls. "The Junior Circuit," for grades 7-10, runs June 21-26. "Carolina's Finest," for grades 10-12, goes from July 12-17.

Format for the camps includes instructional sessions in the morning, team play in the afternoon and game competition at night. Both camps cost $155.00 per camper, and individual applicants will be accepted.

The Seahawk Baseball Camp gets under way July 12-17 and July 19-24 at the Brooks Field athletic complex. Head Coach Bobby Guthrie and assistant Mark Sealf will work with several high school coaches in giving expert instruction.

The goals of the baseball camp are to provide individual and detailed guidance in batting, bunting, pitching, catching and infield and outfield play. Cost of the baseball camp is $140.00 for day campers and $190.00 for dorm campers.

Coach Jackie Blackmore will conduct the Seahawk Soccer Camp from July 26-31, and the five-day program will take advantage of the spacious grass soccer fields at UNCW. Daily sessions are designed to encourage individual development in the morning and team play in the afternoon.

The soccer camp, which costs $140.00 for day campers and $190.00 for resident campers, features actual game situations, along with films and clinics throughout the session.

play baseball, it's quite an honor," said Garrett, who will attend some open tryouts for professional baseball players this summer. "I guess it's a little sweeter this year after making the second team last year. It's hard to explain how pleased I am. I had a better year this season and that must have helped."

Calvin Garrett

Garrett is the second UNCW baseball player to earn the honor. Paul Murr was also named to the first team in the 1982 season.

The Seahawks, who finished 32-21 overall, captured the regular season championship of the Colonial Athletic Association with an 11-4 mark. UNCW's hopes of an NCAA post-season appearance ended in the Colonial Athletic Association's tournament in Richmond, Va.

The first team is as follows:

Pitcher - Wesley Bliven, Santa Clara

Catcher - Pat Heiderscheit, Iowa State

1st Base - Brian Mahaffey, SW Missouri St.

2nd Base - Calvin Garrett, UNCW Wilmington

3rd Base - Chip Hale, Arizona

Shortstop - Ken Bowen, Oregon State

Outfield - Todd Azar, Old Dominion

Outfield - Derek Lane, Tennessee Tech

Outfield - Bryan Genter, Oregon State

Designated Hitter - Scott Simpson, Brown

HOSTAGES IN IRAN ?

Iran denied that USA hostages have been moved from Lebanon to Iran and could go on trial.

A story published in Ash Shira, the Lebanese magazine that broke the U.S.-Iran arms-for-hostage deal, also said American envoy Terry Waites was among the hostages taken.

An Iranian Embassy spokesman in Beirut denied the report.

"This is part of the psychological warfare Iran is conducting against the United States to put a squeeze on the United States to tone down its statements and relax its military presence in the Persian Gulf," said Yonah Alexander, a terrorism expert at the Washington-based Center for Strategic and International Studies.

He also believes the report reflects the internal power struggle in Iran.

PRISONERS MAY USE AIDS AS WEAPON

The government may want to extend the imprisonment of infect other people after their release said William Bennett, Education Secretary.

"This is a tough issue... when a person serves his time, a person should be free to go."

Bennett then added, "Supposing that person says... as we've heard a few people say, 'When I get out, I'm going to take my revenge on society.' I think this is a hard question for us, and you may want to hold on to him."

Sen. Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee's Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education criticized Bennett's advocacy of some mandatory tests for AIDS.

"I don't want the administration to set the tone of the fight against AIDS by wallowing in the testing issue. The issue is education of our young people, which they're afraid to do, because they might offend some sensibilities."

BATTLESHIP'S MASCOT RETURNS

Charlie the Alligator, resident mascot of the USS North Carolina Battleship Memorial, has returned from winter hibernation. Although many unconfirmed sightings were reported earlier this spring, Charlie made his first official appearance of 1987 on May 16th. He was spotted by two youngsters from Hammond, Indiana who were visiting the ship that day with their parents.

Avid Charlieophiles disagree as to whether the alligator is really Charlie. Some speculate that it could be Charlene, Charlie, Jr. or another cayman of unknown gender since, in recent years, several alligators have adopted the Battleship as their summer home.

1987 Olympic Festival Torch Run passes through campus

The 1987 United States Olympic Festival Torch Run through North Carolina, begins in Wilmington on June 22.

The torch will pass through the UNC Wilmington campus, entering on Randall Drive, proceeding to the back of campus past Hall '85, and coming back off campus on Riegall Road.

Ceremonies will be held at the end of the torch's journey through UNCW.

More than 1,000 students, parents expected to attend orientation at UNCW

More than 1,000 incoming freshmen students and approximately 800 parents are expected to attend the three orientation sessions scheduled at UNCW June 18-19, June 22-23, and June 25-26.

Events begin at 8:30 a.m. on each of the first days with orientation check-in in room 100 of the University Union. At 10:20 a.m., the incoming freshmen will be assigned to their orientation leaders and will have a get acquainted session also in room 100.

At 1:00 p.m., students and their parents will meet in Kenan Auditorium for a general session and welcome. Math testing and a writing sample will be administered in the afternoon.

That evening from 4:30-7:30, students participating in orientation will be bused to Wrightsville Beach for dinner on the beach in front of Crystal Pier followed by "Playfair." Playfair is a session of group games to and reduce inhibitions. Playfair activities will begin about 5 and last until 6:15.

The second day of activities will be devoted primarily to academic advising, registration, and information sessions as well as a student activities fair.

A program for parents has also been developed, offering informational sessions dealing with such topics as "How to Know When Your Student is in Academic Trouble" and what to do about it, as well as financial aid, disabled students, minority students, and residence life.

One topic of discussion will be housing for freshmen students, both in on-campus residence facilities as well as what is available off-campus. At this time, there is a waiting list of approximately

UNCW women to compete for state beauty title

By Jennibeth Kennedy, Staff Writer

"And the winner is..." These are the words that would make any girl's heart race, the thought of winning a pageant and becoming a Festival Queen, 1986 North Carolina Spot Festival Queen and the 1987 Miss Pender County title. She plans to perform a tap dance routine to "If My Friends Could See Me Now" for the talent competition. Natalyn began several pageants and has held the titles of 1979 Miss Teenage Princess, 1985 Miss Spivey's Corner, and her most recent title of 1987 Miss Wilmington.

Angela enjoyed her first pageant but didn't continue and hopes to eventually get a teaching job in Duplin county. Amy's dream as a little girl was to someday earn the title of Miss Duplin County.

This year she decided to enter the competition, which was her queen. This is the dream of four UNCW students, who will participate in the Miss North Carolina pageant June 17-20, in Raleigh, NC. The new Miss North Carolina will then advance to the Miss America pageant, which to those participating, is the chance of a lifetime.

Miss Pender County, Natalyn Shipp, is a 20-year-old junior majoring in speech communication. She has been competing in pageants for five years and has earned many titles. Her accomplishments include 1983 Tri-county Cinderella Teen, 1985 North Carolina Oyster competing in pageants after a friend of her family suggested the idea.

She felt like it would be a good way to improve and learn more about herself as well as having the opportunity to travel and meet new people. Natalyn hopes to become a marketing representative after graduation and feels like her experiences in competition have helped her tremendously with her communication skills.

Miss Wilmington, Angela Jeness, is a 26-year-old junior who hopes to work in broadcasting and eventually teach through the media. She has competed in competing until 1982 after the death of her father. She felt that if she won, the scholarship money would enable her to go back to school to finish her education. She also felt that competing in a pageant would give her the opportunity to sing and to witness to other young people that she met. Angela is a Christian singer and songwriter and plans to sing an original song entitled "Daddy's Song," in memory of her father, for the talent competition.

Miss Duplin County, Amy West, is a 19-year-old freshman from Warsaw, NC. She is majoring in elementary education first, and won the title. She is very excited about the chance of the Miss North Carolina title and has worked hard preparing for it. She enjoys playing the piano and plans to perform "Valerie in D Flat" for her talent competition.

Miss UNCW, Denise Jenkins, is an 18-year-old freshman who is interested in obtaining a business degree and plans to one day own several small businesses. She has competed in one other pageant in which she earned the title of 1986

'A North Carolina Arts Celebration': summer-long showcase of works

Research Triangle Park, N.C. -- In keeping with North Carolina's strong commitment to the arts, one of the largest arts celebrations in North Carolina's history is being held in conjunction with this summer's U.S. Olympic Festival - '87.

"A North Carolina Arts Celebration" will be a summer-long showcase of works by world renowned, nationally and locally recognized visual and performing artists. Incorporating many existing summer arts programs like never before, "A North Carolina Arts Celebration" includes programs in theatre and opera, visual arts and crafts/museum exhibitions, music, dance, and folk festivals.

"This celebration will be the biggest cooperative effort among the North Carolina arts community to ever occur," says Michael Lowder, arts program director for North Carolina Amateur Sports, local organizing committee for U.S. Olympic Festival - '87. "Because we are taking a more eclectic approach to the programming, not limiting ourselves to the traditional or folk life arts, this festival will be the most comprehensive look at North Carolina's art scene to date."

Just as U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 will bring together the athletes of many sports, so too will "A North Carolina Arts Celebration" bring together many distinct arts groups.

U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 will be held July 13-26 in Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill, Cary and Greensboro. Nearly 3,000 athletes in 34 sports and more than 300,000 spectators are expected to attend, making U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 the largest single event in North Carolina history.

From the beginning of June through August, art lovers will have the opportunity to experience something of every medium and expression during "A North Carolina Arts Celebration."

*an international jazz festival, and a blues festival featuring some of Durham's unique blues performers and national acts;

*exhibitions by North Carolina-native and American visual artists in photography, watercolor, pastels and mixed media; and *theatre performances by professional, community and children's companies.

"A North Carolina Arts Celebration" is funded in part by grants from Central Carolina Bank & Trust of Durham; the A.J. Fletcher-WRAL Foundation; and the National Endowment for the Arts. Additional support has come from more than 40 area arts and cultural organizations.

Based on an economic impact assessment commissioned by arts advocates, "A North Carolina Arts Celebration" will generate $2.31 in direct economic activity for every dollar invested.

For more information and an complete event schedule for "A North Carolina Arts Celebration," call 1-800-223-USOF.

WORLD PREMIERS

Members of the Raleigh, Durham and the University of North Carolina symphony orchestras will combine to present specially commissioned world premier works by Richard Adler and Michael Ching.

Adler, a UNC alumnus, is a prodigious composer and songwriter. He has received two Tony awards for his contributions on Broadway. Last year he was commissioned to write a major symphonic work celebrating the Statue of Liberty's 100th anniversary.

Adler's contribution to "A North Carolina Arts Celebration" will include a symphonic fanfare and overture, to be performed in U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 Opening Ceremonies, Friday, July 17, at Raleigh's Carter-Finley Stadium.

"This commission was a little different," says Adler. "When I am given a subject I generally do a lot of research about my subject. For instance, when I wrote the piece for the Statue of Liberty ceremony I did a lot of research into the statue's history."

"For this commission though I didn't really need to do that much research because I'm a big sports fan already and have a pretty good knowledge of sports and what the Olympics are all about. I have tried to write something explicitly applicable to the Olympic spirit."

A second world premier performance by Michael Ching, musical director of the newly formed Triangle Music Theater Associates and the Durham Opera Company will be performed during the Festival.

"I'm doing a piece that is a very much inspired by the movements and executions of the women's gymnastics floor exercises," says Ching. "It's a kind of scenario of the event, that will have a little narrative as well as some humorous interludes to make it more accessible on the first hearing."

Ching has composed three operas and numerous other classical compositions. He has served on the artistic staffs of the Greater Miami Opera, Houston Grand Opera, and Chautauqua Opera.

Greensboro's Eastern Philharmonic Orchestra will also present a world premier work by North Carolina composer Douglas Borwick. On Saturday, July 25, at Guilford College's Dana Auditorium, faculty of this 26-year-old summer music conservatory will present for the first time, Borwick's "Round The Ring of the Moon."

JAZZ & BLUES FESTIVALS

Internationally, the triangle area will host eight of Italy's finest jazz musicians when the Umbria Jazz Festival begins its fourth season here, July 23-26, in all three Triangle cities. The Umbria (pronounced OM-bre-a) Jazz Festival, modeled after the Italian jazz festival held in the region of Umbria, Italy, is the largest and oldest jazz festival in Europe.

"We are trying to establish more of an exchange between jazz musicians from Italy and the United States," says Paul Jeffrey, director of jazz studies at Duke University and organizer of the jazz festival. "The fact that we can incorporate this year's festival with U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 makes us very happy, because the spirit of what we are doing is consistent with that of the Olympics in general."

The Italian musicians will be joined by an Italian chef and representative of Szilutumbria, a trade union which hopes to promote the exchange of cultures. Trans World Airlines has provided a grant to cover the round-trip flights of the musicians, and the government of Italy will cover the expense of their stay here.

"A lot of work and help has been given to us by the region of Umbria to get this thing together," says Jeffrey. "We wouldn't be able to have this jazz festival without them."

The Bull City Blues Festival will be a unique opportunity for any blues lover to experience a musical style that flourished in Durham from the 1920's through the 1940's. The program will pay tribute to this livelier, more toe-tapping form of blues with workshops, films, and surviving performers of the Durham blues scene. Such well-known blues artists as Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown, Brownie McGee, Lightin' Wells, Jumping Johnny and the Blues Party, Buddy Guy, and Junior Wells will perform on Saturday, August 8 at the Durham Athletic Park.

The Bull City Blues Festival is being co-sponsored by WRDU-FM 106 and the Durham Arts Council, with additional support from the Carolina Theater of Durham, which will present two films of the lives of Sonny Terry and Elizabeth Cotton.

ARTS EXHIBITIONS

Those with an eye for art will have plenty to take in as "A North Carolina Arts Celebration" features numerous exhibitions and a sculpture by California artist Douglas Hollis. No newcomer to Olympic arts, he created a work for the 1980 Winter Olympics in Lake Placid, N.Y.

Hollis is one of a small group of sculptors who deal with the way sound acts in spaces. All of Hollis's works, apart from preparatory drawings, are made for public locations rather than for gallery exhibition or private purchase.

The unveiling date and location of Hollis's sculpture for U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 has yet to be determined.

Raleigh's Artspace will exhibit works by 29 selected North Carolina artists who submitted entries for a poster competition with the theme of "U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 Spirit." The exhibition will be held July 10 to August 21 at the Artspace in downtown Raleigh.

"We knew competition is an important part of U.S. Olympic Festival - '87, so we wanted to contribute to it by holding a competition for the arts," says Sally Bates, Artspace coordinating chairperson. "Everyone of the artists interpreted the theme differently. We had images of torches, celebration, gymnastics, swimming, and track, just to name a few."

Judging of the competition has already taken place, with the winner to be announced at a later date. Proceeds from the sale of this limited edition poster will be used to support special arts projects, including "A North Carolina Arts Celebration."

Sports-related art and photography will be on display at the Hugh Mangum Museum of Photography, N.C. Central University's Student Union and at several commercial galleries. Other museum and gallery shows will feature recent examples of abstract painting at Raleigh's City Gallery of Contemporary Art, to a look back at the influential work of the students and faculty of Black Mountain College at the N.C. Museum of Art. The triennial North Carolina Artist Exhibition will also

OUTDOOR MUSICAL PERFORMANCE

Those who prefer to take in their music outdoors will find plenty offerings during "A North Carolina Arts Celebration."

Highlights include:

* Artspire Heritage Festival, featuring Mike Cross, Norman Blake, "Doc" Snodderly, and the Badgett Sisters July 25-26 at Raleigh's Moore Square and Civic Center Plaza.

* The North Carolina Symphony Summerfest Concert Series at Regency Park in Cary, featuring special guest Eugene Fodor June 13, and Doc Severinson June 27.

* Sunday Evening in the Park, featuring performances by the Greensboro Symphony Orchestra, Greensboro Concert Band, Eastern Philharmonic Orchestra, Hickory Wind, and a gospel festival, among others. These performances are taking place on Sunday evening at various parks in Greensboro through August 30.

* Jazz concerts in Durham by such local favorites as Brother Yusuf and Friends-June 21; Group Sax and Eve Cornelious/Chip Crawford -Group-July 19; and Motley's Crew-August 15.

* Concerts in Raleigh Parks, featuring performances by the Raleigh Community Band, Hickory Wind and Apple Chill Cloggers - June 14; British Brass Band-June 28 and Paul Jeffery Quintet-July 29.

THEATRE

Consistent with the U.S. Olympic Festival - '87 spirit, Raleigh's Theatre in the Park and Short-Order Chefs will present "Double Play: Two One-acts about Baseball." The plays will be presented every Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights July 10-26.

"We are covering baseball from the players' side as well as the fans' side with these two plays," says Stan Lichtenstein, producer and director of Short-Order Chefs. "We deliberately chose to do sports related plays because of U.S. Olympic Festival - '87."

High Point's North Carolina Shakespeare Festival will present "Richard II" July 23-25, and "A Midsummer Night's Dream" July 30-31.

The Greensboro's Theatre For Young People will present "Fool of the World." This will be an audience participation play especially designed for children grades K-4, their parents and teachers. The play will be presented at various locations in Greensboro, Durham, Raleigh, and Chapel Hill with times and exact locations to be announced.

The Arts Center in Carboro will have two shows for area theater goers: "The Foreigner" a comedy, presented July 15-25, and "Retreat" a drama, presented July 29- August 8.

DANCE

For the 10th straight year Duke University is hosting the American Dance Festival. Perhaps this country's most comprehensive collection of dance talent, ADF features performances by such world renowned dance companies as: Paul Taylor, Limon Dance CO., Pilobolus, and North Carolina's own Chuck Davis and the African American Dance Ensemble, to name just a few.

"Tommy (Stinson) dropped out to go on tour. They were in tenth grade algebra class and Tommy was drinking from a bottle of Jack Daniels, going down the road. If you weren't strong that would really screw you up. Like being a child circus performer or something."

-Paul Westerberg

Pass around the lampshade; The Replacements are back. In the July issue of MUSICIAN magazine, the voice of the Minneapolis bad boys - Paul Westerberg - discusses teetering on the ledge of success. With one foot in the gutter.

Each of the Mats' last three albums has been better and more commercial...er, accessible than its predecessor. Pleased To Meet Me could be the one to break them big. But there is a type of success they don't want to know. Westerberg explains why we won't see their video:

Warner Brothers says, You can be big stars. Make a video and film it and looks cute and the little girls will love it. I'd just as soon not be a huge plastic monster of an act because a bunch of thirteen-year-old girls saw our video. We've got to hang tough a little longer."

Nonetheless, small concessions have been made. The new album bears the mark of its producer as their work never has before, and Westerberg feels the difference:

"Can't Hardly Wait" doesn't feel comfortable to me. I can listen to it like I'm listening to somebody else's tune and go, "Man, this is kinda cool." But knowing that it's us, I laugh every time the happy horn riff comes in."

Most of the new songs do sound just like the Replacements. But just sounds like Paul Westerberg:

"The band didn't play on 'Skyway' (an acoustic ballad). Chris (Mars) tapped his foot...I write most of the songs and if the band don't want to do 'em, then we don't. I'm not going to make Tommy stand there and play a little plunk plunk song. I don't pull a lot of 'Skyway's on 'em, but the good songs should go on. And 'Skyway' was certainly better than 'Bear For Breakfast.'"

Lake Buena Vista, Fla. -- Thousands of college students visit Walt Disney World each year for fun. Since 1980, more than 5,000 have also come to work -- and had plenty of fun, as well.

Several times a year, the 6-year-old Walt Disney World College Program recruits students from 114 different colleges and universities around the country to work at Walt Disney World. Up to 1,500 students currently take advantage of the program each year. They work here for a single session, receiving wages and more importantly, credits or work experience they can apply to their degree requirements.

Recruiters visit campuses in the fall to interview students to work in the January-to-May session.

They return in the spring to interview for the June-to-August and September-to-December sessions. They talk with students majoring in hotel-restaurant management, retail management, parks and recreation management, communication arts and general business.

Students who qualify work at least 30 hours a week, earning the same wages and benefits as other Walt Disney World temporary employees. They additionally attend 10 business-management seminars which are given by Disney management employees on topics such as marketing, entertainment, park operations, finance and employee relations.

The combination of working at America's most-visited vacation destination and learning first-hand from the people who help account for this favorite status provides a valuable learning experience, the students say.

While they're here, they share an apartment or mobile home with other college-program students at Disney-leased properties. The students often make friendships during this time which last for years.

Even before Walt Disney World opened in 1971, the company was working with several college and university co-op programs. By 1980, the number of schools wanting to place co-op students here had grown to the point that the more-formalized college program was started.

It has since grown from a 300-student-a-year program to one which accommodates 500 students three times a year.

director of the loggerhead program. The program is funded in part by the Biology Department, the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, The Society for Masonboro Island, and The Faculty Research and Development Fund, which a part of UNCW.

The program is unique in many ways, not the least in that the main field work is overseen and coordinated by students, Joe Gouviea for Masonboro Island and Bill Brooks at Bald Head. Gouviea, Brooks, and Hal Bain are all graduate students. Undergraduate workers, who receive Directed Individual Study (DIS) credit, are Jennifer Copella, Kim Hudson, Kathy Lewis, and Sam Watson.

Loggerhead turtles are protected by law and are designated as a "threatened" species in the Endangered Species Act of 1972. A species which is threatened is one step short of being put on the endangered list. Since loggerheads are threatened even the loss of one nest can be disastrous.

The turtles come ashore between midnight and 4:00 a.m. to lay their eggs, which are then incubated by the sun.

If a nest is made below the high tide mark, the eggs can be exposed by the lapping waves or washed away, and that is where Joe Gouviea and the other "Turtle Chasers" come in.

Patrolling on a three-wheeled Honda all-terrain vehicle, the students hit the beach by 6:00 a.m. or so every morning, looking for the tell-tale evidence of a nesting turtle — bulldozer-like tracks coming out of the surf and heading for the higher ground the turtles prefer for their nests.

Time is of the essence when the workers are moving a nest.

"Within twelve hours of hatching," said Gouviea, "the embryo attaches itself to the inside of the shell. If the egg is moved after that, moving it can be too stressful for the embryo... or it can be simply detached from the shell by being handled."

"Either way, we lose another turtle."

Since the turtles nest in the wee hours of the morning, the workers must be on the water before 6:00 a.m. and usually return to school by 10:00 a.m. to attend classes. Graduate students must be enrolled in at least 9 hours of study. Most of them are in bed by 10:00 each night.

Working in the program causes some unique problems for the students. Because of the long hours involved in the turtle study, "few of us (the students) can work at a regular paying job," commented Gouviea, who is the student in charge of the program.

"It can get tough without a regular paycheck," he added.

The Honda ATC's that the workers ride to patrol the beach are tough little bikes; they can carry two people and their gear up and down the beach through either the surf or sand. The ATV's are not indestructible, though.

The three-wheeler being used right now is heavily rusted, and the other three-wheeler is needing a new chain and some mechanical work. Gouviea said that a local corporation may donate a new trike to the program in the near future, but nothing has been finalized. "The sand and water kill these things," said Gouviea. "This one doesn't even have brakes."

The boat used by the workers is owned by the University.

The three-wheeler is kept in the fourteen-foot Boston Whaler outboard skiff the workers use to get to Masonboro Island and that is where Joe Gouviea and the other "Turtle Chasers" come in.

Once the boat is grounded and tied up, the three-wheeler is unloaded using ramps made from single pieces of lumber.

"The hard part is loading the bike when you're finished," said Gouviea. "One of the guys almost got hurt the other bike tried to go over the stern of the boat."

Gouviea smiled when he recalled several misadventures involving the Hondas, especially one time that resulted in the skiff being grounded until high tide.

"It was when one of the girls and I came out here to check nests one morning," he said.

"The chain on the bike broke as we stopped to check a nest," he said. "The nest was okay where it was, so we didn't have to move it."

"We ended up running back to town and getting the girl's earth cruiser (wide-tired bicycle). She rode the bike to the north end and I walked the south," he said sheepishly. "We got finished about four o'clock that afternoon."

"Since the Honda was so far from the boat, I decided to go back to the boat and take it to a little cove that was closer to the bike...where we wouldn't have to push it as far."

When they finally managed to get back to the cove with the motorcycle, the tide had gone out and left the boat high and dry.

"We had to wait for the tide to come back in," he said, shaking his head at the memory. "It was a long day."

Gouviea also recalled the time in early spring when Dr. Webster was checking the beach right along the low tide line. The trike hit a patch of water and hydroplaned, resulting in Dr. Webster having to continue the patrol in soaking wet clothes. The water temperature was about 58° that morning.

A typical morning's patrol begins around 6:00. Working in pairs, the workers will check the ground and air temperature and any rainfall at a "control dune". The control dune's instruments are identical to those at the nesting sites and give an idea about any weather activity that has taken place in the past twenty-four hours.

The control dune is also the only place where above-ground instruments such as the rain gauge and thermometer have been disturbed or vandalized.

Gouviea pointed out that usually none of the damage is malicious or intentional.

"Somebody walks up and sees this plastic cup (the rain gauge) and immediately picks it up. If there is any water in it, they'll pour it out, thus ruining our information."

"Occasionally people will put it back," he commented, "but most will just throw the cup away. Those things cost about two bucks apiece, and we don't have that to spare."

After checking in at the control dune, the workers then check the beach for any signs of nesting turtles, such as the tracks made when the animal crawls up the beach to build a nest. They will also check the ground temperature around the nests using five sensors located at various depths and locations around the nest.

According to some experts, an average temperature of about 30° centigrade is necessary for an even number of male and female hatchlings. Lower will result in more males, higher in more females. Temperatures, rainfall, and other factors can drastically affect the number of turtles who survive or even hatch, and knowing this data can give workers a chance to estimate survival rates.

With the help of a loggerhead expert from the University of Toronto, the workers here will try to determine the sex of each turtle after hatching, thus hopefully gaining more data on the survival rate of both the individual turtles and the species as a whole.

Nests that have to be moved are camouflaged to inhibit vandalism and the curious and marked so that only the workers can find them.

As the Honda was scooting down the beach at about fifteen miles an hour, a ghost crab reared its oversized claws at the Honda as if to pick a fight. Gouviea raised his thumb and forefinger in an imaginary pistol and "Bang!" as the crab skittered into its hole.

"Those and the tides are these turtles' worst enemies," he said over the roar of the ATV's engine. "If the tides don't wash the eggs away, it seems like the crabs will tear'em apart as they come out of the ground."

Even while battling the tides, inclement weather ("Nobody likes to go out when it's pouring rain," said Dr. Webster, "but we have to anyway.") and the hungry shore animals that have no sympathy for an endangered species, Gouviea said he has many fond memories of turtle-chasing.

"Once we missed a nesting female by only a few minutes," he said. "I wish I could have seen her come in."

"Another time we arrived right as the hatchlings were coming out of the nest. It was a really great sight."

There are generally around thirty nests in a season on Masonboro, but there have been as many as 200 nests in a season on Bald Head Island, where another grad student, Bill Brooks, handles the turtle patrols. Bald Head Island is the largest turtle nesting ground in the state.

This particular morning there were no new nests or false crawls (when a female comes ashore but doesn't nest) and Gouviea was loading the boat back onto the trailer at the Wrightsville Beach Access Area by 8:30.

Gouviea was thoughtful when asked how he felt about his work.

"Sometimes, when you don't get back until four or five in the afternoon, and you haven't eaten since four that morning, you can wonder why you do this. But when you see the baby turtles crawling up out of the sand, you don't wonder anymore."

"It's a really great feeling."

Advancement office shows community more of UNCW

By Jennibeth Kennedy, Staff Writer

University Advancement deals with public relations for the university and its members. It offers a wide variety of services - alumni programs, media coverage for the university, it solicits private funding and it works to enhance the prestige as well as the public image of our university.

University Advancement effects students in many ways. By soliciting private funding from donors, scholarships can be established, special programs can be developed, land can be donated for new buildings - the possibilities are endless.

University Advancement also keeps the media up to date on recent happenings within the university. It sends news releases about the university, faculty and students. Special honors such as awards, Dean's List, scholarships and even graduation announcements are sent to the hometowns of students, as well as other media sources around the state. Professors are recognized for their accomplishments and campus events are advertised through University Advancement.

University Advancement offers programs for alumni, to keep them in touch with the university and up to date on the latest happenings on campus. Pre-game socials for alumni are sponsored by University Advancement, to keep Seahawk spirit high and to increase alumni support to the university.

University Advancement works hard to maintain its outstanding image to the public. Members of the University Advancement office have given speeches to local civic meetings, entertained hundreds at luncheons, banquets and receptions, and have involved themselves in a variety of causes in support of the university as well as the city of Wilmington.

As well as showing the public, University Advancement seeks to train students in the manner of good public relations. Through the Ambassadors, a student group sponsored by Advancement, students have the chance to gain first hand experience in hosting and meeting important individuals as well as gaining a more in depth knowledge of university structure itself. By involving themselves with university functions, Ambassadors gain important public relations skills which in turn helps them toward their degree.

University Advancement is a wide range of programs that affect everyone involved with UNCW. As students can see, University Advancement can be beneficial to them from their first year as a freshman to their many years as alumni.

Miss North Carolina Teen.

She got the idea of entering a pageant from a newspaper advertisement and thought it sounded like fun as well as a good way to meet new people. In her two competitions she has been very successful and is looking forward to the Miss North Carolina pageant. This is the second year of the Miss UNCW winner is able to advance to statewide competition.

The girls will be competing in four areas: interview, swimsuit, evening gown and talent. There will be several nights of preliminary competition and the final night, Saturday June 20th, the top ten finalists will be chosen. They will then perform in all four areas again, which will be televised, after which the new Miss North Carolina will be crowned.

Responsibility is a two - way street — or it takes two to tango

With the ever-increasing — more mature, if you will — awareness of America's sexuality, it has taken a surprising amount of time for one of the final stereotypes to be broken down — the idea that everything from pregnancy to disease is the man's fault.

Posters, pamphlets and billboards have continually depicted a young male with a lecherous smile on his face with his arms around a confused looking young girl. The posters, etc. are usually emblazoned with some phrase reminding girls to defend themselves, that their future is at stake, etc.

But now there is at least one poster in the Union that shows just the opposite situation.

The poster shows the same young man and woman as always, but the punch line is "Don't worry, I won't get pregnant."

It almost gives the impression that someone has finally realized that in many cases it is a joint lack of responsibility that results in an abortion, the birth of an unwanted child, or in some cases, the contraction of a deadly fatal disease. Is this realization possible? Have we finally gotten over the idea that it is all the man's fault, that the woman has no responsibility in the matter?

Before you burn us in effigy, we are not saying that all the blame lies on either sex; indeed, it may lie somewhat more on the male than the female but it still takes two to tango (or tangle...).

The Kinsey Report recently showed that as many women as men are now admitting to have had sex outside whatever permanent / semi-permanent relationship (marriage or otherwise) they are involved in.

Even with all the quite justifiable scare tactics regarding AIDS, Herpes, chlamydia and the old standbys of syphilis and gonorrhea, there are still untold numbers of people engaging in sex with any Tom, Dick or Harriet that is handy (no pun intended.) Visit your favorite bar and look around if you don't think so.

If we have offended you, this editorial wasn't intended that way. Sometimes it is necessary to step on a few toes to get the point across.

Everyone doesn't "sleep around"; nor do all males (or females) walk around with a gleam in their eye, lust in their heart, and HIV in their bloodstreams.

And we would wager that a slight majority of you out there are smart enough to say "no" if you mean it, and to know the consequences of saying "yes" should you do so.

It's just about time that everyone realized the fact that both parties are responsible. — JW

Iran: Picking a fight with us

Are we heading for war?

Does the Persian Gulf represent the next American battlefield?

It is certainly the most likely place for a squabble, much more so than Nicaragua.

Iran, our nemesis since the fall of the Shah and the 444 day hostage situation in 1979-80. Now, with Iran reportedly holding the newest eight American hostages that were once held in Lebanon, Iran and the United States seem to be on a collision course.

Iran, at war for almost eight years with Iraq, has been the instigator in the world of terrorism and for the second time this decade, may influence the election of our President.

But it is the recent events that point to a future collision.

A week ago, Iran said they were going to employ surface-to-ship missiles in the Persian Gulf. The U.S. countered by threatening to initiate a pre-emptive strike so those missiles would not endanger the ships that have begun escort service to Kuwait oil tankers.

Now Iran has eight U.S. citizens as hostages. They plan to put the hostages on trial, while the U.S. policy states that Iran is now responsible for the well-being of the hostages.

Most people would think if we got involved with Iran in a shooting war, the Russians would also find a way to get involved. Not necessarily the case.

The Russians would like nothing better than the U.S. to pay for the demolition of the Iranian regime. Both would like to see the Ayatollah Khomeini knocked from power, so each could put in their own style of government. The Russians are especially keen on having Iran lose their war with Iraq, because they could then put a pro-Soviet government in power. This would give the Soviet Union access to the fertile Iranian oil fields and the Persian Gulf.

But what are the aims of U.S. foreign policy?

It seems to be playing big brother in keeping the Persian Gulf open to shipping. They also are following the Soviets in supporting the Iraqis over Iran.

But the key is the Iranians are putting American hostages on trial.

Remember Jimmy Carter's blunder in handling the Iranian Hostage Crisis in 1979-80? Remember how it turned into a political issue concerning Carter's soft reaction and Reagan preaching of what he would do, going in John Wayne style?

Now is time to see if Reagan will actually lead us into a shooting war with Iran. He used force with Libya, why not with the more evil Iranians? He has always been called "The Old Man on the button." Now we will see how the "Old Cowboy" handles this villain. The Iranians are deserving and aren't we tired of being pushed around by religious fanatics? — MS

A really special Papa gives us a really special column

There's an man about 70 years old who lives in a small town about a hundred miles from here. He drives sixty-five miles a day back and forth to work at a small newspaper in another small town about sixty miles from Wilmington.

He likes big cars — pre-1975 Oldsmobiles and Chryslers — because even if they suck gas they are "solid." He always wears a suit and tie to work. The tie has always been deep red, matching the suspenders that hold up his suit pants. There is always a white hankerchief in the breast pocket. He always wears brogue-type dress shoes that are nearly impossible to find nowadays.

In the summer, he wears a handmade Panama hat that has exactly the right brim and crown and took dozens of shopping trips to find. In the winter, he wears either a fifty-year old Stetson or a grey fedora that his grandchildren call an "Indiana Jones hat."

He has fathered three children, and been a stepfather to four more. One of those children came along almost as an afterthought — he has grandchildren who are older than his youngest son.

He religiously gets his hair cut every two weeks, and the only days he doesn't shave are on lazy weekends or when he is sick.

His skin is scarred from farmwork, a decade in a hardware store, and managing a baseball team, but mostly the scars are from thirty or more of using what was called "hot" type from back in the days when every line, every character, every space that you read in a newspaper had been molded from hot lead, placed in a wooden carrier, and eventually coated in ink and printed. To keep lead in a liquid form requires temperatures several times the boiling point of water. Sometimes, that lead would spatter, and a tiny drop would burn its way into the typesetter's skin.

He now uses a computer that cost more than the entire first newspaper he ever worked on — equipment and all.

Since he began working for newspapers, he has sold advertising, taken pictures, written innumerable news stories on everything from drug raids to murder trials to bee farms. He has been shot at, bored stiff, cussed out, talked about, yelled at, peed on and pissed off more times than he likes to remember.

He has had to make decisions ranging from what goes on the front page to whether or not a story that could ruin someone should be printed.

He has interviewed drunks, baseball players, bee farmers, beauty queens, senators, and South African ambassadors.

His politics are conservative, and he is stubborn, but that is how old men are supposed to be.

He likes beagles (and all other dogs), cats (and all animals), and little children. He likes to sit in barber shops with other old men and talk about everything from cars to politics to music "like it was meant to be."

His father was killed in an unnecessary accident right after World War I; he was on his way to the home where his wife and child waited and he was hit by a trolley car in Washington D.C.

He met Charles Lindbergh after the Lone Eagle had just returned from France.

He lived through the Depression by playing saxophone in a traveling band.

He taught his youngest son how to fish, how to work with wood, the basics on throwing a curve ball, how to tell the difference between a 1934 and 1936 Chevrolet (the '36 has solid wheels, the '34 spokes) and a little bit about newspaper work.

He isn't perfect, and has never claimed to be.

He's my father, and you're damn right I'm proud him.

Reagan surprises us with this one

Reuther, the late chief of the United Auto Workers, was widely quoted as urging his followers to "carry on the fight for a Soviet America," and it appears that this is exactly what Brock, Ms. Collier and Schlossberg are trying to do.

Schlossberg is a declared enemy of right to work, and Brock has called the issue "irrelevant." If there is a more vital issue today I would appreciate Brock telling me what he thinks it is.

The unholy three are reported to be behind an effort by U.S.

Solicitor General Charles Fried to defeat right-to-work supporters in a Supreme Court case aimed at preventing misuse of compulsory workers' dues by union bosses to achieve their own self-serving ends.

I heard an old saying revived the other day. It seems the late ultra-liberal Frank Porter Graham, appointed to the U.S. Senate from North Carolina about the late 40s, was the first person I ever heard quoted as using it.

Graham, by the way, was soundly defeated by the fine late Sen. Willis Smith the only time he ever faced North Carolina voters.

That saying was "the right to work for nothing," implying that only through union activity could the worker make a decent living.

Well, most of the people who talk about long hours, starvation wages and terrible working conditions these days have read about them or been told about them by their fathers or grandfathers.

I lived through the worst of them, but never did I feel that if I couldn't do better for myself I would want or expect any union to do it for me.

At least of the money I made, little as it was, not a plugged nickel ever went to help elect a socialist to office or promote a left-wing social cause.

But with friends like Brock, Schlossberg, Ms. Collier and Fried, the workers surely don't need any enemies. — LTJ Features

Sports
Chatterwith
Matt Shanklin
Seahawk
Sports EditorTo repeat: a fading memory

With the Boston Celtics dethroned as NBA champs, a subject arises, "To repeat as champions."

The building of a dynasty.

Are they just relics in the past?

Very few teams have repeated as champions in their respective sports and few are likely in the future. Because of free agency, high-priced superstars, and the security that many players enjoy today, franchises are shackled in their efforts to build a long lasting winner.

As baseball's Whitey Herzog expressed, "Give me 24 players in the last year of their contracts and I'll give you a championship."

The St. Louis Cardinal manager hit a note that causes many in sports today to shudder. Players no longer look at their sport as a sport, but a business venture in which they are the commodity.

Players today seem to have their best years when their contracts are up for renewal. They figure one good year will bring them another 5-year contract that will also bring security.

A player should have security, but he also being paid to play the game, for the fans who are helping to pay his salary, and he should play 100% all the time.

Because the players have abused the situation, owners are drawing the line to free agency and high salaries. The complexion of sports is changing with the result being the lack of a truly dominant team.

In every sport the same case can be argued. In baseball, no team has repeated as champs since the 1977-78 New York Yankees and only Kansas City has repeated as divisional champions.

In football, no team since the Pittsburgh Steeler teams of the 70's has repeated, although the Washington Redskins have made it to the Super Bowl on consecutive years.

In basketball, no team since the 1968-69 Boston Celtics has defended the title successfully.

Hockey is the only exception, but the dynasty teams may be fading because for the first time in ages, a team has not defended the title on two consecutive years. For hockey, this is quite an occurrence.

For sports fans, it brings about sheer glory. Parity is finally coming to professional sports. At the beginning of every season, more than just one team has the chance to sip champagne at the season's end.

For the television executives it brings about closer pennant races and more exciting seasons. More interest in brought about by the fact the local team is now a contending squad, unable to compete with the traditional powers.

But the question that must be answered is, "Is the public actually getting their money's worth when they go to a game or watch it on television. Are today's athlete's giving it all or saving themselves for the last year of their contract?"

If this is the case, the business aspect of sports is diluting the competitive aspect of the games. That spells only one thing, "THE FAN IS GETTING RIPPED OFF."

Nike sponsored camp draws 150 youths to Trask

Michael Jordan Camp arrives at UNCW

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

The 1987 Nike/Michael Jordan Basketball Camp opened Sunday in Trask Coliseum with 150 youngsters, grades 5-12 receiving personal attention from a large number of coaches and players.

The camp is directed by Nike representative Ed Janka and assisted by UNCW head coach Robert McPherson.

The camp is one of two that Jordan and Nike will put on this summer. In July, Jordan will engineer a camp in the Chicago area at Illinois Benedictine College.

Jordan, the National Basketball Association's scoring champion, grew up in the Port City and attended local schools. He went on to become a star in leading UNC

Chapel Hill to the 1982 national championship and is enjoying a fine career with the Chicago Bulls.

Besides Jordan, fellow pro Rod Higgins (Golden State Warriors) is also among the celebrity instructors.

College stars Scotty Williams (North Carolina), Steve Bucknall (North Carolina) Sean Elliott (Arizona) and UNC Wilmington's own Brian Rowsom.

The coaching contingent includes McPherson and his assistants Bob Rosenkranz, Cletus Green, and Lee Hood.

The camp, which will run through Friday afternoon in Trask and Hanover, is open to the public. All spectators can view the practices and games in the balcony areas of each gym.

Practices are held everyday, beginning at 9:00 a.m. and lasting until 8:30 p.m.

Four Olympians lead
USOF-87 diving field

from staff reports

Research Triangle Park, N.C. -- U.S. Olympic Festival '87 will feature the best divers in the country, as five-time world champion Greg Louganis and three silver medalists from the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics embark on the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, South Korea.

Louganis will be appearing in his sixth consecutive Festival, having won a combined total of 11 gold medals in the previous five competitions. The 27-year-old Olympic gold medalist has won an amazing 41 national titles.

Other Olympic divers who will be competing in U.S. Olympic Festival are Kelly McCormick, Michele Mitchell and Bruce Kimball. All three won silver medals at the '84 L.A. Games.

"We're not only looking forward to the best in the nation being here, but also the best in the world," said Gary Bowers, the local diving coordinator for U.S. Olympic Festival.

Diving is one of 34 sports in U.S. Olympic Festival, to be held July 13-26 in Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill, Cary and Greensboro. Nearly 3,000 of the nation's top amateur athletes and more than 300,000 spectators are expected to attend, making U.S. Olympic Festival the largest single event in North Carolina history.

U.S. Olympic Festival diving will be held July 16-19 at Candler Swim Club in Raleigh. The diving events will feature three-meter springboard and 10-meter platform competitions.

Louganis, recognized as one of the all-time greats in his sport, got off to a shaky start in 1987 when he was upset in all three events (the one- and three-meter springboard competitions, and the 10-meter platform) at the 1987 Phillips/U.S. Diving Championships. But he then came back one week later to win the three-meter springboard competition to win an individual title at the 1987 FINA World Cup Championships in Holland. The only American to win an individual title at the World Cup, Louganis also helped the United States win the team title with 374 points, ahead of China (372 points) and the Soviet Union (363 points).

The 27-year-old Louganis' achievements are well-documented and unequalled. At the '84 Olympics, he became the first diver in history to break the 700-points barrier, earning 710.91 points in winning the platform title, and 754.41 points for the springboard gold medal. As a 16-year-old at the 1976 Montreal Olympics, Louganis captured the silver medal on the platform.

From then on, it has been almost all gold for the 1987 Jesse Owen's International Athlete of the Year award winner. Louganis is a five-time FINA World Cup champion, and a 1979 and 1983 Pan American Games double gold medalist.

His success at the U.S. Olympic Festivals has also been unsurpassed. Louganis won his first Festival gold medal in 1979 and, since 1982, has swept the men's diving events for a total count of 11 medals. He has only won the silver medal draped around his neck once, in 1981.

A resident of Malibu, Calif., who trains in Boca Raton, Fla., Louganis will dive for the East team at U.S. Olympic Festival.

In Louganis' shadow in the platform competition for the past decade has been 24-year-old Bruce Kimball of Ann Arbor, Mich., the '84 Olympic silver medalist and holder of six U.S. Olympic 10-meter titles. Kimball, who will compete for the North team at U.S. Olympic Festival (where his father, Dick Kimball, is head coach), placed third in both the 1987 U.S. national championships and World Cup platform finals.

In Festival competition, Kimball has been right on Louganis' heels with silver medals in 1979, '82, '83, and '86. Kimball also captured the platform silver medal at the 1983 Pan Am Games behind Louganis.

A third legitimate contender for a USOF-'87 gold medal is Kent Ferguson, 24, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the 1987 U.S. springboard champion who dethroned Louganis by a convincing 20-point margin. The 1987 FINA World Cup bronze medalist in the men's three-meter springboard, Ferguson will dive for the East team in North Carolina next month.

Although he is a three-time Festival participant, Ferguson's only medal was a bronze in the springboard at USOF-'86 last summer in Houston.

The East women's diving squad includes Olympians Michele Mitchell, 25, of Scottsdale, Ariz., and Megan Meyer, 25, of Ashland, Ky. Mitchell, who has won eight U.S. national titles, captured the '84 Olympic platform silver medal. Meyer was also the national runner-up on the one-meter springboard.

Mitchell is the two-time defending Festival champion in both the springboard and platform events. Meyer was the '82 Festival springboard champion and the platform silver medalist at the '83 Festival.

Another diver expected to vie for medals with Mitchell and Meyer is 27-year-old Kelly McCormick of Long Beach, Calif. McCormick, the '84 U.S. Diving springboard champion, McCormick is also the defending Pan American Games springboard champion.

ESPN to televise a record 43 hours of Olympic Festival

from staff reports

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. — ESPN will televise live a record 43 hours from U.S. Olympic Festival-'87, the cable sports network recently announced.

In its third consecutive year of televising the Festival, ESPN will cover 17 sports live. There also will be "Page Two" feature reports on all 34 USOF-'87 sports.

U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 will be held July 13-26 in Raleigh, Durham, Chapel Hill, Cary and Greensboro. Nearly 3,000 of the nation's top amateur athletes and more than 300,000 spectators are expected to attend, making U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 the largest single event in North Carolina history.

Approximately 31.5 hours of live coverage will be in prime time, and another 11.5 hours will be on live weekend afternoons. This is the most hours of live coverage in Festival history; the previous high was 39 hours in Baton Rouge in 1985. In total, more than 110 hours of USOF-'87 will be carried either live or taped on ESPN.

"We believe this is the most live hours of coverage any event held in North Carolina has ever received," said Hill Carrow, executive director of North Carolina Amateur Sports, the local organizing committee for U.S. Olympic Festival-'87.

"ESPN's coverage will allow many of those unable to attend U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 the opportunity to see some of the activities. And the taped portions will allow spectators to see what they missed at other venues while they were attending a Festival event."

Carrow stressed, however, that viewing U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 on television will not be the same as being there.

"For the outstanding job ESPN does each year with the Festival, there's just no way television can capture all of the excitement and the emotion that comes with a U.S. Olympic Festival," Carrow said. "People cannot take full advantage of the opportunity U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 offers by just sitting at home."

Senate reprimands two for absences

By Jefferson Weaver,
Editor in Chief

Two senators were reprimanded at Monday night's Senate meeting due to absences.

Dawn Clodfelter and Shannon Wooten were recommended for reprimand for lack of sufficient attendance by the Senate Judiciary Committee, headed by Junior class senator Robert L. Smith. The Senate approved the motion.

A reprimand entails a warning by the senate and a report of the reprimand in the

Writing Place offers help for all — regardless of skill

By Wendy Williams,
Staff Writer

The Writing Place is a project designed to help students with any kind of writing assignment they might have, and offers the use of five word processors as an aid in writing papers. It is located in Morton Hall upstairs and is funded by UNCW's English Department.

Tom MacLennan, director of the project since 1984, says that he feels that it has been good. He takes a great interest in what students think of their visit, and before each student leaves, he is asked to complete an evaluation of The Writing Place.

The evaluation is not lengthy or difficult, just a simple multiple-choice questionnaire which asks questions like, "was the receptionist courteous and helpful in your attempt to schedule an appointment?"

MacLennan says that even though resources are limited, he is always looking for ways to expand the effectiveness of The Writing Place. For example, students can also go to The Writing Place for help in textbook reading assignments.

There are three kinds of tutors at The Writing Place: Faculty tutors, community tutors, which includes freelance writers and English teachers from the community, and student tutors. MacLennan says that everyone involved with The Writing Place is "intimately involved with writing."

The Writing Place is open to students of all levels, not simply people who are having trouble with writing.

Faculty members use it, people applying for graduate school, anyone.

MacLennan says that "It is healthy for writers to get feedback," adding that even skilled writers might want to go to The Writing Place as a way to have their work critiqued.

The number to call to schedule an appointment with a tutor is 395-3549. Although appointments are

LivWell '87 offers healthy alternatives

By Jennibeth Kennedy, UNCW
News

"LivWell '87," a health promotion event for UNCW students, faculty and staff will be held from 10 a.m.-2 p.m., Wednesday, Sept. 30 in front of the University Union. "LivWell '87" will consist of a variety of events focused on the responsibility of maintaining one's health.

The event is sponsored by the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center and is being coordinated by Deborah Haywood, coordinator, office of health promotion.

The events and exhibits will focus on wellness within six dimensions: physical/nutritional, social/environmental, intellectual, occupational, spiritual and emotional.

Within each dimension, students are encouraged to participate in a variety of events. For example, UNCW nursing students will take vital signs such as blood pressure and heart rates in front of the Union. There will also be cholesterol checks, information on substance abuse, stress management, and other social issues related to health.

According to Haywood, this year's wellness promotion has included a lot of much support from many non-profit community agencies. Also, Dr. Jerry Shinn and the Museum of World Cultures will be a new addition to LivWell '87."

One ship came in and another went down to kick off the events surrounding Marine Expo '87, which began last week.

Cape Fear Technical Institute helped begin Wilmington's celebration of its marine resources with the sinking of the floating classroom building Alton Lennon 18 miles off the coast. Explosives set into the hull of the submarine tender turned classroom, but the detonators were left onshore.

A smaller boat was sent back for the detonators, and that boat broke down on the trip back out to the site.

ROTC awards scholarships

By Jefferson Weaver,
Editor in Chief

UNCW's Dept. of Military Science held its fall awards ceremony in King Auditorium Sept. 15, with guest speaker Col. Charles Bullard of Sunny Point Military Ocean Terminal telling the cadets that there was "no limit to their potential."

Col. Bullard cited such examples as a general in Europe who graduated in an Army ROTC program and is now next in line for the command of all U.S. forces in Europe.

"You may not believe it now," he said, "as you are trying to juggle ROTC, a full class load, and still have some fun time, but all your hard work can and will pay off."

Nine scholarships were distributed to juniors and sophomores who competed on a national basis before being judged by a panel of cadre and their peers on everything from academics to extra curricular activities. The

Minor fire reported in woods on campus

By Susie Witkege,
Staff Writer

A University employee was apprehended this past Friday for repeatedly making annoying phone calls from Hoggard Hall. The case is unrelated to last week's reports regarding a male caller who impersonated a female subject.

The subject was reported to have made obscene and threatening phone calls to a female employee in Hoggard Hall.

A female student was transported to Cape Fear Memorial Hospital last Thursday due to excessive alcohol intake.

The northwest corner of the campus' woods was set on fire this past weekend of unknown origin.

A resident of 304 Galloway Hall was cited to the Office of Residence Life for shooting off fireworks from his dorm room.

This past weekend a non-student was caught stealing a license plate off of a vehicle parked in "K" parking lot. The subject was apprehended and charged with Careless and Reckless Operation, Larceny, Assault on a Law Enforcement Officer, Failure to Stop for Blue Light and Siren and Failure to Stop at Stop Sign. The subject was placed in the New Hanover County Jail.

One of the residents of apartment H 203 was playing loud music this weekend and reported to police as an annoyance. Several road signs were confiscated from the apartment and a resident was cited to the Dean's Office.

A resident of first floor Belk Hall received several harassing phone calls on Friday. The caller made the call and refused to speak to the victim.

Folk dance/bible study to be taught here

A unique course combining Israeli folk dance and a Bible study will be taught at the YWCA, 2815 S. College Road. Classes will be held on Tuesdays, September 22 through November 10, from 10:00-11:00 a.m. Susanne Feske is the instructor for the course.

"Israel Folk Dance" features step-by-step dance instruction and a Bible study in Davidic worship. Outlined in the Bible study is a scriptural basis for ministering to the Lord in dance.

Cost for this program is $16 for 8 lessons plus a YWCA membership of $15. For more information call the YWCA at 799-6820 or come by the office at 2815 S. College Road.

Who's Who now being accepted

The application/nomination process for the 1987-88 Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges is underway. Faculty and staff are encouraged to nominate or sponsor juniors or seniors deserving of this honor. Nominations should be submitted to Cindy Zeiler in the student activities office located in UU-202.

NC Writer's Network to meet Nov. 13-15

One of the largest gatherings of writers in the Southeast in recent years will take place this autumn at Wrightsville Beach, N.C., when the North Carolina Writers' Network holds its fall conference, November 13-15, featuring more than a dozen noted writers and editors.

Keynote speaker for the event is Linton Weeks, founding editor of Southern Magazine, which made its debut a year ago with a promise to write about the "real" South, and now boasts more than 200,000 subscribers. Joining him will be Madeleine Costigan, assistant fiction editor at McCall's, literary agent Jean Naggar (best known for selling Jean Auel's Clan of the Cave Bear), and ten well-known Southern writers who will teach workshops in their respective fields.

Among the North Carolina writers on the program are science fiction writer John Kessel, who won a 1982 Nebula Award; poets Evalyn P. Gill and Shelby Stephenson, who edit International Poetry Review and Pembroke Review, respectively; novelist Nancy Tilly, recipient of an AAUW Literature Award; playwright Phil Hines, administrator of the Playwrights' Fund of North Carolina; children's writer Cathy Warren, whose fifth book will come out next spring; poet Jaki Shelton Green, author of three poetry collections; and Jo Ann Algermissen, who has had more than 30 romance novels published by Dell, Harlequin and Silhouette. Teaching nonfiction at the conference will be Michael Byrd, editor of Encore Magazine, and Anne Russell, author of two nonfiction books and a longtime journalist.

The North Carolina Writers' Network, which is sponsoring the event, is a statewide writers' support group with more than 600 members--the only statewide organization of its kind in the nation.

The conference is open to anyone. For a brochure, write NCWN, PO Box 1207, Wilmington, N.C. 28402.

Monitor anchor to be featured at Expo

As part of the Marine Expo '87 celebration, Patric Doney, North Carolina Secretary of Cultural Resources, will officially unveil the USS MONITOR anchor on Sept. 29, 1987 at the USS MONITOR MEMORIAL. The ceremony will take place at 10:00 am in the Visitor's Center exhibition area.

According to Michael Mulcahy, Assistant Project Manager of the USS MONITOR Project, "The Monitor captured worldwide attention when she clashed with the Confederate ironclad, CSS VIRGINIA (ex-USS MERRIMACK). Her thick iron armor, rotating gun turret and a host of innovative engineering features rendered her a formidable warship, and although her confrontation with the VIRGINIA was generally regarded as a draw, naval warfare was revolutionized by the four-hour battle on March 9, 1862.

From that day forward, only an ironclad could defend a wooden fleet against another ironclad. When the MONITOR sank in a gale off Cape Hatteras nine months later, her fame as the ship that saved the Union became legendary."

In August 1973, the MONITOR's wreckage was discovered 16 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras; approximately 130 artifacts ranging from the ship's anchor to soap dishes have now become legendary.

The MONITOR anchor will be on display at the USS NORTH CAROLINA Battleship Memorial for two weeks. There is no charge for this display.

Lewis Grizzard

says, "God tawks like we do."

September 30,

It has come to my attention, ladies and gentlemen, that theah is a scurrilous monstah in ouah midst — a monstah which is slowly robbin' us of ouah heritage. I speak of the slow but sure disappearance of the Southern dialect — the right way to talk.

I mean, really, folks. If I may steal from Lewis Grizzard, there ain't nothin' wrong with the way we Southerners talk. God talks like we do.

Because some of you may not be familiar with the complexities and intricacies of the finer language known as Southern English, I have taken it upon myself to help explain a few of the statements, colloquialisms, and words that many of us in the South use regularly, taking for granted that everyone else understands what we mean.

Often times, someone of Newthorn persuasion may overhear a conversation between two folk of Southern perfection (I mean, persuasion) and wander away in disgust because the former is incapable of understanding the latter.

Because the former is occasionally prone to making slightly snide remarks about the voice and diction of the latter, the former can often end up broken and bleeding on a sidewalk somewhere for making an inappropriate statement towards the latter. Since I have a bit of a chivalrous streak in me, I occasionally stop to help these poor individuals. I figured it would be easier to write a column addressing the problem rather than trying to get blood stains out of another of my white linen suits. Some of these phrases are:

'Go down to' or 'down 'roun' or 'down there.' Down does not necessarily mean to go the opposite of up when you are down South. I have several relatives who live down in Virginia; I also have relatives who live down in Louisiana.

"We decided to go fishin' down 'roun' the pier at Surf City" is an example of using this phrase. A close relative of down there is yonder.

The Southwestern dialect is advanced so far ahead of other, lesser American speech patterns that we actually have a word that can mean a distance of anywhere from twenty feet to three hundred miles. That ever so handy word is yonder.

I know an elderly lady who has a son "in the Service," meaning the U.S. Army. When people ask where he is stationed, she says he is "Over yonder in South Korea." That does stretch it a bit.

A phrase which can occasionally get you in trouble is the classic parting statement "Y'all come see us."

Nine times out of ten, you don't necessarily mean for that person to actually come and see you. Problems can arise when an attached male type conversationally tells an unattached female type, "Come see us some time," especially if the female the gentleman is attached to answers the door and sees a strange, unattached female standing there; the situation can be disastrous if the attached female is of the jealous, violent type.

The greeting phrase "How ya'll doin'?" is a sincere one tough. If you are a male, it lets you know if the male you are speaking to had an unattached female show up on his doorstep last night. It also tells you how the attached female of the same household reacted.

"How ya'll doin' this mornin'?" "You really don't want to find out," he says removing the icepack from the bruise that covers most of that side of his head.

Some folks assume that when you say "Let's go out to eat" that you mean something ritzy or at least kind of fancy. That is not so. "Goin' out to eat" can very easily mean Chez Hardee's as well as Chez Francoise Snails and Other Things That Normal Folk Don't Eat.

Space doesn't really allow me to further explain the marvels of our language, but if ya'll want to come see us some time, we'll set out on the porch, have a mint julep and further discuss the way God talks.

Whose left to choose from? Not much...

As another of the Democratic Dominoes starts to fall, and Vice-President George Bush constantly reemphasizes his years of marriage and undying faithfulness to his wife and family, we begin to wonder.

Who (or what) is going to run for the President of the United States?

Mr. Biden's habit of stretching the truth is to be expected — after all, he is a politician (you probably thought we'd say Democrat, didn't you?) and that is standard fair.

However, stretching the truth a wee bit far, contradicting himself in another speech in the same state, and then admitting to having stolen parts of both speeches to begin with? As the Apollo astronaut said, "Ahh, we got a problem, Houston."

The Dems' other front runner, the so-called "yuppies" choice, had one fling too many, and down the tube he went, thanks to the Miami Enquirer (err, ahh, Herald).

Former Secretary Al Haig has the disturbing habit of telling the blunt, unpolished truth as he sees it, rather than what the fickle voters want to hear. Sure political suicide, even though he didn't officially announce his intentions.

Bless of Sam Nunn's heart, but after he chewed up and spit out the new American Hero on all four news networks (we refer to Ollie's Show this summer) he really didn't stand a chance anyway. Besides, after the Carter Fiasco, the rest of the country isn't ready for another Southern president. Hell, most Southerners aren't ready for another Southern President, unless it's Sen. Strom Thurmond, who seems to be a very unlikely candidate.

The field is playing down bit by bit, and what is becoming frightening is the fact that one critter in particular is shining through the tarnish of political mud-and-other-undesirable-substance-slinging.

We speak of none other than Rev. Pat Robertson.

The Rev comes from a family of politicians and preachers. He knows what he's doing — the TV commercials are plotted to catch just the right audience at the right times.

Rev Pat is a conservative of sorts — too much so for some of the younger new right, but begrudgingly capable of gaining the acceptance of the old right.

And he hasn't stolen a speech, cruised the Bahamas with the epitome of the word "bimbo," ditched his pregnant secretary in the Chesapeake Bay, or marched in the streets in a way that still disturbs many Americans.

The country is showing signs of wanting another conservative at the helm four another four years.

However, a ship steered by this old gent may not be able to continue to float — much less walk — on water. — JW

College Republicans reply to Ms. Stallings

To the Editor,

First of all, we would like to commend Miss Stallings on a well-written letter. We certainly respect her curiosity and admit to be partially at fault for the disruptive debate, but the young men who were seated at the "Support Bork" table were taken by surprise by Miss Stallings' defensive stance.

The College Republicans have been active for almost one hundred years, our members continuously hard at work, supporting the conservative doctrine and educating students on current issues. In 1984, college students gave President Reagan 61% of their vote, thanks to the labors of nation-wide CR's.

UNCW College Republicans is open for membership and hopes to maintain the reputation as an organization of fine, upstanding young Republicans. We invite anyone interested in our club, especially Rhonda Stallings, to come to our next meeting: Thursday, October 1, at 6:30 in the University Union.

"Please be quiet" asks serious student

To Whom it May Concern,

As I am almost certain this letter will fall on deaf ears, both faculty, staff and students alike, my only reason for writing it is to release frustration, anxiety and just plain anger. Short of standing in the middle of our supposed "place of study" and screaming at the top of my voice; which for those who know me is considerable, QUIET, this is the only way I can think of to get my point across. The library is a place to study & be quiet doing it. Those who wish group study have several options open to them including the study rooms, the Education room, ect. Those who wish to socialize need to go else where, please!

Don't take me wrong, there is nothing wrong with a few words to a friend, a consultation on study or just taking a break. But when laughing, socializing, making dates, roughhousing and loud talking continues for 20 to 30 minutes it's not study, it's damned inconsiderate.

I come to the Library to study and I try; but I find myself moving around looking for someplace to put down my books and read but no place is to be found. I feel like a one person crusade for quiet. I have been polite and asked people to be quiet, I have been pushy & told people to shut up all to now avail. Am I alone out here? Aren't there others who feel as I do?

I've talked to the librarians, who are very helpful and nice but their hands are tied. They have been told that all students have the right to use the library facilities without fear of reprimand, fines or restitution.

If you feel as I do or have any suggestion, please help. Help find a way to fight the inconsiderate, rude, and grade destroying plague that is taking over our library. If I had another quiet place to study — I would but for me the library is it folks — Let's have some cooperation, consideration and most of all quiet.

Let's hear from some of those people who have the same problem or from those who can offer eriable realistic solutions. And thank you for letting me get my beef off my chest.

Pres. King writes about football

To the Editor,

Over the past year, THE SEAHAWK has received well deserved praise from most everyone in the university community. Most of this praise is a result of THE SEAHAWK'S effort to cover every aspect of the university and get the newspaper out on time.

However, over the past few weeks, I have noticed at least two sports have been overlooked, football and rugby. While these are not Division I sports, they do send out very competitive club squads which have support from the students and the community.

I do realize that some of the matches and games occur on Saturday and that puts a squeeze on the paper, but if THE SEAHAWK writers can cover the SGA meeting on Monday night then the sports people should be able to cover games on time. Support the clubs and organizations on this campus, PLEASE.

Lee King
Student Body President

Mr. King,

We fully agree with your stance that teams like the rugby and football club teams should be covered, but there is only so much that we on the Seahawk sports staff can cover. If we commit ourselves into covering one club team, then others will come calling asking for similar treatment. It is not fair to cover the football team and forget the crew club. Since the Seahawks sports staff consists of only two persons, we thought the 16 Division I intercollegiate sports that UNCW fields deserve coverage first.

The club football team has requested coverage for two years now, but we have not been able to commit to them the coverage they want. They have been offered, as all clubs are, the right to furnish their own materials to us and we would run their story on the appropriate pages. This has not been followed up on.

Biden's no big loss

As far as I'm concerned there hasn't been a less important development in the world of politics for a long time than the withdrawal of Sen. Joe Biden from the race for the Democratic nomination for president.

In the first place, if there was any substantial amount of support for Biden it was kept a pretty good secret. I never saw that he was ever "a contender" as the media constantly called him.

His removal doesn't change the picture at all, except that there is one less lefty in a field made up exclusively of far-out left-wingers.

Like George Wallace used to say during his 1968 campaign, there isn't a dime's worth of difference between the whole bunch, and the election of any one of them will advance the course of socialism in the United States tremendously.

Supporters of the various Democratic hopefuls will try to make points for their men, or woman, but that's going to be a mighty tough job.

Everyone is contemptuous of state's rights, mistrustful of the free enterprise system and a faithful servant of the bosses of organized labor.

I came along during the days when "Republican" was a cussword in the South, but the parties have just about reversed their philosophies since then and there are now several Republican presidential possibilities with whom a traditional Southern conservative could live very comfortably.

As a matter of fact, with Sam Nunn out of the picture, the worst of those mentioned as the possible GOP nominee would be more acceptable to the traditional conservative than the best of the Democrats.

When a conservative

Democrat today says, during a political oration that the party's candidates "Stand for the principles in which we believe" that speaker is repudiating his own record, because most of them have voted against, or taken a stand against many of the objectives of the national party.

They also well know that the Reagan administration is not to blame for the nation's economic horrors, a legacy from a half century of practically uninterrupted domination of the Congress by liberals.

I can't see anywhere for a conservative, be he or she a Democrat or Republican, to go in 1988 except to the GOP ticket.

If this be treason, let us make the most of it. (Lest I be guilty of the Bidenesque offense of lifting a quote without crediting the source, I borrowed that one from Patrick Henry.)

The Other Side with Rick Cairns, columnist

Our columnist goes undercover — in Brendle's?

There's a new department store in town. Incredible! Somebody pinch me; I must be dreaming. Brendle's grand opening was definitely a gala event in Wilmington, and I was there. The whole experience nauseated me.

The store's exterior was still under construction. We all had to walk on wooden planks to get in the store. Construction workers milled all around doing whatever it is that construction workers do. I'm sure that Brendle's threatened them not to harass female customers with remarks about taking them out to dinner and a show. You know, things of that nature.

On second thought I didn't see one female that was under fifty years old, or under two-hundred pounds. Construction workers weren't likely to ask them out to dinner.

What is usually accompanying old, obese women? You got it, old, obese men. You know the type. He has always been proud of his gut, and always said things like: "Feel this; it's as hard a rock, pure muscle. A lot of work and money has gone into this — yep."

You would think that they were talking about a '61 mint-condition T-Bird. Not a mass of cellulite!

What was I doing in this glorified K-Mart? Well, I had to meet my grandma there. No, I ah, I was working under cover for my column. Yeah, that's it — I was spying on the place. I, ah, I was disguised as a customer. Yeah, that's the ticket. I was incognito.

My disguise wasn't very impressive though. I was the only young, thin person in the place, and I shouldn't have brought the tape-recorder. I bought a racket ball racket. (Sound redundant?) Why they sell them I don't know, since I was the only one there that could even swing one. (Remember, I wasn't really a customer.)

It seemed to me that nobody bought anything. The aisles were packed, but the cashiers looked like Maytag repair-men. The people were touching everything; it was like window shopping, except items could be touched.

As I was pretending to be a customer I heard comments such as: "Oh, how beautiful. What, $188.00? They want $200.00 for that piece of trash."

I heard a classy couple say, "Isn't that nice? Wouldn't that look nice in the den? If we had a den." "What do you mean a den? We don't even have a house!" "But wouldn't it look nice in the back seat?" This couple was big enough to eat bailed hay and almost as smart.

The grand opening was the most exciting news since James "Bonecrusher" Smith, and Tony Dow decided to honor Wilmington by participating in the Azalea Festival. I was wondering if K-Mart and Rose's looked like ghost towns during this grand opening.

Brendle's appears to be much like K-Mart, except for the fancy displays. Of course, this signifies higher prices. As much as K-Mart makes me shudder, at least you know what to expect: K-Mart-looking people and cheaper merchandise.

Of course, what would K-Mart be without a price check or two? If your timing is right you can catch a blue-light special.

"Attention K-Mart shoppers — for the next 15 minutes we have on aisle four — a combination orkscrew and mole remover. Regularly $29.95 now on sale for the incredibly low price of $0.49"

Studies have shown that for 20% of all babies, their first full sentence is — "attention K-Mart shoppers." I'm not kidding.

I read that a Walmart is coming to town. I'm counting the days. I've been contemplating setting up camp in the parking lot so that I could be the very first customer. See you at the grand opening.

Public Safety Notes with Joseph Johnson, Director of Public Safety

Bicycles are great but can be dangerous to riders and others

We have had a lot of discussion, both in this column and in "Letters to the Editor" here in the Seahawk about traffic and parking, but there has been very little mention of bicycles. Bicycles are an excellent alternative form of transportation. They are quick, they are light and they are fast.

A bicycle is a vehicle and is subject to the rules of the road. The University's Traffic and Parking Ordinances suggest that bicycles should not be on sidewalks because of the conflicts of bicycles and pedestrians. We recognize that our streets do not provide sufficient width to allow too many bicycles and too many cars to pass comfortably by and do not really blame the bicyclist for riding on the sidewalk.

Some of the big problems with bicycles that I have seen recently include riding people on handle bars, failing to stop at a pedestrian crosswalk for a pedestrian in the crosswalk, failing to stop at a street while on the sidewalk, driving at night without reflectors or lights, wreckless driving, speeding and failing to stop at stop signs. What the bicyclist needs to know is that each of these constitutes a traffic offense and the cyclist could receive a traffic citation.

Most of us grew up in quiet neighborhoods and we learned to ride our bicycles on very quiet streets, where the motorist coming through was very wary of small children on bikes and there was no great problem. This campus is very dense with traffic, pedestrians, cars, skateboards and bicycles. You cannot ride a bicycle on the campus the same way you could back home. The bottom line on this situation is that if bicyclists do not start following the rules of the road, the Department of Public Safety will have no choice but to begin some very strict enforcement against the bicyclist. This is not something we desire to do, but the number of accidents on sidewalks, the number of accidents on the streets involving bicyclists, is increasing. Just last week a young woman in her twenties, riding a bicycle in the City of Wilmington, was killed when she was hit by a car. We had a staff member hurt on this campus, when a bicyclist hit her. The cases go on and on. We urge all bicyclists to please use extreme caution as they ride on the campus.

This is Rape Awareness Week, we encourage all students to be aware of their rights and to know what the law on rape is. There will be many seminars dealing with the growing problem of "date rape", sometimes, called "acquaintance rape" and we encourage as many of you as possible to attend these sessions. We also want to encourage you to report situations where you are forced to have sex with someone that you do not want to. Reporting acquaintance rape does not require prosecution on your part, or appearing as a witness, but it does allow us to identify those persons who are forcing themselves illegally against our students. There are ways of dealing with these people, other than criminal prosecution. Please feel free to come to the Campus Police, Student Health and Wellness Center, Student Development Center, your Resident Assistant, or any of the many resources on campus that are here to assist you.

We still encourage your comments, suggestions and complaints and ask that you drop by, write us a note, or give us a call. We do want to serve the campus and the only way that we can measure our success is if we hear from you.

Stillpoint with Campus Minister Bob Haywood

LivWell '87 can help you help yourself in lots of ways

Sept. 30, is Live-Well '87! It is a chance for all of us to reflect on the six dimensions of our well being by participating in a variety of activities outside of the University Union between 10:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m.

This event brings to mind again my conviction of the importance of spirituality as one of the dimensions of the life of anyone who is interested in achieving some state of well being.

So many people seem to ignore or reject any sense of a spiritual life. As the wellness model suggests, along with our physical, occupational, social, intellectual, and emotional concerns, we are all spiritual beings as well. That is, we are all people who search for meaning and value in life in the context of our relationships to ultimate values or truth or God.

Don Ardell, one of the leaders in the wellness movement, describes certain capacities that reflect spiritual wellness, capacities without which our sense of well being would be completely diminished.

These are:

*to transcend difficulties in time and "explain" (mainly to and for yourself) apparent tragedies and injustices.

*to integrate different aspects of your existence, safeguarding the privacy of inner directions while being attuned to external signals and forces.

*to be aware of what you deem consequential meanings and worthy purposes in life with an attendant sense of responsibility for acting accordingly.

*to reach out to serve others (which unintentionally serve you and those around you about whom you deeply care).

*to sense genuine inner achievements in the face of circumstances that to others might represent failures.

*to find affirmations for your values/ethics/and purposes in creative work and fulfillment in the realms of beauty, art and nature.

*to realize that there are always choices and that heartfelt and secure convictions provide strength and serenity to live with your choices.

*to know with confidence that, more than anyone or anything else, you will decide what shall become of you, physically and emotionally.

*to seize the opportunity to be all that you can be all you can be — without having to join the Army!

These capacities relate to spirituality in its most general sense. Much more can and needs to be said about the importance of our understanding of and relationship to God. I'll save that for another time.

But for the present, in this general sense, consider how ignoring the development of these capacities would diminish the possibility of fulfilling the potential for well being. We simply are spiritual beings! We need to recognize and choose to attend to that dimension of our life.

Riverfest hosts Bo Diddley

The Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts, Inc. will be presenting the Originator, B O DIDDLEY and his special guests MIRRORS in two concerts on Riverfest Saturday, October 3, 1987 in historic Thalian Hall.

Diddley, a pioneer of Rock and Roll, started back in the days when not everyone welcomed the new music, when club owners feigned heart attacks to get out of paying the acts. Diddley's unique musical style was a major influence for many performers through the late 50's 60's 70's and straight through the 80's.

Born Elias Bates McDaniel, Bo got his nickname while in grammar school in Chicago. He began using it during one of his earlier careers, when he was an amateur boxer. Though he was formally trained on violin and trombone, Bo was given a guitar as a Christmas present when he was a child of ten and he taught himself to play.

By the late 40's he was a street musician with guitarist Earl Hooker in Chicago. Diddley's first indoor concerts were at the 708 Club in Chicago in 1951. Later in that decade, while Bo was playing at the Apollo Theatre in Harlem, a young man named Elvis Presley caught his act and came back to see him every night for one straight week!

In 1955 Bo signed on with Checker Records, perfecting the "Bo Diddley" beat that was to propel so many of his later hits "Mona", "Who Do You Love", and "Say Man", his hit of 1959, its spontaneous humor taped while Bo and his maracas palyer, Jerome Green, were kidding each other during a break from a recording session.

According to Bo's interview in Rolling Stone Magazine, his career almost came to a standstill after an appearance on the Ed Sullivan Show. "They had my name written on a piece of paper; my name is Bo Diddley, and I had a song called 'Bo Diddley'." (Sullivan had heard me singing "Sixteen Tons" (a Tennessee Ernie Ford hit) and wanted me to sing on the show. So I thought I was supposed to do two tunes. I went out there and sang "Bo Diddley" first...and he got mad.

In 1962, he gave a private performance at the White House for President and Mrs. John F. Kennedy. In the fall of 1963, Diddley toured Great Britain with the Everly Brothers on a bill that featured the Rolling Stones, making their first tour of their homeland.

After a brief detour from the entertainment industry, when Diddley became a sheriff in Los Lunas, New Mexico, his career expanded to include films and television. Diddley's music is featured on the soundtrack of Ralph Bakshi's 1971 animated film FRITZ THE CAT, and Diddley himself had a role in TRADING PLACES, the 1985 movie with Eddie Murphy and Dan Akroyd, portraying the pawnbroker who insisted Akroyd's watch was hot.

On January 21, 1987 B O Diddley was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, along with Roy Orbison, B.B. King, Marvin Gaye, and many others. The Rock and Roll Hall of Fame will eventually be built in Cleveland, Ohio, as a museum, archive, and library. Musicians become eligible for the Hall of Fame after 25 years in the business, a gap designed to provide perspective and keep the Hall of Fame out of Rock's current promotional machinery.

Today, after 30 years, Bo Diddley is still a working musician, performing regularly and drawing capacity crowds, his music as exhilarating as ever. The Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts, Inc. is proud to present this legendary artist during Wilmington's Annual Riverfest Celebration.

Diddley will give two concerts in Thalian Hall on Saturday, October 3, at 7:30 p.m. and at 9:30 p.m. Tickets are $15.00 and $10.00. For further information or reservations, call (919) 763-3398 or 763-9328. Box Office hours are Monday through Saturday from 10:00 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. and on Sunday from 1:00 p.m. until 5:00 p.m.

MUSICIAN Magazine sponsors Band Contest

How did Buddy Holly, The Beatles, and U2 get their first big breaks?

....Well, it wasn't MUSICIAN Magazine's best unsigned band contest. But it could have been.

It is with great pride and a tremendous mailbox that MUSICIAN announces the return of the Best Unsigned Band in America Contest. Bands and artists not currently signed to a record label are invited to send their original music for consideration by MUSICIAN's all-star panel of judges: artists/producers Elvis Costello, Mark Knopfler, T-Bone Burnett and Mitchell Froom.

The ten top-rated songs will be featured on a MUSICIAN/Warner Brothers compilation album. One grand prize winner, chosen as the cut above the rest, will receive a complete 8-Track home recording studio.

"We are excited to offer musicians this unique opportunity," says MUSICIAN Associate Publisher Paul Sacksman. "Our goal is to inspire and support today's players while providing them the chance to be heard by some of the most influential artists and decision makers in the music industry."

The compilation of all first place winners' songs will be distributed to music critics and to program directors and music directors at commercial and college radio stations. The Grand Prize package, donated by top-of-the-line professional audio manufacturers, includes Otari multi-track tape recorders, JBL studio monitors, a Soundcraft mixing console, a JBL/UREI power amp, plus Beyer Dynamic microphones, cables, and stands.

The winner of last year's contest, as chosen from over 3000 entries, was Dexter- a trio from Orange County, California. "After winning the opportunity to open for Adrian Belew and the Bears in Chicago, Dexter released a video, recorded their own independent album, and had a song picked up by Virgin recording artist Murray Head," says Dexter's manager, Steve McClintock. "All of this happened to the band because of the exposure they received by winning MUSICIAN's contest."

Information regarding this year's Best Unsigned Band Contest will be available at all leading music instrument stores, record stores, recording studios, and music schools. Radio stations will be notifying their listeners of the contest through the Album Network- a major AOR syndicator and tip sheet.

Entries are limited to one tape per band (maximum two songs per cassette), and must be received by December 15, 1987. Interested bands should consult the current issue of MUSICIAN for rules and entry forms.

Clair Rozier

Organ recital on Friday

Friday, October 2, 1987, at 8:00 p.m., organist Clair Rozier will perform music ranging from Baroque to 20th Century at Kenan Auditorium.

Musical style has experienced continual change. The program will cover almost three centuries of these changes ranging from Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D Minor (popularly known as Phantom of the Opera), written between 1700 and 1724, to modern composer William Albright's comic work, the King of Instruments: A Parade of Music and Verse for Organ and Narrator, written in 1983. The program will also include work by Simon Preston, Cesar Franck, and Georg Friedrich Handel.

Clair Rozier holds the Doctor of Musical Arts degree from the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, New York. She has studied with David Craighead, and later worked with Marie-Claire Alain, considered two of the world's finest organists. She has performed solo recitals in London, Paris, Washington, Baltimore, Cincinnati, and throughout North Carolina. Dr. Rozier is currently on the music faculty of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, and Organist/Choir Director at St. Andrew's-on-the Sound Episcopal Church.

This is one of many musical programs scheduled by the UNCW Creative Arts Department for the 1987-88 season. The program is free.

Arts Council seeks grant applicants

The Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear is seeking applications for 1,000.00 in Grassroots Grants for community arts programming that is new, creative and innovative. Any non-profit organization is eligible to apply. Criteria for this grant require that the project content and format be a new idea—something new for the organization and the community. The proposal must also conform to Grassroots guidelines set forth by the North Carolina Arts Council. Applications are available from the Arts Council at 20 Market Street. Application deadline is November 1, 1987 for projects to be completed by June 30, 1988.

"We're hoping to stimulate creative and innovative ideas with this grant money," said Amy Brannock, executive director of the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear. "Many organizations do wonderful arts programming, but tend to stick with projects that are tried and true. We'd like to see something original; perhaps something that develops new audiences for the arts, that provides opportunities for artists, reaches special populations—that type of thing. We also would like to encourage non-arts organizations to consider this funding if they are developing an arts-related project. The Arts Council would like to stimulate some group out in the community to go out on a limb a little."

The staff encourages interested parties to discuss the project with them prior to making an application. Assistance with developing the proposal is available. Applications will be judged competitively through a panel review process. All grants must be matched on a one to one ratio with cash by the applicant. For further information, call the Arts Council at 763-ARTS.

REVIEWS

Movies range from 'OK' to 'Skip it' to 'Flop' on scale.

By Anita Bradshaw

"Hellraiser" is focused around a box that is a combination of Pandora's box and a Rubik's cube. If the puzzle of opening the box is solved, demons immerse and proceed to take whoever opened the box to hell. The way to Hell is tortuous to state the process very mildly. Escape from the demons is possible, but extremely difficult.

Some elements of the movie just don't congeal, even for a horror movie. Be prepared to have to overlook a lot to be convinced that things are taking shape the way they are.

The visual effects are fantastic, most of the time. Some of the oo-and-goo of the condemned are a little too reminiscent of "Alien".

This was an o.k. movie, but not really great. Go see it if you have time, but don't mourn the loss if you can't. College Road Cinema-R.

"The Principal" stars James Belushi and Rae Dawn Chong with Louis Gossett, Jr. The story from the outset was doomed. It has the derelict principal of the derelict high school saving the derelict students of that school. Belushi's roles include teddy the tutor, Freddy the fearless, Dennis the dauntless and the list goes on. The story is just too pat. Nothing is surprising, especially not the ending. Belushi has an endless supply of facial expressions that are good for a few laughs, but that's about it. College Road Cinema-R.

"Three Kinds of Heat" is a number one flop. A real loser. The story has no potential and the acting is even worse. The plot—a clothes designer is smuggling gold in order to make gold dresses, so where does that leave the viewer? BORED!!

The dialogue can be equated with the old Sally, Dick, and Jane readers from the first grade. The fireworks at the end of the movie weren't even up to Wilmington's July 4th display.

Skip this one and wait for the re-runs of the contra hearings. Oleander Twin-R.

"The Pick-up Artist" with Molly Ringwald as Randi Jensen and Robert Downey as Jack Jericho was cute. There was really too much going on, in other words there were two different movies going on at the same time. Jericho and his girls was one story. Jensen could have been introduced as a girl he couldn't win over with his usual style. Fine, but that was not all. Jensen was very complicated, too complicated for the length of the film and for the type of film it was supposed to be.

It was o.k., average, mediocre, etc. Independence Mall Cinema-PG.

Your Horoscopes for this week

For Wednesday, Sept. 30, 1987.

Moon in Capricorn will stimulate your career ambitions; now you can even be a go-getter. But to get anywhere, you may have to appease your boss. Learn how to be a good servant before you try to run the whole show. Eccentric behavior won't go over very well. Toward the mark, and handle your responsibilities.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You're in a good groove, so keep it that way. Use your pull to push through your ideas. Your partners will be more sensitive to your criticism; don't be too hard on them. Your judgement is good.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You're vulnerable in matters of love, but it's better to be involved rather than not. Sort out your responsibilities, and let go of some of them. Your judgement is good.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You still have much to accomplish. Career matters prosper if you're willing to pull your weight. Your love life is getting established on a firm foundation.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Be as supportive of others as possible; you'll score lots of points. Capricorn are still the ones who understand you the best. Get sufficient rest.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Build your plans from the ground up, and leave nothing to chance. Superiors favor you, even if you make a mistake. You may be romantically attracted to someone much younger.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Although your personal life is of vital importance, you shouldn't neglect your career. It will be easier to get past some of your inhibitions. Buy and sell.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Today isn't the time to slack off; you should still put business before pleasure. Being organized counts; you need to know where everything is. Be more conservative in dress.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). It may be more difficult for you to tolerate the weakness of others. If you have political ambitions, you can now develop them. Save rather than spend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You feel a keen sense of responsibility toward your superiors; if not, you should. Handle practical matters in your stride. Keep your personal life on a firm foundation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Fate supports you. You feel a greater sense of inner and outer harmony. Important business decisions should now be made. Ask that special favor; you'll get it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You can't evade your duties. The boundaries of your relationships should be respected; know your partner's limits. Wait another day before you make a big request.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You get things accomplished effortlessly. Your love life should be based on a practical foundation. Others appreciate your time more than you know.

For Thursday, October 1, 1987.

Moon in Capricorn continues until 6:52 pm (PDT). Bring your work from the last two days to a successful conclusion. The evening brings a welcome change of pace. Your associations with others are then emphasized. If you get an idea to alter your lifestyles, act on it.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You'll be at your best from late morning to early afternoon. Friends are amazed at your persistence. In the evening. Develop business leads as best you can.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You've been taking care of business, and should be proud of yourself. An old friend may soon come back into your life. Don't take on any new obligations.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Hold off on making important decisions; you need more time. Your social life is about to take off again. Be joiner rather than a loner. Conserve your finances.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Superiors have been taking notice of your dependability; the rewards will be forthcoming. It may be better to stand pat financially. Love means being responsible for your actions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). In the evening, turn your attention away from work worries and direct it toward family and friends. Others love you more than you think. An investment pays off.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). An older and wiser associate steers you in the right direction. Take care of family obligations. Love and friendship will go hand in hand. Stay involved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You can still go further in your career; it's time you groom yourself for an executive position. The evening hours brings excitement over a new friendship.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You behind-the-scenes connections will be of help. Continue to develop your organizational skills. In the pm you're eager to relate to others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You're able to bring certain business matters to a successful conclusion. Take the direct approach instead of quibbling over words. Indulge yourself in the evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Concentrate on getting as much done as possible at work. In the evening, the moon enters your sign and you'll feel at your best. An important favor may be granted.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). It's better not to linger too long over any one thing. People are clamoring for your advice and attention. Use your psychic ability if words fail you.

For Friday, October 2, 1987.

Moon in Aquarius will renew your enthusiasm for both friendship and love. You get to be your characteristic self, and others will appreciate you for who you are. The free-wheeling atmosphere opens up new possibilities for you to relate to the opposite sex. Relationships can develop quickly, so be ready!

ARIES (March 21-April 19). The evening will best be spent if you surround yourself with loved ones. Seek out something unusual in the way of entertainment. Saturday and Sunday are made for dreaming.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll be seeking a diversion, one that's out of the ordinary. Potential lovers will be attracted to your distinctive way of dressing. Sunday is romantic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Others will enjoy your lovable eccentricities. You experience a psychic rapport with your lover on Saturday. An experimental art exhibit on Sunday may attract your attention.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You may enjoy staying home and taking in a good movie on Cable TV. Being with close friends will appeal to you the most. Sunday finds you romantically content.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You may inadvertently shock your partner with your wild behavior. Saturday finds you enjoying your quiet moments. Sunday is perfect for taking in the latest play or movie.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You'll enjoy tinkering with your electronic gadgets this weekend—try a computer game with the opposite sex! Saturday gets you out of the house. Be near water on Sunday.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You should be excited about tonight's plans; someone most attractive is about to spark your interest. Saturday offers enjoyable quiet time. Sunday is ultraromantic.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Your lover will help you get away from your worries. Saturday finds you breaking out of your usual weekend routine. Sunday brings satisfying emotional experiences.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). It may be up to you to instigate the fun this evening. Saturday brings emotional relief from the past week's hectic schedule. Sunday brings heart-to-heart talks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Tonight you may find the new friends you've been liking for. Take a short trip with someone special on Saturday. On Sunday, your partner is more amenable to your wishes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You have the best chance of everyone to meet just the right person. Saturday finds you eager to show off. On Sunday, love affairs bring out your utmost in sensitivity.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You may be in a wild and crazy mood tonight. Partners are magnetically drawn to your sexiness on Saturday. Sunday finds you at the center of any social activities.

For Saturday, October 3,

Mercury sextiles Neptune. Psychic communication with others is possible. You may be surprised that you can read people's minds. Those who are interested in the arts will find their creative ability stimulated. Moon in Pisces in the PM helps to set the proper mood for romance. Be poetic best.

The Holidays aren't as far away as you may think

Just last week someone mentioned that it was exactly 100 days until Christmas. As you are reading this the count has gone down by at least another five to seven days.

Because of the nature of his business, this friend was concerned over the fast pace of time. He is a stained glass maker and does a large volume of business in the Christmas trade, shipping out orders across the United States and beyond.

And one thing is sure and certain, the time between now and Dec. 25th will disappear faster than left over turkey.

His remark lead me to my cook book shelf with thoughts of what baking I will do this year. It is not to early to begin planning. Last year, I put it off and the result was that I spent several days searching for a spice needed for a cookie that I had planned to bake only never to find locally.

This year, a trip to a city grocery will be planned among the annual treks to the big city malls. Our local grocery, (one of the large chains) does not carry this spice, the manager said he had never had a call for it.

Several of my favorite cookie recipes, Pfefferkuchen or pepper cookies and Lebkuchen (love cookies) call for weeks of seasoning as do many of the fruit cakes our modern cooks traditionally bake.

Our ladies will soon be out collecting ingredients for those cakes which will be lovingly laid aside until company begins to arrive in the days before Christmas.

A young friend, at least she was then, gave me a copy of a recipe book in 1952 in which she had an original recipe.

"Little Molly" was in high school at the time and had the responsibility of packing lunches for both she and her brother. She built the recipe from scratch and won a place in the book.

The contest was sponsored by the rural electric company covering a large area of western Missouri, for the purpose of "teaching people the advantages of the electric range and electric cooking."

Over 1,000 recipes were received and 288 of them were judged as winners to be placed in the book.

The recipe is dated by the fact that it calls for dry mince meat. Perhaps somewhere you can find "dry" mince meat but most stores now only carry prepared mince meat, ready to pour out of the jar and use.

I have found that a pound jar of mince meat is equal to that 9 oz. package that is soaked in 2 cups of water.

There has been another small change in the recipe, to adapt it to the locality. In Missouri, everyone had walnut trees like we have pecans here, so I use pecans now with no difference in texture and very little in taste.

One recipe will yield one 10" loaf and keeps several weeks if properly stored. Molly suggested to slice the bread and spread it with cream cheese before serving.

You will need to oil your pan and preheat your oven to 350 degrees. Baking time is one hour and fifteen minutes but I find that this is a might long so watch carefully those last minutes.

You must sift the dry ingredients in order to distribute the spice and "rising" powders. Also the nuts need to be chopped and tossed in the "drys." This helps to spread them evenly throughout your loaf.

The recipe: Mince Lunch Loaf
1 egg and one cup sugar, creamed

3 cups flour (all purpose), 1 tea baking powder, 2 tea baking soda, 1 tea salt, 1 tea mace. Sift, then add 1 cup chopped nuts.

Blend these "drys" alternately with 16 ounces of mince meat into the egg and sugar mixture. Add 1 tbs melted shortening and one tea of vanilla.

I have used one of the nut flavorings such as walnut or almond for a different taste and it works well.

Bake, cool completely and store wrapped in foil or plastic wrap. This can be frozen by using a freezer bag.

Just as you begin your gift buying early "to avoid the rush" begin your holiday baking early (I have one cake recipe that takes a month just to get ready to bake it.) By the way, let me be the first to wish you a happy holiday.

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

From the files of Dr. "A."

College proves distracting to student girl watcher

Dr. A.,

I am a 21 year old male who is falling into a rut. Every year I start school with the determination that I will pass all classes and then about the third day of classes the same thing happens. I realize that the male female ratio here at UNC-Wonderful must be about 1 to 1000. The real problem with this is that 98% of the ladies are just down right fine. Needless to say this places a young male in a precarious situation. In the juggling of classes, jobs, and the pursuit of happiness it seems that you must be a unicorn or dead to not be distracted beyond all recovery. Please help me but do not tell me to leave this heaven on Earth.

Easily Turned

Dear E.T.,

It sounds like you are experiencing a problem with motivation. Most students find themselves in the same dilemma to some degree. Even though you are basically quite motivated to do well in college, you find yourself being distracted by factors which are much more immediate motivators; in your case you are distracted by the women around you.

There are generally three ways of solving this conflict:

(1) You can eliminate the immediate motivator. Since you probably cannot remove women from your present college environment, the only other option is to do what you asked me to suggest to you. That is to remove yourself. There, by the way, a number of excellent all-male educational institutions in this country, which can provide an outstanding college experience.

(2) You can weaken the immediate motivator. If you were somehow able to make women less desirable to you, that would do the job, right? More realistically, though, you can limit your exposure to women. For example, go straight home after classes, rather than to sit somewhere and people-watch. Also, choose a place to study where you are not distracted by others walking by; and don't keep pictures or other things around your study area that remind you of your social life.

(3) You can strengthen the long-term motivator. It is very difficult to be motivated by something that is years away, like graduation. (That's why many people still have not quit smoking, even though they know about the likely consequences of the habit.) Sometimes, though, we can come up with shorter-term goals which can motivate us effectively towards the long-term goal. For example, I can allow myself to go out to dance on Saturday night if I accomplished all the studying I had scheduled for myself this week. By using this strategy, women are no longer a factor of distraction for me, but a reward. You can be very creative in setting up your own motivational systems. By the way, you may find some training in time management helpful, and may want to attend one of the workshops offered on your campus.

All the best,
Dr. A

The same old trash

Five threats. Five strikes. So what's new in the National Football League.

The players complain that the owners have too much and they want more of the financial pie, while the owners say they have given enough and refuse to budge on the issues. It is all another episode of the NFL owners-players fight that has existed for more than 20 years.

The players and owners now are fighting over the issue of free agency. Their argument is not a good one and the only ones that will suffer in the long run are the fans and for the first time the players themselves.

The players want limited free agency, the freedom for any player with four years of service to become free to sign with any team they choose and no compensation to the team that loses the player. In all, the players are asking for between $300 and $500 million more than they had in the last labor contract with the owners.

All five times the NFL Players' Association has threatened to strike, it has. This time free agency may break the union. To analyze the situation logically, the NFLPA leaders are dead wrong, mainly Gene Upshaw who is leading the fight for something that will benefit only the superstars.

The NFLPA says that they want limited free agency. For the average NFL player, if they win free agency from the owners, they will never get to see it. The average career in the NFL is 3.7 years and the NFLPA wants a free market at four.

What the main issue may be is that the owners, like the baseball owners are realizing "fiscal responsibility." They know that if they give in this time, the players will always have them. If they make a stand, they may be able to solidify the game even more.

For Upshaw and the NFLPA, the battlelines are drawn and they refuse to budge. Unfortunately for Upshaw, he made one huge tactical error. He has turned the strike into a solidarity movement by the players by saying that the owners are trying to break the union. The owners are not trying to do that, but if the players lose the strike, if they may very well put the union back ten years. The players are already thinking, "is it worth gambling everything." For Joe Montana who may cross the picket lines this week, is it worth $75,000 a week.

The owners may lose loads of money now and the leagues' weaker franchises may be hurt somewhat, but the owners will be able to recoup most of that in the future with renegotiated television contracts. For the players whose careers are so short, it may prove devastating.

As the days linger on, the non-superstar types are really going to think twice about the principals that they are fighting for. Can they really afford the owners to replace them with so-called seahs who may very well take their jobs permanently. Is it worth helping the superstars out and are the union's views really the players' views.

Although the upcoming "scab games" aren't really high quality, they will count and they will generate interest. Most fans pull for teams not just players. As the strike wears on, these games will become important.

Unfortunately for the NFLPA, the older the strike becomes, the more genuine the "scab games" become, and the players will abandon the union and rejoin their teams.

For union officials, they will have to continue the battle until the union loses support. For the owners, they seem simply prepared to call the players' bluff. For the players' sake, I hope they haven't gambled everything.

We Apologize

Due to some graphical problems encountered by the Seahawk sports staff, there was no sports section in last week's paper. This problem has since been corrected and should not inhibit any future additions of Seahawk sports.

Junior David Cresswell fires a shot on goal against the College of Charleston during the Seahawks match with the Cougars last Wednesday. Cresswell's shot was just over the crossbar as a College of Charleston defender does his impression of Baryshnikov as a distraction.

Lady Linksters take ECAC title

From staff reports

WILLIAMSBURG, VA - The UNC Wilmington women's golf team shot a two-day total of 654 to edge Penn State by one shot and capture the Eastern College Athletic Association golf tournament that ended Sunday.

The Lady Seahawks were led by Sandy Chester who shot consecutive rounds of 79 (158 total) to finish second behind Amherst's Nicole Danforth who shot 77-80-157. Paige Cribb (81-81-162), Mary Thomas (81-82-163), and Laura Covington (83-88-171) were other UNCW contenders.

Chester

Chester, a senior from Syracuse, NY, qualified this summer for the Coming LPGA Classic as an amateur.

UNCW outdistanced 10 teams in taking their first tournament of the fall schedule. The Lady Seahawks will continue their fall slate when they travel to Bayonet Point, Fla this weekend for the Beacon Woods Golf Invitational.

Hall scores three goals

Duke downs Seahawk water polo squad

by Matt Shanklin Sports Editor

The UNCW fell to Duke University Saturday 13-8 in collegiate water polo action. The loss did not count in the Seahawk record because Duke's squad is recognized as only a club team.

UNCW trailed at halftime 8-3 after playing a very rugged first half. In the second period, the Seahawks got their offense into gear playing the Blue Devils even.

"We started out very slow in the first half," said Head Coach Marc Ellington. "We didn't make good on some excellent scoring opportunities. We missed some really easy shots."

Senior captain Art Hall led all UNCW scorers with three goals.

The Seahawks, 2-3 on the season, travel to Washington & Lee for a Southern Water Polo League conference tournament. The conference includes Washington & Lee, Hampden-Sydney, Lynchburg, Mary Washington, Richmond, Arkansas-Little Rock and the Seahawks.

"We played a little better as a group," said Ellington, the sixth-year coach. "We're still young and we will continue to improve. There were some good spots and some bad spots. We are still making freshmen mistakes that we will eventually learn not to do."

Spikers lose in UNCC tournament

by Matt Shanklin Sports Editor

UNC Wilmington had its 15 game winning streak broken and then lost two matches in the semifinals of the UNC Charlotte volleyball tournament over the weekend in the Queen City.

The Lady Seahawks, led by hitters Dede Devoley, Lisa Mills, and Hannah Hilton, exploded in their initial game against first round opponent Baptist College, 15-2. The Lady Bucs bounced right back, handing the Lady Seahawks their first setback of the year 15-3. UNCW came back to finish off the Lady Bucs 15-7, 15-13.

The Lady Seahawks then disposed of Virginia Commonwealth in a five-game marathon, 15-13, 13-15, 13-15, 15-12, 15-4. The win moved UNCW into the semifinals on Saturday against host UNC Charlotte, which handed the Lady Hawks their first defeat of the year, 10-15, 1-15, 15-12, 16-18.

UNCW was then eliminated from the tourney, losing to Furman in a tight match, 13-15, 15-12, 11-15, 13-15.

Earlier in the week, UNCW hosted Coastal Carolina in Hanover Gym before a crowd of 500. The Lady Seahawks coasted, downing the Lady Chanticleers, 15-5, 15-11, 15-11.

"We played really well," said Head Coach Kathy McDaniel after the match. "We had some first game jitters, but we got good hitting all around and we got some good help off the bench."

UNCW is now 8-2 and played Tuesday at East Carolina. The Lady Seahawks will travel Friday and Saturday to Winthrop for a tournament before returning home Monday to host Methodist in Hanover Gym.

Booters shock American

From staff reports

WASHINGTON, D.C. - UNC Wilmington, behind goalkeeper Donnie Lewis forced a 0-0 tie against perennial soccer power American University Sunday in Colonial Athletic Association soccer action. The tie ended a five-game losing streak in which the Seahawks have been outscored 16-2.

"I thought it was an even game," said Head Coach Jackie Blackmore. "It was a fair result. I thought we did some things today that will help us down the line."

The Seahawks, coming off a 1-0 overtime loss Saturday at Navy, held the Eagles scoreless for 110 minutes. The Seahawks, who outshot the Eagles 6-4, had a chance to win the game with one minute left in overtime. Freshman striker Denis Hamlett raced on a breakaway towards American goalkeeper Tim Helmig who made a tremendous save to keep the match scoreless.

"I thought Denis Hamlett's shot was going in," said Blackmore. "It was a good opportunity and the goalie did a nice job."

American, the 1985 NCAA runner-up, fell to 4-3-2 and 1-0-1 in the CAA. UNCW improves to 3-5-1 and 1-2-1 in the conference.

In Saturday's match at Navy, the Seahawks again played excellent defense with almost an identical result to the American match. Hal Zabrowski ended any doubt with the game-winner on a feed from Mark Hernandez in front of the net with 1:29 left in overtime to give the Midshipman a 1-0 win.

Navy improved to 3-4-1 and 1-2-0 in the CAA.

Last Wednesday, the College of Charleston erupted for four goals after intermission to take a 4-1 non-conference win over the Seahawks at Brooks Field.

The two clubs battled to a scoreless first half tie before Charleston's Rick Guidry rifled a shot off the crossbar at the 46:32 mark. Less than four minutes later, Dennis Puckerin nailed a 35-yard shot that beat goalkeeper Donnie Lewis to give the Cougars a 2-0 lead.

Colin Osborne closed out the Charleston scoring with a pair of goals, thwarting a late UNCW rally.

Chris George, a freshman from Bowie, MD, tallied to lone Seahawk goal with a header at the 53:13 mark. Keith Roach was credited with the assist.

The Seahawks will break away from conference play with a non-conference home match against Atlantic Christian 4 p.m. Wednesday afternoon. UNCW will return to conference play Friday when they host East Carolina in a key Colonial matchup.

NFL players get Howard's vote

The football players are on strike. The baseball players union has just won a big victory. Everywhere in pro sports the unions are the news, and the issues the unions have raised deserve review one more time.

First, the NFL strike. The foremost issue here is union busting. The National Football League wants to destroy the Players Association permanently. They feel the time is right to get away with it. The owners want unfettered control of every aspect of their business. That includes unfettered control of the players via the college draft; free agency; salaries; compensation; and pensions. This is the very bottom line here. Union destruction.

Push aside for a moment, if you will, the specific issues, and the record is clear. Union busting. Management breaks the union by hauling in scabs to do the job for the men on strike. It's a time-honored, and ugly, way for management to behave. All along the NFL has arrogantly, proudly even, and publicly announced its intention to field scabs if it can. Is there no clearer message to America than that? Yet, with all the coverage, all the line issue. Union busting, the NFL aim.

The second issue: Free agency. Men who play for the NFL want to have the right to be able to choose their employer, a right nearly all of us enjoy. Oh yes, I've heard the argument that in certain specialized fields employees do not have that right. The Diplomatic Corp was cited as one such example. Absurd, to try something one prepares for years. You must be admitted through certain procedures. If you have spent years studying Chinese language, history and politics, you'll be posted to China, or to another country where your knowledge will be applicable and useful. If you're an expert in French, Arabic and Portuguese you might wish for a posting to France and instead be sent to Brazil, one's last choice. But there are valid reasons for lack of choice, the same way the military has valid reasons for posting soldiers to certain places, without the soldier having a choice.

But if you can block and tackle in Cincy, you can block and tackle in Dallas or Green Bay just as well. There is no need to have a system whereby 28 men dictate where you live and work and raise a family, because it suits them financially.

Which brings me to the third key point: The NFL is a private business, not the State Department, not a branch of the United States government. How can anyone seriously compare the business of conducting U.S. foreign policy with the business of playing pro football?

The next key point is the way in which the NFL has managed to be treated by the majority of the media, and by the public, as if it were some special branch of government, providing some hugely important service to the American people. The NFL is never on the defensive. Poor Jack Donlan, who has to cope with the angry Gene Upshaw and the greedy the ones getting the bad deal? The ones being exploited?

Wake up, people! If you resent the player salaries, look at the net worth of the owners and of the league. The players will suddenly look poverty-stricken in comparison. And these owners are the ones to whom you're giving the benefit of the doubt? They are the ones who won't bend. They are the ones who reject any form of free agency. They are the ones depriving you of your football, not the players.

And the final point. Your football? Well, if you've managed to watch any or all of the Senate hearings on Judge Robert Bork, you'll discover that men like Judge Bork don't believe the Constitution grants you the right to privacy or to determine the size of your very own family. If his view of law is correct — which is subject to intense debate — then he'll be the first to tell you that the fan has no right to football. It is nowhere written in the Constitution that Americans have the right to watch the NFL on Sundays and Monday nights. I know this will come as a shock, and a huge blow to all of those talking endlessly of the "rights of the fans" but those rights do not exist, not by law or judicial opinion.

You have no rights, fans. But you do have a secret weapon, a strength that's a different kind of American right, like the right to form a union, to bargain collectively, to strike if you must. That is the right to refuse to attend any scab games. The right to refuse to buy a product, to refuse to patronize the NFL company store. You have the right to hit those owners in their pocketbooks, and send them reeling to the bargaining table to end the strike and to do what is right.

Then again, you also have the right to side with the NFL. To blame the players. To attend scab games, if the NFL can pull them off. To make sure the NFL gets its TV money. The NFL, a convicted illegal monopoly, currently under investigation of its TV contracts by the Federal Trade Commission. Yes, you have a right to side with them, to help bust the union, and force the players back to work. In so doing, of course, you undermine your own rights; not the fictional "rights" of the fan to football, but the rights of American working men and women everywhere. Would you give up your right to strike to please a segment of the public? I don't think so. Then don't ask the football players to do it, either.

On the same day the football players walked out, the baseball players union received its long-awaited decision on free agency and collusion among the owners to destroy free agency. It was a victory for the union, a sweet victory indeed. Arbitrator Tom Roberts ruled that the baseball owners acted in concert in violation of the collective bargaining agreement, in an effort to put an end to free agency in baseball.

Roberts offered no remedies for the situation. He asked both parties to meet informally on the subject, and he will hold hearings on the remedies at a later date.

The victory is not just a victory for the baseball players. It's a victory for unions. And it should give the football players some feeling of strength and solidarity and hope. Even at a time when the President of the United States can't bust a union, all is not lost. Free agency, however threatened, is a reality in baseball. It may finally become one in football, too.

Harriers struggle at UNC meet

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

The UNCW's men's and women's cross country squads competed this weekend in the UNC Chapel Hill Invitational, both finishing seventh among a field of seven teams. Virginia Tech took the men's event while the Lady Cavs of Virginia captured the women's event.

The top Seahawk men finishers over the five mile course were Layne Fuller with a time of 26:43.2, followed by David Simmons (27:21.7), and Phil Meeks (27:41.7).

The UNCW female, running a five kilometer course, were led by Kris York's time of 18:49.6. Caroline Hooper and Missy Hall followed with times of 18:59.7 and 19:25.7 respectively.

The harriers will travel to UNC Charlotte this weekend to compete in the UNCC Invitational.

Marine Expo '87 has multitude of events packed into this week

The barge finally went down an hour later than scheduled.

The Winner Queen and Winner Speed Queen charter boats out of Carolina Beach were donated to carry guests, members of the press, and Marine Expo staff out to the sinking.

Also on board the Winner Queen were members of the Cape Fear Tech faculty and staff who had taught on board the barge before it was condemned two years ago. Inspectors found torn asbestos insulation in the ceilings and walls of the forty-year-old barge, and restricted usage after that.

Instructors and administrators watched as the tugboat Wilmington nosed away from the barge and remembered working in classrooms and offices that were never air conditioned and often overheated due to incessant boiler problems.

The barge also showed signs from encounters with "Captain Crunch" — the noise made when a barge passing CFTI's dock on the Cape Fear River downtown came a little too close and hit the floating classroom.

While the barge was going down, the guided missile destroyer Charles F. Adams was winding its way up the coast from Mayport, Fla. to visit for the weekend.

Under command of Captain David Watson the 420-plus-foot ship cruised into port Friday to begin a long weekend of receptions, guided tours, softball/volleyball matches, and as one seaman put it, "decadent behaviour."

"I've heard you people have some wild night life up here," he said, speaking on the promise that he not be identified. "I'm looking forward to it."

The Adams was one of the highlights of the annual state ports open house, which gave visitors a chance to see what improvements are being made with the $33 million earmarked for port development within the state. The ports grounds were crowded

Saturday and Sunday as curious visitors took guided bus tours around the area.

Tugboat rides courtesy of Wilmington Towing and Stone Towing Lines were a highlight to this past weekend, and continue through this week.

A multitude of activities at the waterfront in downtown Wilmington and across the river at the Battleship Memorial will be featured through the week, leading into the Riverfest celebration of this weekend.

Displays of everything from historic Simmons Sea Skiffs to the USS Monitor's anchor and an old fashion mullet roast are scheduled daily throughout the week. The Riverfest celebration will kick off with a concert with the shaggin' beach music sounds of the Shakers on the Battleship Grounds.

Authorities on everything from hurricane and storm damage to oceanography will speak during the celebrations, and at least one prominent marine expert will be featured on the UNCW campus.

Dr. Sylvia Earle, Underwater Oceanographer, Marine Biologist and Botanist, will speak in Kenan Auditorium on Sept. 29 at 8:00 p.m. and is the keynote speaker for Marine Expo.

With her husband and partner, Graham Hawkes, (a well-known Engineer-Designer), Earle has qualified in many different forms of diving systems, from multi-person submarines to solo dives in one-person diving submersibles.

Her marriage has also resulted in a company, Deep Ocean Engineering, which has produced DEEP ROVER (a one-person submersible) and several other underwater research vehicles.

During her visit, Dr. Earle will visit classes at College Park Elementary School and the Oceanography classes at Laney, Hoggard and New Hanover High Schools.

Information about the Marine Expo events can be obtained by calling either the Info Desk at 395-3841, the Seahawk at 395-3229, or by calling Marine Expo information at 1-800-922-7117.

Students visit nation's capital over fall break

By Donald Smith,
Staff Writer

On Oct. 7 members of the ROTC program and students from the Political Science classes began a tour of the nation's capital.

The students departed from the university around 7:00 p.m. and arrived at Ft. Belvoir, Va. around 2:00 a.m. Barracks at the post served as sleeping accommodations for the students during their stay in the capital. After breakfast, the students were off to the Capital building. After the tour the students had the opportunity to watch the Senate in action but arrived while the Senate was on recess. The students also had the opportunity to visit with Representative Charlie Rose. During this visit, twelve of the students were chosen to ask questions on a television program which was aired Oct. 11, at 6:30 a.m. After lunch the group attended a lecture on nuclear arms and a tour of the Pentagon. After dinner the group toured the memorial park area by moonlight, including the Jefferson and Lincoln memorials and the Vietnam War Memorial. Several of the students found the names of deceased relatives on the black granite wall. After a long day of touring the students returned to Ft. Belvoir for a good night's rest — the next morning everyone had to be up by 5:00 a.m. After breakfast it was off to the White House for a brief tour, after which the group went to the Senate debate the War Powers Act. The final part of the group tour

NEWS IN BRIEF

WORLD

The war in the Persian Gulf intensified over the last week as Iran and Iraq staged even more attacks against shipping in the gulf. In the land war, Iran and Iraq traded surface to surface missile fire.

Specialized nightflying helicopters of the U.S. Army fired upon a small group of Iranian speedboats after reporting that the pilots had been fired upon. Two of the boats were sunk, and three Iranians were captured.

Found on board one of the boats were parts to an American made anti-aircraft missile launcher which had originally been sold to the Afghan freedom fighters and then resold to the Iranians.

An airline crash in Burma early Sunday resulted in the deaths of 49 people, including 14 Americans. The Burma Airways Fokker caught fire in midair and crashed approximately 20 miles from its destination.

It was the second Burma Airways crash in four months.

NATIONAL

Vice-President announced his candidacy for the Presidency of the United States Monday in Houston, Texas. Bush, who bowed out of the presidential campaign in 1980 to become Ronald Reagan's running mate, vowed to continue U.S. support of "freedom fighters in Africa, Afghanistan and Central America."

Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork vowed Friday to continue his fight for a seat on the Supreme Court. Bork faces an almost sure defeat when the Senate votes later this month on his nomination to the high court. Fifty-one votes are needed to defeat him, and as of Monday fifty-four senators had stated they would vote against the former appeals court judge.

Bulley joins staff

The Seahawk is proud to welcome Celeste Bulley on board staff as our new managing editor.

Celeste replaces Ruth Johnson Matthews, who left the position in August to take a full time job as reporter with the Sampson Independent in Clinton.

Celeste is a sophomore who plans to major in journalism. Her mother lives in Wilson.

Celeste is a 1986 graduate of Wilson Hunt High School in Wilson, N.C.

Responsible drinking the subject of events here next week

By Celeste Bulley,
Managing Editor

Have you ever had a professor that you wanted to have arrested? Then Oct. 22, will be your chance — and it's for a good cause, too.

The "Thirsty Thursday" Jail-O-Thon is just one of the fun activities planned for Alcohol Awareness Week.

Alternatives!, the substance abuse prevention and education center on the UNCW campus, is sponsoring National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week Oct. 19-23. Linda Shaddix is the campus coordinator of substance abuse and director of the activities designed to increase the student's consciousness of the responsibility involved in alcohol consumption.

On Oct. 20 students are invited to the front lawn of the Union to sample an outdoor adventure through an activity called ROPES, a personal growth experience sponsored by Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center.

Activities for Oct. 21 include a party in room 100 of the Union from 11:30 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. with drinks donated by local bars and music by WLOZ.

At 8 p.m., Miss Jean Kilbourne, a nationally recognized media analyst, will be speaking in Kenan Auditorium. Miss Kilbourne will present UNDER THE INFLUENCE, her examination of the images associated with alcohol in advertising. Admission is $1.00 with valid UNCW ID.

"Thirsty Thursday," Oct. 22, is your chance to have your favorite professor, administrator, or friend "jailed" in the Union for a cost of $5.00 for faculty or staff who are willing to participate. UNCW faculty and staff have received guidelines for the Jail-A-Thon and can be contacted for further information.

Attempts are being made to plan a Shag-A-Thon for Saturday afternoon. Interested persons should contact Ms. Shaddix in the Alternatives! center, downstairs in the Union.

Breakins lead to protests at apartment complex

By Jefferson Weaver,
Editor in Chief

A subject was arrested Sunday afternoon in relation to a string of breakins at an area apartment complex.

According to sources in the Wilmington Police Dept., a male subject was arrested Sunday afternoon after approximately ten apartments were burglarized between Saturday morning and Sunday afternoon. The subject apparently gained access through a sliding glass door or in some cases, by using a crowbar to tear the front door locks off.

Rumors had been circulating among students and residents of the complex that several women had been raped during the breakins, but there were no reports of injury or sexual assault in relation to the case.

Housekeepers find that team work gets the job done right

By Donald Smith,
Staff Writer

The most important factor in working with a small group of people is team work. However, the housekeeping staff here at UNCW has proven that they can overcome that obstacle.

"I have never worked with a more outstanding group of people," said Nathaniel Purdy, supervisor of the housekeeping staff and also in charge of planning the work schedule.

Although Purdy has only been here at UNCW for three months, he feels that the staff works well together.

"People can no longer view housekeeping as just another job, it has become a profession," commented Purdy. "Our job is very important to the campus."

"The campus is growing and even though we are sometimes short of help," said Elmore Smith, a supervisor in charge of eight buildings, "we work together as a team; that is how we get things done."

"Being a team is very important to the housekeepers; we are just one big happy family and that is what makes this job so wonderful," said Martha Shipman, who has been working here at UNCW since she graduated from high school. After working on the housekeeping staff for 13 years, Mrs. Shipman plans to retire soon.

While Yattie Mealing is new to the staff, she agrees that it did not take long to realize the importance of team work.

"The staff really works together as a team — it is the only way to get the job done," said Mrs. Mealing.

The September 23, 1987, issue of "The UNCW Seahawk" contained an article recounting how awful giving a speech can make one feel. It explicitly described the butterflies and sweaty palms the author, Rick Cairnes, felt when he had to present a speech to fellow students in a communications class. Mr. Cairnes and every UNCW student should know about Toastmasters. The Toastmasters club on campus is called Smooth Talkers. Toastmasters and we meet every Tuesday at 5:00 pm in Bear Hall, room 111.

The purpose of Toastmasters is to help improve overall communication skills and to alleviate the feelings of nervousness associated with public speaking. Members receive practical experience delivering prepared and impromptu speeches covering a wide range of topics. Every speech is followed by an evaluation containing constructive criticism and helpful hints for improvement by a fellow Toastmaster. All of this is done among friends in a very supportive atmosphere.

For a small membership fee, one can become one of the more than 125,000 members of the Toastmasters club, which is established in 48 countries. All Toastmasters receive The Toastmaster magazine and manuals that guide the member through progressive stages, offering more advice for improvement gradually.

Effective communications skills are important whether your goal in life is to become President of the United States or a homemaker. Every student is welcome to visit the Smooth Talkers Toastmaster club any Tuesday at 5:00 pm in Bear Hall, room 111, and is certainly welcome to become a member.

The children's popular art class, Art After School, will again be offered at the at Wilmington arts center, which is located at the corner of Second and Orange streets downtown.

The class, which is for children ages 6-11, will be taught by local artist Sybil O'Thearing. Monthly projects are as follows: October-Paper Marbling; November-Drawing class; December-Holiday Ornaments.

Classes meet on Thursdays from 4:00 until 5:30 pm. Cost is $20 including materials. Pre-registration is required. Call 341-7860 for more information and registration.

The Young Democrats held their first meeting on Sept. 30 in room 202 of the university union. The meeting was focused on the election of new officers. Lee Barnhill is running for President,

On Sept. 21, the Financial Management Association (FMA) welcomed guest speaker Mr. Frier Shaffner, Vice-President of E. F. Hutton here in Wilmington, to their second meeting this semester.

Shaffner, speaking before a group of approximately thirty students, touched on topics such as stocks, bonds, and interest rates. He also described E.F. Hutton's nine month training program and to the benefit of many he provided some helpful job seeking and interviewing tips.

FMA will attempt to feature a new guest speaker at each meeting. All students are welcome and encouraged to attend.

but all offices are open to anyone wishing to run. The elections will be held Oct. 14, during the next meeting which will be held in room 202 at 5:30 p.m. in the University Union.

NC Writer's Network to meet Nov. 13-15

One of the largest gatherings of writers in the Southeast in recent years will take place this autumn at Wrightsville Beach, N.C., when the North Carolina Writers' Network holds its fall conference, November 13-15, featuring more than a dozen noted writers and editors.

Keynote speaker for the event is Linton Weeks, founding editor of Southern Magazine, which made its debut a year ago with a promise to write about the "real" South, and now boasts more than 200,000 subscribers. Joining him will be Madeleine Costigan, assistant fiction editor at McCall's, literary agent Jean Naggar (best known for selling Jean Auel's Clan of the Cave Bear), and ten well-known Southern writers who will teach workshops in their respective fields.

Among the North Carolina writers on the program are science fiction writer John Kessel, who won a 1982 Nebula Award; poets Evalyn P. Gill and Shelby Stephenson, who edit International Poetry Review and Pembroke Review, respectively; novelist Nancy Tilly, recipient of an AAUW Literature Award; playwright Phil Hines, administrator of the Playwrights' Fund of North Carolina; children's writer Cathy Warren, whose fifth book will come out next spring; poet Jaki Shelton Green, author of three poetry collections; and Jo Ann Algermissen, who has had more than 30 romance novels published by Dell, Harlequin and Silhouette. Teaching nonfiction at the conference will be Michael Byrd, editor of Encore Magazine, and Anne Russell, author of two nonfiction books and a longtime journalist.

The North Carolina Writers' Network, which is sponsoring the event, is a statewide writers' support group with more than 600 members--the only statewide organization of its kind in the nation.

The conference is open to anyone. For a brochure, write NCWN, PO Box 1207, Wilmington, N.C. 28402.

The UNCW Chapter of Phi Kappa Phi, the national honor society for distinguished students in all academic fields, has begun its evaluation of student records for consideration of election to the Society. The Society's By-Laws allow a student to be considered for membership with a 3.75 GPA for juniors with 74 hours or more completed, a 3.68 GPA for Seniors with 89 to 105 hours, and a 3.60 GPA for Seniors with more than 105 hours completed.

The National Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi was founded in 1897 at the University of Maine. Men and women in all academic disciplines are eligible for membership, on the basis of scholarship, integrity, and character. The Society's was established in 1980, the fact that an institution has to prove its excellence before a chapter of Phi Kappa Phi can be chartered makes membership in this society a valuable asset to the graduating student. The society is convinced that recognizing persons of good character who have excelled in an academic area will stimulate others toward this achievement. The chapter's officers for the current year are Larry Usilton, President; Dr. Lewis Nance, Secretary-Treasurer; and Dr. Charles West, public Relations Officer.

Elections to the society are made each semester, after analysis of the University's academic records to determine eligible outstanding students. Final decision if made by the student and faculty members of the UNCW Chapter. A formal initiation ceremony will be held in the Spring, shortly before graduation, with the date to be announced.

Graduate Fellowship winner announced

(UNCW News) — The University of North Carolina at Wilmington Office of Graduate Studies announces the awarding of the first Sylvia and B.D. Schwartz Graduate Fellowship. The fellowship is the first to be established for graduate students.

The recipient is Jane Kenan, a Masters in Business Administration candidate at UNCW. Kenan received an undergraduate degree in history from UNC-Chapel Hill in 1975 and is currently a graduate assistant with the Center for Business and Economics Services in the Cameron School of Business. UNCW. Prior to beginning the MBA program at UNCW in January 1986, she worked for the N.C. Social Security Disability Program in Raleigh for approximately eight years.

The fellowship, which was established by Schwartz and his wife just this year, will be awarded annually on a rotating basis between the MBA program, the Graduate School of Education, and the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences at UNCW. Schwartz, current chairman of the UNCW Board of Trustees, is a former state senator and a former mayor of the City of Wilmington.

Dr. James K. McGowan, director of graduate studies at UNCW, expressed his appreciation to Mr. and Mrs. Schwartz for establishing this first graduate fellowship. "Our graduate programs are young," he said, "and fellowships such as this will greatly assist our students." The fellowship covers the cost of in-state tuition and fees.

Regarding Ms. Kenan, Dr. McGowan commented that "her academic performance and her active involvement in the school's graduate program render her a most worthy and suitable recipient."

Managers at Pinewood were not available for comment Monday afternoon.

According to residents, who wished to remain unidentified, a petition demanding increased security, improved locks and better lighting was being passed around by a resident who claimed to have

Flu season approaching — but many aren't ready

By Carla Garrison, Staff Writer

As summer quickly fades to fall a winter we are again faced with those dreaded diseases associated with the season: colds, flus, sore throats etc. This year UNCW students have the opportunity to be prepared to combat that yearly bout of flu through immunization.

The Student Health and Wellness Center can aid students in getting immunized as well as treating flus if contracted this winter. According to information distributed by the center, many people fail to realize that modern medicine provides simple defenses against many ailments.

Some associate vaccines with the 1976 swine flu disaster and feel the vaccines are useless while others are just unaware that there is preventive measures for influenza and other more common illnesses.

In an average year influenza results in the death of 10,000 to 40,000 people. The treatment of the flu cost the US $3 billion to $5 billion annually.

Each year the vaccine is reformulated according to what strain doctors estimate will be prevalent for that coming season.

This year the vaccine contains type A Taiwan, type A Leningrad, and type B Ann Arbor. These are types which were common last year so researchers combine them to combat this season. The immunization vaccines have developed to the point of reducing the chance of flu by 90-95%.

By definition, influenza is a viral infection of the nose, throat, bronchial tubes, and lungs that can make someone of any age ill. The flu usually strikes anywhere between November and April, but here at UNCW the infirmity generally sees most cases in January and February. The most common symptoms are "fever, chills, cough, and soreness and aching in the back, arms, and legs." If treated properly this usually last only several days, but can result in much more serious illness.

Who should get the flu vaccine?

- a) anyone with long-term heart or lung complications.
- b) people over 65
- c) anyone who has recently been admitted to a hospital for

Editorial Commentary

Media is fed by what the public wants to see

A lady at the Board of Governors/Trustees banquet last Thursday was discussing the ethics of the world of journalism with a veteran reporter of a local weekly.

"You newpeople are just a pack of hungry gossips! All you look for is the smut and the skeletons in people's closets. That's not news!"

The veteran reporter — who has been in the business longer than many of us have been alive, answered her in a most appropriate fashion.

"Mam, we just give the public what it wants."

If the public had not been thrilled by a presidential candidate engaging in a little "Monkey Business" off the Bahamas, the issue wouldn't have been thrown in our faces for weeks without end — regardless as to whether brother Gary is a philandering skunk or just a little unlucky.

Likewise, the same bird-cage rags that call themselves newspapers wouldn't have quadrupled circulation with lurid tales of the innocent little Jessica Hahn and her subsequent hero-worship gone overboard activities with The Reverend I-Share-Return-to-Heritage Jim Bakker.

We are referring to a society that spends hours watching millionaires cavort with airline stewardesses while their wives either become alcoholics or go prune begonias with the gardener of the billion dollar estate. Really, folks.

Like an elderly fisherman we once knew would say, put some plywood on that there glasshouse afore ye throw them rocks. One might just bounce back at ye.

Some folks on both sides of the TV screen or the front page could do well to abide by that thought.

Nobody's perfeck

There was a time when the editorial page was the pride and joy of the newspaper. Aside, of course, from the front page, the editorial page is where the bulk of the time should be spent. It is where the people go to read opinions, state opinions, make opinions, and occasionally mock opinions.

Unfortunately, it is also the place where boo-boos, glitches, errors, and screw-ups (more colorful metaphors we leave to your imagination) show up the boldest.

Take, oh, well, the congratulations editorial regarding the Beach Sweep that our erstwhile editorial writer wrote, hoping to not only give credit where credit was due but to maybe patch up a few old problems.

Boy, did we pull a boner that time.

Our sincerest apologies to the members of Delta Zeta sorority. Not only did we get the turtle ladies mixed up with the Alpha Xi ladies, but we carried it one step further for congratulating all the Greek organizations that helped out with the Beach Sweep.

Seems they were, ahh, err, the only Greeks out there. Oops.

After an extremely long day, the sometimes unavoidable trap of the multiplying metaphor can take over (see above editorial for example.)

Back this summer, "An Amused Reader" admonished us with the old adage, "I before E except after C, except as in Neighbor and Weigh." This came about after an extremely long night on the layout boards resulted in four people 'receiving' scholarships.

An embarrassed but sincere thank you to you folks who point these "little" problems out to us.

We are sorry for our miztakes. We'll try not to scroo up agin.....

The Seahawk Oct. 14, 1987 Page 4

Happy Birthday, Mama

This past Monday was an atypically hectic day, even in the Seahawk office.

The printer was soon to run out of the expensive stuff it uses to make the black you are reading now, reporters were calling in with everything from hangovers to disastrous weekends at home to "surprise" midterms that I still expect they knew about weeks in advance.

Combine that with the last few days before pay day (what we call hungry times), trying to train three new staff members, trying to make up for missed deadlines.....everything was going to hell in the proverbial handbasket.

The original column I had written for this week is somewhere inside the recesses of this computer. I haven't the slightest idea where. Everything sort of "gulled" and it was gone.

My column was about this Monday because Oct. 12 is very special: It's my Momma's birthday. And I didn't get to call her. For the three days I was home this weekend, Mother cooked, cleaned, washed my clothes, and took me to the grocery store. She helped me catch up on what my former classmates were up to (three out of twelve of us aren't married yet, and two of those are being pushed).

On Saturday morning, I woke up about seven. She was all ready up doing this and that.

When I came back from my brother's service station on the interstate that night about eleven she was still up, washing and folding and ironing clothes for me to take back to Wilmington.

I forgot to mention the fact that Mama is a full time reporter for two newspapers, a free lance feature writer and handles public relations packages for groups who have never had any PR work done before. She does it all without any high speed-low drag word processor. She still uses a typewriter.

Pickups, Politics and Hound Dogs

With Jefferson Weaver

She doesn't have to wash my clothes; in fact, I did manage to at least start two loads without any major mishaps. I have a washer and dryer in my apartment. I can use them with at least 75% success. She told me once it was j.d., something she could still do for her boys (there are two of us within washing machine distance.)

Mama cares for all the animals children somehow deposit in the laps of their parents as the kids go off to school. Three cats, a very fat labrador, and thirty-odd rabbits make up my contribution to this ongoing tradition.

Mama still worries about whether or not we are dressed warmly enough. She worries whether we get enough to eat (though neither my brother nor myself are going to blow away anytime soon.)

Mama has put up with hunting ("You kill it, you clean it."), fishing ("You catch, you clean it, I'll cook it."), smoking ("You really ought not to, but you're old enough to know better."), and motorcycles ("You don't need another one of those.")

It's always seemed that Mama got the bad end of the deal when it came to vehicles. She got her license for the first time three months after I did. Since Papa drove at least sixty miles a day, he naturally seemed to need the better vehicle, whatever that happened to be at that time.

While Pops drove the first two Oldsmobiles, Mama tooted around in our 1955 Chevy. She and I shared the Bel Air until I got my first truck, and then we still shared right regular after that, considering the reliability of my first and second pickups.

Mama drove my battered old Cadillac for a while after I got my newest truck, but when the Caddy threw a rod through the engine block (for you non-mechanical types, that means the motor is busted) she was back to the old Chevy.

But last week Mama got a birthday present. While some folks say you aren't supposed to give presents to yourself, Mama's sacrificed enough for all of us that it was high time she had something of her own.

Mama became the proud owner of a 1978 Buick limited last week — at least, she made the downpayment. It's white with crushed velvet upholstery, wire wheel covers and blessings of blessings — power steering. At least her arthritis won't have quite so much to act up about anymore.

Between her writing and whatever else happens along, that car will be all hers eventually.

Mama will finally have a car of her very own.

And though she is reading this several days late, I would like to say something to the best Mama in the world.

Happy birthday Mama. I love you.

And I'm glad you finally got your own car.

Parking concerns first year student

To The Editor:

This is my first year at UNC-Wilmington and so far I have been very impressed with the school facilities, except the parking. I know that I am not alone when I say that $46 for a parking place a half mile from your room is unreasonable. I would there fore like to submit my thoughts of possible solutions to the ever growing problem: (1) Either charge less for the parking available now or guarantee parking for those who have paid the full amount; (2) Build a new parking lot with two levels so there will be more parking available without taking up twice room; (3) Charge higher rates for parking closer to the dorms/apartments; (4)

Eliminate parking for all freshmen who live on campus.

I hope that these suggestions will be strongly considered, as we have a definite problem with parking at UNC-W.

Thank You
Mark Roper

Students and bikes

Dear Editor:

I was walking to my twelve thirty composition class along the sidewalk in front of the Student Union the other day. I hear a repetitive squeaking and panting coming up fast behind me. Oh no, a bicyclist was pressing down hard on me. Which way should I move right or left, a wrong move could result in an embarrassing situation. I moved to the right, just my luck, so did the bicyclist. I heard a loud skid. I tried to jump out of the way but it was too late. Down we both went. Before I could help him or apologize, he was back on his bike and with a few words I will not repeat, he started on his way again.

I am sure this is just one of the many cited incidents occurring on campus due to overcrowding. It just seems there is not enough room anywhere, on the streets for cars and bicyclists, or on sidewalks, for pedestrians and bicycles. What can be done? It really is not fair to anyone. Cars are slowed by bicyclists and intimidate the bicyclists forcing them to the sidewalks. All hell then breaks loose! People suddenly become hostile towards each other. The sidewalks obviously were not made for bicyclist and pedestrians, while it also seems the street cannot accommodate bicyclist and cars either.

I feel the solution, if to be resolved at all, lies in the future. Maybe next semester or even next year, construction of bike paths could get underway. With pedestrians on one path, bikes on another and cars in the street, maybe we could find peace again in the now treacherous voyage to class.

Bork would have benefitted from an "anti-lynch" law

Forty years or so ago one of the big items on the agenda of the civil rights activists was enactment of an anti-lynch law at the federal level.

At that time, and up until the seating of Earl Warren of the Supreme Court this remained true, there hadn't been a lynching in the south for years, as the proponents well knew.

The object, as is the object of most liberal "social reforms," was to further take away the rights guaranteed the state under the 10th Amendment, including the enforcement of the laws.

Southern conservatives filibustered the law to death several times, when it reached the Senate floor, but if there had been a valid need for such a law it would have been adopted long ago.

But events in recent weeks have made me wonder if we don't indeed need a strong anti-lynch law, because we've just witnessed the most brutal and flagrant lynching in the nation's history.

True, Ted Kennedy, Joe Biden, Bob "Peckercorwood" and the rest of the disreputable mob didn't knock on Robert Bork's door in the middle of the night, drag him bodily from the arms of a pleading wife and weeping children and string him up to a tree.

But what they did amount to essentially the same thing.

Lies were circulated, lies that a check with the Library of Congress would have exploded, but nobody in a position of influence came forth to ask for such action.

These liberals have the effrontery to stand up with straight faces and claim they are concerned with a threat — certainly nonexistent in Bork's case — to individual liberty, but every last one of them repeatedly supported efforts to deliver the American worker into total domination by the power-crazed bosses of organized labor.

The fear that Bork would be influenced by his own beliefs instead of the intent and spirit of the Constitution is totally ridiculous, and every member of that lynch mob knows that very well.

But they are delighted when a liberal justice — as liberal justices repeatedly have — distorts the letter and spirit of the law of the land to bring about left-wing social change.

At least three justices now sit of the court — and in the Warren era it went as high as eight — who have apparently placed their own judgement above that of the framers of the Constitution and the courts that built up legal precedent over more than a century.

This pleased the liberals because it was preventing the law into what they thought it ought to be, rather than interpreting the law as it was written and established.

The conduct of Bork's critics is a demonstration of the greatest hypocrisy of all time.

On the lighter side, I was told the other day that Joe Biden would have pulled out of the presidential race sooner but it took some time to get a copy of Gary Hart's withdrawal speech. — LTJ Features

The Other Side with Rick Calms, columnist

Just say no — to the NFL

It was a lazy Sunday. I'm talking laaaaazy. I didn't do squat. I was up partying until 4 a.m. the night before, and I wasn't quite with it anyway. Something was different this Sunday, but I didn't quite know what. I actually went back to sleep at one o'clock. I awakened in a state of confusion and in a pillow full of drool. What day is it? Am I late for something? I glanced at the newspaper on my bed, and saw that it was Sunday. I knew that I wasn't late for anything. Who could be late for something on Sunday? I felt strange; something was out of whack.

Then it dawned on me — I'm missing football.

I rushed over to the tube and turned on NBC. There weren't any big dudes with helmets. A guy with a cap on was standing with a bat on his shoulder watching a ball whiz by. A minute later, he watched another ball fly by

He continued to stand with his bat, and watched another ball go by. The fat man in a blue suit signaled that he was out. The guy with the bat started to whine and complain, and then walked over to his teammates. I hate when a guy doesn't even swing, and then starts crying because he is out. Just swing at the damn ball and shut up.

I changed the channel and there was — football. Things were back to normal. What the hell? The Super Bowl? The Giants and Denver again? Did I sleep for four months? No, I couldn't have; my wife probably would have noticed after a month or two, and told me to get my lazy ass up.

Reality slapped me in the face. The NFL is on strike.

I still can't figure why the Super Bowl was on again. I guess the network was as lost as I was. It sickened me to think that my Browns weren't going to avenge Denver Monday night. It seems to me that the last people on earth to strike would be professional athletes.

I could sympathize though. What good is fame and fortune without free agency? I remember the good old days when fame and fortune were enough. Will Robin Leach soon have a new show entitled "Fame, Fortune, and Free Agency"? The players insist on it because they feel like slaves, and the owners won't even say the word. They refer to it as the "F Word."

The season only lasted two weeks. Just enough to get fans salivating. I figured that we went all spring and summer without it; what is one more season? I was trying to think of what I could do on Sundays that would be just as fun and still be able to laze around and swill beer. Then the idea hit me like a ton of astro turf. What could I watch that features men beating on each other, and is guaranteed not to go on strike? Give up? Did you ever hear of Larry, Curly and Moe? Yeah, The Three Stooges.

We're talking real mer now. Those guys were happy with just fame and fortune. I've never heard of them striking. Free agency meant nothing to them; they were loyal to their teams. It's a good thing too. Can you imagine Curly or Shemp joining The Marx Brothers? How about Abbot and Moe? Who would beat on whom? The thought of it devastates me. The Stooges are from the old school figuratively and literally; they played hurt. How many football players could take a shovel in the head twenty times? Or have their heads smashed in a steaming pants presser while being kicked in the butt repeatedly?

I can think of many advantages to watching the Stooges instead of the NFL. You have complete control. All you need is a VCR and Stooges tapes. They are easy to rent if you don't have them at home as I do. You can still invite the guys over and act ridiculous. Girls don't usually like the Stooges as they don't like football. They say that the Stooges "are stupid." Like, no kidding! Of course they're stupid. They're not called The Three Intellents.

The Stooges are much more fun to watch anyway. You don't get depressed when your team loses, and you don't go around kicking your dog, and disowning the team. I've never gotten depressed because Curly or Shemp get the hell slapped out of them. In football a player runs quietly down the field and gets tackled. How boring!

When is the last time you heard a running back yelling "whoop whoop whoop whoop whoop" as he ran down the field? What about a lineman giving the quarterback a "nyuck nyuck nyuck" after he sacks him?

You will have the magic pause button for those many trips out of the room to get a cold one, and you know all about those numerous other trips out of the room. Can you imagine a Sunday without seeing Joe Piscopo once? You won't have to hear about what a great human being a guy is after he falls on a fumble. You won't have to hear about second, third, and fourth effort, or giving 110%.

That sure makes a lot of sense. The best thing is no penalties. Moe has never been called for unnecessary roughness, or illegal use of hands.

Are we ready to watch a bunch of scabs? If the real players decide to come back without free agency (cause they will never get it) let's welcome them with a round of raspberries. Let's support our local Stooges. Remember — just say NO to the NFL.

Public Safety Notes with Joseph Johnson, Director of Public Safety

Public Safety Dept. has a new look

By Joseph M. Johnson, Jr.
Director of Public Safety
Department of Public Safety

If you look closely at the Police Officers directing traffic the next few days, you will notice a new shoulder patch and a slightly darker shade of gray on the shirts that they are wearing. This patch represents the true name of the police organization here on this campus; the Department of Public Safety.

In December of 1985, the formal campus safety function was merged with the Campus Police into the Department of Public Safety. Public Safety is an umbrella organization to cover a wide variety of program areas dedicated to safety, security, law enforcement, transportation and emergency preparedness on the campus.

The change in the shoulder patch encompasses the University's new logo and the institution's official seal. We believe the new patch in the 40th year of the institution, shows the progression of Public Safety concerns on this campus.

If you look at the history of safety and security on the campus, many years ago, before there were residence halls, there were a few contract security guards that patrolled the campus at night.

About twenty years ago, the University hired its first security officers. As the years went on, these officers gained the power of arrest and about three years ago, had an official title change to Police Officers. The Department was known previously as Security, then Campus Police Services and now Public Safety. We hope that the proper name of the Department reflects what we do. We are interested in the public and the safety of all people in our community.

As the days get shorter, it will be getting darker earlier. I want to remind everyone that the Seahawk Express runs every evening that the Library is open. The schedules are posted in the Union, Library and all the residence halls. We encourage you to ride. Last month 495 students took advantage of the Seahawk Express. We think it is a worthwhile effort and we thank you, the students, through the Student Government Association, for providing some of the funding for this worthwhile service.

We are still seeking volunteers to serve as CPR instructors. If you are interested in undergoing this approximately thirty hours of training and then assisting your fellow community members by teaching, please call Joan at 395-3591.

Stillpoint with Campus Minister Bob Haywood

Televangelism destroying the Christian faith

The most destructive dimension of T.V. ministry is the way it trivializes the Christian faith. Profound issues regarding human transformation are oversimplified and worship marred by theatrical productions and crass commercialism.

Take the whole notion of conversion. The idea that everyone is going to hell and we can assure ourselves a place in eternity by believing Jesus died for our sins is too shallow and simplistic and turns many people away from a valid spiritual quest. We are all in need of conversion, that is, the orientation or re-orientation of our lives around a center of value and meaning. Consciously, I hope, or unconsciously you are involved in a process of deciding to which values you will give your ultimate allegiance, what view you have of the goodness or badness of humankind and how you will use your time and energy on the basis of that view, and what you believe about the nature of God and ultimate reality and in the way that belief will impact on the way you live.

Life itself is a process of one conversion after another, of changing from what one is to what we are becoming. Higher education in particular is an area that encourages transformation at every level of our life. We harm ourselves if we are not open to intellectual, moral as well as spiritual conversion. Any possibility for achieving a sense of meaning and joy in our lives demands opening ourselves to such conversions, — such transformations.

Whenever you find yourself asking a significant questions about any dimension of your life that concerns you, you are beginning a process of opening yourself to new possibilities that will convert you. Any time you find yourself struggling with a life situation that leaves you not knowing what you are to do or what you are to believe or, who you can trust, is trusting you into an experience, often over which you have no control, that can reshape your life and change you in significant and important ways.

I hope that you will seek the possibilities inherent in questions and struggles and changes. They are the seed of new life for you, new possibilities. Above all, I hope you will not let trivialized presentations of Christianity deter you from being open to whatever conversion is awaiting you in your spiritual journey.

In Concert: Dave Wopat

Dave Wopat performs Wednesday

Award-Winning ... sensitive ... entertaining ... twisted ... all are adjectives that apply to DAVE WOPAT, a performer who defies conventional musical categories and labels. "High-tech pop rock" probably comes closest to describing Wopat's unique blend of guitar and vocal virtuosity with 1990's music technology.

Utilizing a computer-controlled eight-track sequencer, synthesizers, and programmable drums, Dave produces a singular live sound for a solo artist, with up to nine separate instruments programmed to perform simultaneously with his live guitar and vocals. No longer chained to conventional acoustic instrumentation, Dave can break from the traditional mellow approach of solo singers to strap on his Fender Strat and produce an extraordinary energy-infused brand of rock.

This versatility has enabled Dave to be first choice as opening act for a wide variety of artists such as Michael Martin Murphey, Robert Klein, Dave Mason and Louise Mandrell, as well as make a highly successful network television debut as the featured performer on NBC's Fantasy.

Dave's impact on the college market might best be indicated by his selection as the 1984 Campus Entertainer of the Year in the small concert category by a nationwide ballot of National Association for Campus Activities (ACA) members. The Campus Entertainment Awards were established by NACA, the largest campus activities organization in the U.S., to bring national recognition to outstanding performers in the college venue.

As his rapidly accumulating credits and accolades attest, Dave is a quickly ascending talent on the verge of national recognition as a writer and performer. So don't miss the opportunity to see DAVE WOPAT in concert. It's guaranteed to be a memorable experience that you'll tell your friends about now and in the future.

The Halfmoon Productions Committee of the UNCW University Program Board will present Dave Wopat in Concert at 8 pm, Wednesday, Oct. 14, in room 100 of the University Union. Admission is free and refreshments will be provided.

Art Exhibit

At New Elements Gallery

"Matching Outfits" by E. Darrow

The works that are currently being featured at the gallery include oil pastels and other new works by artist Elizabeth Darrow, and new work in glass by William Rector. A sample of Darrow's work in the collage medium is pictured above. The exhibit will remain on display through October 24. New Elements is located at 216 North Front St.

The UNCW Jazz Combo

Jazz concert on Sunday

The UNCW Jazz Combo and the 7:00 Jazz Ensemble, directed by Frank J. Bongiorno, assistant professor of music, will present a concert this Sunday, October 18th.

Last year, the UNCW Jazz Combo was a finalist in the First Annual Musicfest U.S.A. competition, a national jazz event held in Chicago.

Some of the compositions performed by the Combo will be from the Art Blakey Library. Also featured in this portion of the program will be an original student composition by Shawn Hudson, entitled San Juan.

The 7:00 Jazz Ensemble is a "big band" consisting of 21 members. The compositions range from the blues- Big Dipper, and Basically Blues, to Latin American - Samba Con Getchu, to modern jazz- Dauphin Dance and Seven Steps to Heaven.

The concert, which starts at 3 pm, will be held in Kenan Auditorium on campus. Admission is $1, and UNCW students will be admitted free.

SHORTS

Play Day for Leukemia

Play Day For Leukemia, sponsored by WWQQ 101 FM, will be held Sunday, October 18, 1987 from 1:00 pm until 4:00 pm, at the Greenfield Amphitheatre, Greenfield Park.

Participants are invited to run, jog, walk, skip, bike or wheelchair around the lake. All money collected in the way of donations by the participants will benefit the leukemia society of North Carolina. All registrants will bring their collections and compete for prizes the day of the event.

Categories include most money collected, most times around the lake, etc. Following the event, a free pizza party will be held at Showbiz Pizza Place, 4389 Oleander Drive, where prizes will be awarded. Contact Chairman, Joanie D., at WWQQ for more details on registration and for general information.

Kids' art class

The children's popular art class, Art After School, will again be offered at the Wilmington arts center, which is located at the corner of Second and Orange streets downtown.

The class, which is for children ages 6-11, will be taught by local artist Sybil O'Thearing. Monthly projects are as follows: October- Paper Marbling; November- Drawing class; December- Holiday ornaments.

'The Foreigner' opens next week at SRO Theatre

Charlie knows everyone's secrets. People confide in him because Charlie does not speak English. Or does he? Such is the premise of a hilarious comedy that will open an exciting new season of University Theatre at UNC-Wilmington.

"The Foreigner", by Larry Shue, will be directed by Dr. Terry Rogers and feature Paul Sebastian as Charlie. Stephen Reilly plays Charlie's friend Froggy LeSuer with Juli Brockmann as Betty Meeks, the owner of a country fishing lodge. Other guests at the lodge are portrayed by Steve Vernon, Adrienne Carey and Brad Thomas. Terry Schappert, Mave Martin, Lisa Brannock, Cindy Carroll, Kimberly Clement and Sonia Brand complete the cast.

Hilary Russell will be assisting Dr. Rogers with Tom Macie as set designer, Caroline DeMoss as costume designer, Derek Hollande as lighting designer, Julie Macie as make up designer and Bonnie Rogers as poster designer.

The author, Larry Shue, was killed in a plane crash two years ago, but the comedies he left behind continue to delight audiences. As Michael Feingold of The Village Voice states, "some writers, like some actors, have the gift of making an audience laugh without having to stretch or stoop..." "The Foreigner" proves that Larry Shue was one of those infamously comic geniuses.

"The Foreigner" will be presented from October 21 through October 25 at 8:00 pm in the SRO Theatre at UNC-Wilmington. Admission is $4.00 for the general public, free for UNC-W students and faculty. For further information, call 393-3440.

King Diamond mixes heavy metal and horror on Abigail

By Scott Urban

Remember those schlocky Hammer horror films from the late sixties and early seventies? In addition to perennially reworking the Frankenstein and Dracula myths, Hammer churned out some generic spine-tinglers (Circus of Blood and Twins of Evil, for instance). Most of them incorporated vampires, but they also made use of other gothic staples, like ghosts and demonic possessions. The Hammer movies were full of despicable villains, honorable male heroes, and bosomy women, who were almost eager to become victims.

King Diamond has created the same sort of atmosphere on his second solo album, Abigail. (Diamond's real name is Kim Petersen, and he hails from Denmark). Abigail is almost a tribute to those Hammer films. First of all, be aware that Abigail is a "concept" album—there is one story that runs through the entire LP, and each individual song acts as a chapter in an unfolding drama. Nowhere on the album cover does it state that this is a concept album, so if you're simply looking for a headbanging collection, don't say you haven't been warned.

Abigail's plot is set in the mid-1800's (as most Hammer films) and centers on a newly-married English couple, Jonathan and Miriam La Fey. They travel across a desolate countryside to inhabit a decrepit mansion that they inherited. Their journey is full of ominous portents and omens, and anybody with any smarts would have turned back long before reaching the destination. The couple take up residence in the ancient structure, and Jonathan learns of the mansion's fateful history from the ghost of an ancestor. Meanwhile, Miriam becomes possessed by Abigail, the vengeful spirit of a miscarried fetus (no, I'm not making this up). Things to go downhill from there, and the story winds up with what I'm sure Diamond hopes is a terrifying conclusion.

Of course, what you want to know is: "Does this album rock?" It does, and in heavy metal spades. Diamond's band (the remnants of the Satanically-influenced Mercyful Fate) play as if -- well, possessed. Lead guitarist Andy La Roque (we are talking mad up names here, aren't we?) can scorch the frets, and certain songs (or chapters), like "Deadly Omens," actually acquire an out-and-out funky beat. Diamond's voice is another matter altogether. If you haven't heard it before, it takes some getting used to. Diamond doesn't sing so much as he chants, going through lyric lines in alternating low and high pitches. Of course, they do all kinds of strange studio effects with his voice to make you think you're listening to a demon, but we all know better. Luckily, the album comes with printed lyrics (you'll need it the first couple of times through).

If horror movies require a willing suspension of disbelief, horror albums demand it to a greater degree. Abigail makes an interesting experiment: can you put a gothic novel into musical form and have it work? One way to tell: gather your friends (whether they're into leather or not), cook up some popcorn, and treat Abigail just like a late-night "Creature Feature" flick.

On Books:

Gary Devon's Lost is a suspenseful find

By Scott Urban

In the mid-seventies, some homespun philosopher came up with the dictum: "If you love something, set it free. If it comes back to you, it's yours. If not, it never was." (This sold a lot of cards and posters printed on recycled paper.) Later, a cynic sarcastically changed the last phrase to read, "If not, hunt it down and kill it." Although that's not exactly what's going on in the book, the same sentiment is echoed in Gary Devon's debut novel, LOST.

LOST in paperback from Knopf and in paperback (from Warner) is set sometime in the mid to late fifties. The Korean War is going on, radio features dramas and soap operas, and TV is still a relatively new-fangled phenomenon. In this sepiatinted world, three people do a deadly waltz of obsessive love and fanatic hatred. Seven-year-old Mamie Abbott is the only friend to her oldest brother Sherman. Sherman is not altogether mentally well. For some time, he has been introducing his sister to the illicit pleasures of eavesdropping and thievery. Aside from his sister, he has and wants no connection with the objective world. He is a throwback, a savage, although definitely not a noble one. He has distanced himself from society not only in spirit, but by withdrawing from everyone except Mamie, but also physically, in an unsuccessful suicide attempt.

The other player in the unfolding drama is Leona Hillenbrand, 34 years old. Throughout her life, Leona has had friends and guardians, but no one has ever actually loved her simply for herself. In an act even she does not fully understand, she kidnaps Mamie, who is laid up in the hospital following a fire that destroys the rest of her family. (Or so the world believes; Sherman has actually fired the house to escape institutionalization.)

What follows is a harrowing cross-country chase. Leading the chase is Leona and the abducted Mamie. Later, two other children, neglected and abused by their mother, come under Leona's protection. Sherman, accompanied by a gigantic, fierce mongrel dog called the Chinaman, tracks them on foot, relentlessly, mercilessly. His resourcefulness is astounding, yet he is prepared to kill anyone who gets in his way. The story moves to a terrifying conclusion on an isolated river island.

No one in the book ever gets physically lost. Rather, they are emotionally and spiritually lost. Each one has tried to let love and affection come to them naturally, but that course has failed. Desperate, they go out in search of caring, with disastrous consequences. Sherman searches for the only individual he feels for, his sister. In his wake, he leaves a number of murdered corpses. Eventually, he even loses his sister, his one tenuous connection with reality. Leona, despairing of love ever coming her way, tries to make off with it, kidnapping Mamie. Although her actions are finally vindicated and she appears to have found a love of her own during the pursuit, she indirectly brings pain and misery to most people she knows.

For a first novel, Devon's is remarkable. The writing is crisp and vibrant. He strikes just the perfect ground between a kind of gritty realism and a detached, dream-like narration. The pages abound with not just fitting, but innovative descriptive passages: "The shot jarred him off balance and his tense face hurtled sideways, blurred like a swiftly unwinding bobbin of thread," and "...it was too late to do anything. It was like watching a ball of kite-spring unwind faster and faster in his hands until it was out of control and burning his fingers."

The passages told through the eyes of the children, particularly Mamie, are especially compelling, giving us insight into that world where the real and unreal mix. The characters are believable, even if coincidence plays a large part in working out the plot. (And it is probably significant that the first thing we learn about Leona is that she believes her life is run by coincidence.) The climax leaves just enough up in the air to make the reader want more.

Read this one, and be on the look-out for Gary Devon's next novel.

Stephen King's latest novel, Misery, is a joy

by Scott Urban

One of the basic rules I picked up in a creative writing seminar was: "Don't write about writers. Only would-be writers find the subject of writing interesting." Stephen King, in his latest novel MISERY, shatters that convention. And like most conventions he shatters, he does it convincingly and entertainingly.

MISERY is King's most focused novel, with only one setting and two characters throughout. Paul Sheldon is a writer who has made his reputation on a series of shlock romantic novels featuring the heroine Misery Chastain. Even he considers the romances hack work, concentrating on his mature, "serious" work when he can.

Following a crippling accident in the Colorado countryside, Paul is laid up in the home of his self-proclaimed number one fan, Annie Wilkes, a huge ex-nurse. Instead of taking Paul to a hospital or phoning the authorities, Annie nurses him back to health herself, leaving him hooked on a highly addictive pain-killer. You see, Annie is dangerously, frighteningly psychotic. And when she finds out that Paul has killed off his character Misery in his latest novel, Annie does not take it too kindly. She asks him to write another novel bringing Misery back, and Paul realizes that if he doesn't—he'll never see the outside world again.

As in all of his novels, King brings in many disparate elements and blends them into a suspenseful nail-biter. There are hints of ONE THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS, as Paul attempts, to prolong his life through Annie's interest in Misery's travails. There's a pinch of H. Rider Haggard's lost world novels, as Annie literally becomes a vengeful goddess to Paul, who is dependant on her erratic whims for his very life.

Amid the tension, King manages to examine some fundamental artistic questions. At its core, MISERY concerns itself with the creative impulse, particularly as it pertains to the craft of fiction. It is an illuminating light on the way King him-self fashions novels. It also looks at the relationship between the author and his audience; the sometimes vampiric dependency each has on the other. Does the writer owe any amount of responsibility to his reader? King's book is an engrossing way of delving into these academic issues.

Although the literary digressions might not interest the casual reader, this isn't an entirely cerebral work. There are passages of stomach-wrenching intensity as Annie's psychosis grows deeper, including scenes of graphic mutilation. MISERY has some of King's most gripping writing.

I had some concern that, coming out as closely on the heels of EYES OF THE DRAGON as it did, MISERY might be the first King book not to catch on in the marketplace in untear years. But it's been on the New York Times Bestseller List for more than 15 weeks in a row, so it is this writer's guess that neither King nor his fans have anything to worry about yet.

Still, thanks for the MISERY, pal.

Your horoscopes for this week

by Joyce Jillson

For Wednesday, October 14, 1987

Venus sextiles etherine Neptune. Singles should mingle. They could meet someone whose ideals match theirs. Soul mates? The Taurus- and Libra-born will succeed because of their extra dash of inspiration. Surround yourself with beauty. Take a more relaxed approach to life; bend down and smell the flowers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your mind may contemplate weighty matters. Plans for an important trip may, unfortunately, be disrupted, but you end up going before long. Health matters improve.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Instead of being able to relax, you have to give an important matter your attention. Expenditures are likely to be higher, as you need more things. Read between the lines.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Be willing to take a back seat to others. If you avoid displays of temperament you can get a lot done. You could feel angry because people aren't taking you seriously.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Be less sedentary; do the right exercises to get back in shape. Not everything will go according to plan, but you can turn this into an advantage. Gather data.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Create your own opportunities. Small-scale projects will have a tendency to mushroom. Focus on ideas, not emotions. You do the right thing at the right time. Career gains are likely.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). The unpredictability of events may have you felling insecure. Nothing of earthshaking importance must be decided now. Enjoy talking to people for its own sake.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You get surprising news, and it gives you a real jolt. Catch up on correspondence and calls. If you're leaving on a trip today, it will be an enjoyable one.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The subject of money comes up again, and you have more than a few comments to make. If you need your siblings, they come through. Your emotional needs will be satisfied.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You may be striving to be No. 1 in other people's lives. Relationships have an underlying tension that you need to address. Career progress is steady.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It's time to deal with your chaotic finances. Nervous energy may make you feel like climbing the walls. Approach co-workers with a problem.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Being around people is the very thing you need. It will be easier for you to make the emotional adjustments needed. Instead of worrying, have faith in yourself.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The more attention you give your partner, the better. Others may accuse you of being too emotional. Keep a record of your dream experiences; they are valuable.

For Thursday, October 15, 1987

Moon is in Leo. Do everything with flair. Shop for colorful garments and accessories. Spend time with a child. Love affairs that start today have an auspicious future. Be willing to make the first move. If you feel so moved, give someone a surprise gift. Life seems bigger and brighter than ever.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Somehow you find a way to juggle the various facets of your life. Make friends with those who inspire your creativity. Your flexibility is your greatest asset.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You may find it difficult to accept others at face value. Romantically speaking, you're doing ok. Work conditions are improving all of the time. Check out investments.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Make plans if you want, but give yourself another day before implementing them. Your sense of life's wonder helps keep you young at heart. Get needed instruction.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). This is no time to fool around, be willing to say what you think. You can have the career you want if you begin to work for it. Your partner is more loving toward you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Financial involvements are increasing. Wait before making a major personal commitment; get more information first. Money can be made from writing, traveling, or teaching.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Everyone is clamoring for your time. Do what you can to please others without dropping from exhaustion. You may find it hard to resist impulse buying, but try.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). There's still time to get your job application in before that deadline. Action is not enough, you have to explain yourself, too. Don't undermine your self-confidence.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You'll operate best in a behind-the-scenes capacity. Since retiring from your job, you may be unsure about what to do with your time. Your health improves.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Now is the time to step into a leadership role. Marriage is likely if you're finished sowing your wild oats. Be careful what you put into writing, protect yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). The right thing to do is follow your conscience. Release your guilt about a past action. Your preparations for an important meeting are worth it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Asking someone you know is better than going to strangers. What happens in your love life will teach you more about living than a dry book; follow the dictates of your heart.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You may feel as if you're giving more time than you're receiving.

Strengthen your existing relationships as much as you can. Try not to make promises you can't keep.

For Friday, October 16, 1987.

The outlook for romance is rosy indeed-- moon is in Leo. This is an excellent party night. Make the right social gestures. Above all else, be generous. Give a little, spend a little (but you might end up spending a lot!) Mercury goes retrograde. An old flame might pay you a surprise visit.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your dashing presence will be appreciated by the opposite sex. Saturday finds you making many stops to visit friends. On Sunday, try another meal at your favorite restaurant.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Don't hold your purse strings too tight; let yourself be more lavish today. On Saturday, others will be eager to please you. Sunday is perfect for viewing either a movie or a ballet.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Your sunny wit will be on full display. On Saturday, you may feel like connecting with a former boyfriend or girlfriend. Party at home on Sunday with your favorite people.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You'll love getting out among the bright lights. On Saturday, you'll find it easy to make the right impression. Sunday finds you in a sizzling romantic mood.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You can meet someone special-- the moon is still in Leo. On Saturday, you come back down to earth emotionally, but remain in a good mood. Intimate talks are satisfying on Sunday.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Your plans for going out on the town may shift completely, but you come up with something better to do. Saturday and Sunday find you holding center stage. Your magnetism is strong.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). The movies and theatre attract you in true moon-in-Leo style. Shopping together on Saturday will be fun. Sunday may find you feeling intensely erotic.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Your more extroverted mood will be attractive. Saturday finds you exploring new relationship possibilities. On Sunday, a romantic dream may come true, so get out and meet people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). If you're attracted to two people, you have some trouble deciding. Focus some of your party activities at home on Saturday. On Sunday, try a trip to a health spa.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You and your partner may set new goals for your relationship. Enjoy the fruits of your material labors on Saturday. Sunday might be perfect for a drive in the country.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Staying in and partying at home will be less of a strain. On Saturday, you feel a new enthusiasm about life. Sunday is excellent for indoor sports activities.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You'll shine among friends. Dress with a little dramatic flair. On Saturday, your lover will appreciate your special attention. Eat out on Sunday.

For Saturday, October 17, 1987

Today is full of mixed blessings: Mars squares Neptune. If you've got a drug or alcohol problem, now is time to do something about it. Also, take extra precautions against infections or sexually transmitted diseases. Sun sextiles Uranus. Intuitive breakthroughs give you the insights that you need.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Even if you don't get the recognition you want, you can still do things for your own satisfaction. Work conditions are bound to improve. Money brings piece of mind.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Use more than one method to get the job done. Your Cancer friends are the ones to turn to if you need help. An old acquaintance may come back into your life.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Forget your self-importance for the time being. You will get powerful group support if you know how to take advantage of it. Try a slower and easier pace at work.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Do as much as you can on your own. It's time to pay back a few favors. Get prepared now to make a major decision over the next couple of days. Money matters improve.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Emotions could overwhelm you. Family members need more of your time and attention. Keep your domestic roots down. This is a good time to look for an apartment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You gain great satisfaction by spending time with your family. Career openings may develop in some type of research. You're feeling more magnetic than usual.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). After all of the work you've done, your magic moment of success is here. Doing your own thing is OK as long as you still accept responsibility. Gifts may come.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Keep your mind on the work at hand, even if you feel as though you want to throw in the towel. Property investments increase in value. Superiors are open to suggestions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Do what you can to further your desires. You can easily find the right gift for your friend's birthday. Money is security, and you discover a way to get more.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You get your way if you know how to ask. Take advantage of an opportunity to increase your education. Long-range plans are easily formulated; stick to them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). All the recognition in the world won't mean anything if you don't respect yourself. You're learning how to deal with influential people. Intuition: as right on.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Put yourself in a position to advance yourself. You can solve a family problem now. Do what you can to encourage your child's creativity. Be willing to compromise.

Bulimia victim speaks

Dear Dr. A.

I have read your column with interest and I would like to contribute to it by telling about a very difficult experience in my life. I am hoping that maybe I can help some others who may find themselves in a similar situation as I was.

OK, here we go: I can remember five years ago when two of my friends and I decided we would race to see who could lose the most weight in the least amount of time. The proud winner was me! I had lost fifteen pounds in two and a half weeks. At that point in time, I did not know that I was the loser in this bet because, after living off of lettuce, diet drinks, and bouillon broth, I developed anorexia. Later on I was to become a documented case of anorexia and bulimia. I hid this problem from my family and friends for three years.

If a doctor was looking for anorexic or bulimic behavior, he would have found it. My hair, always brown and shiny, turned red and dry; my temples were swollen and my eyes started to actually bulge from my sockets because of vomiting; and my throat was three times the regular size.

After three years, I could not go on any longer. I told my family and boyfriend. All of them were very shocked. It was decided that I would go to Duke Medical Center. It was the hardest decision to make in my life.

I was put on a program of classes about food, and a regular diet and exercise program with other food disorder patients. I always had alot of support but it was up to me to take control of my problem and deal with it. I learned why I did this to myself and after three months of psychological and emotional struggle, I finally conquered this deadly disease. It will never totally disappear, but with the support of my better understanding of the disease, I am in control and don't purge and starve myself.

It is very hard for me even now to explain how all this happened and I cannot give advice to others who are truly anorexics. But I do know I changed my mind when one of my closest friends in the hospital was used to a stretcher and I watched the nurses pound baby food into tubes being forced into her throat. In each arm were needles giving her nutrients she refused to give herself.

Bulimia and anorexia are deadly, dangerous diseases mostly found in teenage girls. I was one of them and I will never regret signing my name on the admittance sheet. It was a long way to recovery, but it saved my life and it could save yours. C.P.

Dear C.P.:

I feel very touched by your courage to tell us about your life. I am confident that this will, in fact help some of your fellow students.

I would like to add a couple of comments for some of our readers who may not be quite as familiar with eating disorders. You mentioned two conditions, anorexia and bulimia. Anorexia, the more deadly of the two disorders, involves refusal to eat, often paired with vigorous exercise, sometimes to the point of literal starvation. Bulimia generally involves episodes of overeating (binging), alternating with episodes of quick weight reduction attempts by self-induced vomiting (purging), use of laxatives, or starvation. The effects of this practice on the body system are severe and sometimes result in death also.

Support and counseling for eating concerns are available at the Student Development Center.

Thanks for your letter and all the best.

Drumming up some support

Your Hometown Team!!! That's the slogan for the 1987-88 UNCW men's basketball team.

It's a nice slogan with a very specific aim. An aim that was in dire need since Associate Athletic Director Jim Bass came to UNCW in the summer of 1986.

Bass' need and UNCW's as a whole is the need for more local recognition and support. So far the support has been growing, but not as much as the University needs and deserves.

The search for that support continued Saturday when Bass and the UNCW athletic department held Seahawk Day at Independence Mall.

"I was overwhelmed by the response and turnout of folks who stopped by to talk about the program," said Bass.

"Hopefully it's a sign of good things. I think it will carry over to a very successful year."

Last year, UNCW had two sellouts in Trask Coliseum for men's basketball, twice as many as in the whole history of the arena. This year, things seem to point to a similar turnout.

Last year the students had to pick up tickets to the Navy and East Carolina games days before the contest, something only seen at bigger ACC schools.

Tickets for the East Carolina and Navy game were distributed the week before the games, giving all students a fair chance at getting a ticket. Over 1,600 tickets were allotted, a large percentage of the tickets compared to much larger schools.

In fact, the Navy distribution created so much enthusiasm, that over 900 students camped out all night, while another 500 showed up by the early morning hours.

This year, these two phenomenon need to become common practice. The students should come out in droves this year, not needing the push they received from athletic department campaigns last year. The overall atmosphere among the students is they now have a basketball team capable of anything (remember that near upset of last year's national champion Indiana) and the more students that come out, the more festive the games.

"Season ticket sales are going well," Bass expressed. "But it is hard to predict sellouts due to the difficulty in getting big name players into Trask Coliseum. Attendance should be as good as last year."

This can't be said of the Wilmington community. They have a viable entertainment product right under their noses and they still haven't made the commitment to the University. When it comes to Trask, with over 50,000 people in Wilmington alone, coupled with the 6,500 students, Trask should be filled to its capacity of 6,100 every night. In fact, Trask Coliseum should be obsolete by now due to its limited capacity.

"It takes time," said Bass. "There has not been the interest that exists now. We are creating an interest."

As far as the student situation, according to Bass, they are the backbone to any successful program.

"We need the students at all games," said Bass. Even over the holidays, the students are very important to us and we must encourage them to stick around for those games."

Many students who had never seen a game before, cried when they couldn't get tickets to the Navy game. The athletic department came under criticism for their distribution policy, something that won't happen this year.

In conjunction with the SGA, Bass and the athletic department will work with an SGA appointed committee to address student ticket allotment and distribution. All decision will be made in conjunction with SGA.

Linksters impressive at Beacon Woods

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

BAYONET POINT, FLA. - The UNCW women's golf team finished 11th out of 14 teams in the prestigious Beacon Woods Invitational.

The women finished with a three-round total of 949, only one stroke behind pretrial power Oklahoma State.

In the second round, UNCW shot a school-record team total of 303. The Seahawks were led by Paige Cribb's 234 (82-74-78) and freshmen Christina Jaskolski's 235 (77-76-82). Cribb and Jaskolski finished 27th and 28th respectively. Other Seahawk competitors were Sandy Chester (84-76-77-237), Mary Thomas (86-77-82-245), and Laura Covington (85-84-81-250).

"The best thing about the 303 round was the consistency," said Coach Lea Dudley. "I was pleased with our performance, but we know how close we are to competing nationally."

"It is hard to see us 11th out of 14 teams because that doesn't tell the true story. Four teams in the tournament were in the top twenty nationally."

The Hurricanes of the University of Miami captured the team title with a combined score of 880, 24 strokes better than its closest competitor, The University of Georgia placed second with 904, followed by the Seminole of Florida State with 911.

"I am ecstatic with Christina's play," remarked Dudley. "Her short game is one of the best of any college player I have ever seen, including Nancy Lopez now we only need to give her enough distance to turn par puts into birdies."

Tracy Kerdyk of the University of Miami received the medalist honors firing 214 on the championship course at Bayonet Point.

Seahawks open cage practice

From staff reports

UNCW Wilmington basketball coach Robert McPherson admits feeling more comfortable about the beginning of practice this season. But that doesn't mean times are going to be easy for the second-year Seahawk mentor.

"We've got a lot of work to do," McPherson pointed out on the eve of his second campaign at the Colonial Athletic Association school. Like most collegiate teams, UNCW opens practice Wednesday, the first day allowable by the NCAA.

The Seahawks kick off the season Nov. 28 with a McPherson home contest against Georgia Southern at Trask Georgia Southern captured the Trans America Conference championship last season, advancing to the NCAA Tournament. "We're anxious for practice to get here. Everybody's in good shape. We've worked hard in the weight room and outstanding weather has allowed us to run outside without missing any days."

For the first time in four years, UNCW's dominating center, Brian Rowsom, will not be in camp. He's moved on to the Indiana Pacers, where he's currently trying to make it with the National Basketball Association club.

That leaves a big hole to fill for McPherson and assistants Bob Rosenkranz, Lee Hood and Cletus Green.

"The big question mark is finding somebody who can pick up the scoring load that Brian carried," said McPherson. "You're not going to replace Brian Rowsom or (graduated senior guard) Sandy Anderson. I do think we'll be much quicker overall, and have more depth, too."

Depth is something the Seahawks have lacked in recent times. But 1987-88 could see McPherson going to his bench more often for reinforcements.

Seven new players, three freshmen and four junior college transfers, will suit up for the daily practices, scheduled for 4-6 p.m. at Trask Coliseum. Practices are open to the public.

Brannon Lancaster (Terry Sanford/Fayetteville, N.C.), Scott Tierney (Homewood-Flossmoor/Homewood, Ill.) and Major Wiggins (Jones/Olando, Fla.) are the first-year players. The transfers are Tim Brewer (Westark/C.C./Muskegon, Okla.), Antonio Howard (Emmanuel J.C./Charlotte, N.C.), Larry Houzer (Jefferson State J.C./Birmingham, Ala.) and Willie Williams (Faulkner State J.C./Ft. Walton Beach, Fla.).

"First of all," McPherson said, "we'll start installing the offensive and defensive systems that will be the foundation for the entire year. Almost half of the ball club is new, so we'll have to teach the system again like we did

Seahawks spike Mason, American

From staff reports

FAIRFAX, Va. - The Lady Seahawk volleyball team captured two big Colonial Athletic Association matches Sunday defeating American and host George Mason.

UNCW, now 14-4 overall and 2-0 in the CAA, lost just one game in the two matches. The Lady Seahawks downed American in the opener, 15-6, 15-11, 17-15. In the second match of the twinbill, UNCW defeated the host Patriots of GMU, 15-12, 15-8, 7-15, 15-8. Dede Devoley and Mary Lou Ryan played key roles in the UNCW triumphs. Last Monday, UNCW struggled to beat Methodist College. The Lady Monarchs came from a first game deficit of 8-0 to win the first game, 15-10. UNCW came roaring back taking the next two games, 15-6, 15-2, before the Lady Monarchs evened the match at 2-2 with a 15-9 win in game four.

UNCW put Methodist away in the rubber game of the match, 15-9, to remain undefeated at home.

UNCW plays again today when they host Campbell at 7 p.m. in Hanover Hall.

Card-plagued Seahawks fall to Coastal

From staff reports

Iceland native Sigurdur Sveinbjornsson scored a pair of goals within a two-minute period in the first half to victory over UNCW Wilmington Wednesday at Brooks Field.

The loss left UNCW with a 5-6-1 overall record. The Seahawks, 2-2-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association, have a 10-day layoff before returning to action next Saturday at Richmond.

"I thought the kids played hard and held their own," said Jackie Blackmore, UNCW's second-year coach. "They deserved a better fate than this. It's just unfortunate that they had to play under these circumstances."

Blackmore was referring to a expanded by 50 and 200 spaces, respectively. The lot will cost $788,300, of which $100,000 will come from the parking fund.

The parking fund is composed of monies collected from the sale of parking stickers and fines collected from parking and traffic violations.

The remaining $688,300 will be borrowed and must be repaid in fifteen years.

In other business, the board approved a request by the Center for Public Television for improvements to WUNJ Television Wilmington. The tower will be removed from its present location Delco to a new tower with a stronger transmitter in Winnabow.

If you are interested in flu prevention make an appointment with the student health and wellness center. They will help determine if you should get the vaccine and then write a prescription for the shot. The vaccine is a simple shot taken in the arm and has little if any side effects. The cost is only $4, and it can be obtained beginning Oct. 15 at the New Hanover Health Department. Though flu season is still a ways off it is best to go ahead and get the shot because it takes two to six weeks to take full affect yet last up to six months or more.

Katie Gilbert, a nurse practitioner at the Wellness Center feels that "students need to be made aware of the vaccine so they can make the decision whether or not to try and prevent such illnesses."

"The Student Wellness Center is behind the vaccine 100% because they believe in preventive medicine. This is one reason for 'the big push on immunization,'" said Mrs. Gilbert last Monday. For further information on immunization, the flu itself, or to make an appointment contact the student health and wellness center at 395-3280.

The season's changing and so's the menu

I don't know if it has hit the coast yet but there definitely is a golden glow to the day light hours now. This is a sure sign that fall is here.

For several days this past week I had to be up and out in what I refer to as "almost the crack of dawn." Traveling west as I did and into a higher elevation, I noticed that the dips and valleys of the road were filled with mist. A sweater felt good thrown over my shoulders as I cleared each night's accumulation of dew from the car windows.

I didn't see any wooly worms trying to cross the highways, maybe they had better sense.

Even the tip-top leaves in the trees showed a different color, some of the hard woods had almost a yellow cast to the foliage. There was wildflowers competed with the yellow daisy for attention.

I didn't need any more than this to remind me that fall was here but then I spied sweet potato fields being harvested and cotton fields waiting to be picked.

Yes, it is fall in the south, and time to change our eating habits again.

A friend ushered in the change of season this past week with a big pot of stew. I gave more than a passing thought to a bowl of chili!

One of my favorite meals to cook is a one dish affair, it takes a lot less time, fewer dishes and the combined flavors is something that I like.

Just recently while looking through one of my hand-me-down cook books, one published by the Family Circle Magazine, "What's For Dinner, a meal planning cookbook." I found a new one dish meal.

For "died in the wool" southerners it had the right title, "Dixie Dandy" and claims that everything needed was on the pantry shelf.

Its apparent that who ever wrote the book, had not spent anytime looking in my pantry. It is like Mother Hubbard's BARE. So out came the shopping list and on it went applesauce, canned luncheon meat, canned sweet potatoes and apricot jam.

A quick look on the spice shelf also convinced me that I needed ground ginger and dry mustard. Whole cloves I had, left over from a craft project that never got started.

I had just the right bowl in my new stoneware set, a shallow 6 cup baking dish which goes from oven to table and is equally at home in the freezer.

Add to a pound of applesauce, 1/8 teaspoon of ginger. Mama told me long time ago to use ginger sparingly for it is strong.

Cut your meat in half lengthwise and then score it into 12 pieces. Be careful not to cut all the way through, in each little square stud a whole clove. Place meat on applesauce.

Slice about a pound of sweet potatoes (one can) cross wise and arrange around the meat.

Combine a 1/2 cup jam, 1/2 tea dry mustard and 1 tbs. water in a cup measure and spread evenly over the meat and potatoes. I have seen cooks who keep a small paint brush just for this purpose.

A writer friend decided one day that he was going to take up painting as a hobby. After a few tries, the only thing he uses his brushes for is to spread glazes on is cooking masterpieces. Bake in a hot oven (400 degrees) for 30 minutes until hot and richly glazed.

Serve up your one dish meal with a vegetable salad and some hot rolls and watch four hungry people become happy contented people.

If you have a package of biscuit mix or are smart enough to make some homemade mix, you are two steps closer to having a quick Cheddar Muffin for dinner.

Mix 2 cups of mix, 1/2 cup of grated cheddar cheese (one half of a four ounce package) and 3/4 cup milk until moist.

Spoon into 12 greased muffin tins and sprinkle with paprika. Bake at 400 degrees for 15 minutes or until golden brown, serve hot.

Both of these dishes will fit into your oven and there is enough time lapse from the time you put your meat dish in to mix up your muffins. Things will still come out on time.

Use the time after putting in dinner to make a salad and freshen your lipstick.

You men, slap on some cologne and straighten your tie.

Mamas approve of both good food and good looks at the table and above all good manners. L.T.J. Features

Alcohol Awareness events slated for this week

By Celeste Bulley, Managing Editor

All UNCW students, faculty and staff are invited to participate in the festivities for the duration of National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week.

Oct. 21, students can come to Room 100 in the Union from 11:30 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. to relax with drinks donated by local bars and music from WLOZ.

That evening, be sure not to miss Miss Jean Kilbourne, a nationally recognized media analyst who will present Under The Influence, her examination of the images associated with alcohol in advertising. Her lecture will be at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium and admission is $1.00 with a valid ID.

"Thirsty Thursday" is your chance to have your favorite professor, administrator "jailed" in the Union. The cost is $3.00 for faculty or staff who are willing to participate, and $2.00 for a friend.

A Greek Shag-A-Thon has been planned for Oct. 24, in The Cage (the tennis courts behind Gateway Hall) and students are invited to learn to shag, or sponsor a Greek.

(Alternatives), the office sponsoring Alcohol Awareness week at UNCW hopes that the planned activities will help students realize the value of drinking responsibly.

NEWS IN BRIEF

WORLD

Iraq appears increasingly likely to lose its land war against Iran, despite the heavy U.S. presence in the Persian Gulf, according to a congressional report released Sunday. The report went on to say that "an Iraqi defeat would be catastrophic for Western interests... But unfortunately there may not be much the United States can effectively do to keep Iraq from losing.

NATIONAL

Pressure is being lowered on Congress to invoke the War Powers Act following the Monday morning attack made by U.S. warships in the Gulf.

Experts feel that last week's Dow Jones industrial average's tumble of 235.48 points or 9.49 percent should be no cause for panic. Rather, they suggested, it should serve as a warning for certain policy steps that are much needed. Several business leaders said Congress and the administration should take the stock market activity as a warning to address the deficits in the federal budget and the balance of trade, as well as the poor coordination of Western international economies.

Nancy Reagan's doctors said Sunday that final laboratory tests of tissue removed during the breast cancer surgery that removed her left breast Saturday showed no sign of malignancy. They said Mrs. Reagan was "recovering remarkably well" with an excellent prognosis for a full recovery.

Freshman students give input on orientation

By Jefferson Weaver, Editor in Chief

Students who went through orientation this summer are getting the chance to tell officials exactly what they feel about UNCW now that they have some college experience under their belts.

In a directed individual study overseen by the Dean of Students, senior Paul Barnes has been meeting with selected freshmen students who went through the orientation program this summer in an attempt to see how they have fared since classes started.

During the summer sessions, students were divided up into orientation groups led by upper classmen. These groups, typically 15-25 freshmen and one leader, are now being called back, invited to dinners, courtesy of the Dean of Students Office. After the meal, the students are asked about their likes, dislikes and how they think UNCW could be changed or improved.

In the meeting of Sherry Brissson's group Sept. 29, most of the students said that they were not involved in any clubs or organizations on campus and that they wished something more would be done about the parking problem.

History professor is not your typical teacher

By Wendy Williams, Staff Writer

Dr. Larry Cable is the new Military History professor at UNCW. Dr. Cable has served in the Marine Corps, and beginning at the age of twenty-one, served in Vietnam for a total sixty-three months.

On the U.S. involvement in Vietnam, Dr. Cable said, "It's the only war we had that I thought we fought wrong."

He said that he liked the Vietnamese people and that they were a reason that he continued to serve in Vietnam for the length of time that he did. He said that during the war he was not anti-American government.

In the spring of 1989, Dr. Cable will teach a course on Vietnam. He plans to emphasize how the war was fought, what was wrong with how the United States fought, the domestic effects of the war, and reasons why the U.S. lost.

How does he currently feel about world politics? "I don't trust the Russians as much as I trust us

(the United States)," he states. "Sometimes we have to make accomplishments through hard means, not easy means."

Dr. Cable is married, but has no children. Good-humored and very likeable, he wears his hair long, and sports a look that is reminiscent of the 1960's.

Asked if he were making a statement, he said, "I didn't have hair for so long that I figured it was time I had some... also, for every guy that cuts his hair, there's

60 companies will visit Career Day

(UNCW News) Approximately 60 companies from Southeastern North Carolina and other parts of the country will take part UNCW Career Day '87 at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m., Wednesday, Oct. 21, in Hanover Hall Gymnasium. Students, faculty, staff and interested alumni are invited to visit Hanover Hall, view the displays, and talk to representatives of business, industry, the Armed Forces and other governmental agencies.

"Career Day gives students and faculty the opportunity to learn about potential employment opportunities, career preparation needs, and employment projections and trends," explained James Braye, director of the Student Development Center and the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Students should attend in their school clothes. "This is not like a job fair, where resumes and suits are required. This is an opportunity to exchange information for later reference. Conversations began at a career and employment," Braye said.

Although it may seem that Career Day would be of most interest to the senior class, freshmen, sophomores and juniors are encouraged to attend. "This opportunity gives students a chance to work on career planning. Most students start too late, they should do themselves a favor and start the process early," said Braye.

The Career Planning and Placement Center, located in room 106 or the University Union, urges students to come by and find out about their other services. "We have just received a VCR, receiver and video tapes on resume writing, interview techniques and job placement, which are available to students through the center. We have a great deal to offer students through the center. We have a great deal to offer students here and we want them to begin to use our facilities early in their college career. What we give here, they can't find outside and if they do find it somewhere else, they can't afford to pay for it. Here it is free and at their disposal," explained Braye.

Richardson says that founding fathers were "searching for a future"

By Elizabeth Peacock, Staff Writer

On Oct. 15, the Political Science Dept. of UNC-W sponsored a lecture called Constitutionalism Today: Rights and Responsibilities. Dr. Richard J. Richardson, a professor of Political Science at UNC-Chapel Hill, spoke in Bryan Auditorium on the rights and obligations citizens have under the constitutional system.

Dr. Richardson's whole lecture centered around the framers (writers) of the Constitution and their original intent in writing the document. He emphasized the fact that they were "searching for the future," and that Madison, the father of the document, was quoted saying, "The document is nothing more but a plan — until life is breathed into it by the people."

According to the professor, one of the greatest strengths of the Constitution is its representation of freedom.

"That (representation) alone provided incentive for liberating this society," said Dr. Richardson. "The government must permit individual freedom to make choices with minimal restraint."

Richardson said Americans ought to look at the rights and liberties of the people as the framers did, and not just at the Bill of Rights. He feels that there is a terrible problem of "concentration" in this society when it comes to living up to the Constitution's laws and limits.

He doesn't think that our country will be in jeopardy just because someone forgets the First Amendment.

"Democracy is jeopardized," he said, "When authority in the ## Athletic exceptions down, reports say

By Jefferson Weaver, Editor in Chief

The number of students admitted as exceptions to admissions policies for athletic programs has for the most part dropped throughout the UNC system, according to reports issued to the Board of Governors here Oct. 9.

There had been some controversy surrounding the report after the first time it was made public in 1985, because, according to the report, no other system had ever submitted this much information of this type before. Because the reports set a precedent, officials feared overreaction on the part of the media and the university itself.

The reports concerned admissions procedures, academic preparation of students before entering college, and the number of athletes graduating within four years after leaving high school.

At the I-A institutions, which had football and men's basketball, fifteen students were admitted as exceptions at East Carolina, where in 1986, eleven students had been allowed to attend school and participate in sports. The annual average from 1980-1984 was approximately 23 students. North Carolina State and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill both had seven students in 1987, with an annual average (1980-84) of 14 and 17, respectively.

In the fall of 1985, the number

Dr. William Overman, professor of psychology and adjunct professor of biology, has received an award of $2000 from RPH, assessment of learning and memory in pre-school children. The project, partially supported by the UNCW Research and Development Fund, has potential implications for the early diagnoses of some learning disabilities.

Dr. Brent Toplin of the history department has been appointed to the Eric Barnow Prize Committee by the Organization of American Historians. Each year the committee awards the prize for the outstanding film dealing with American History.

The UNCW Faculty Senate Research committee has five undergraduate research fellowships available for the 87-88 academic year. The fellowships, open to any rising junior or senior who has completed at least one semester at UNCW, have a tuition waiver of $410 and can be retroactive for the fall '87 semester where applicable. Candidates must file their applications with their respective department chairman no later than November 2, 1987. For additional details call Dr. Laws, research committee chairman, at 3497.

The Fine Arts and Lectures Committee of the UPB will present Dr. Jean Kilbourne, authority on alcohol issues and sex roles, in a slide/lecture presentation titled "Under the Influence: The Pushing of Alcohol Via Advertising" October 21 at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. $2; UNCW students with ID $1.

The University Theatre will present Larry Shue's, "The Foreigner," October 21-25 in the S.R.O. Theatre at 8 nightly. Reservations may be made by calling 3440 from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. during the week of production.

Paul B. Eaglin has been appointed UNCW's special assistant to the chancellor for legal affairs. In addition to his duties as legal advisor he will teach part-time in the Cameron School of Business Administration. Eaglin was admitted to the NC State Bar in 1976 and holds the Juris Doctor degree from Duke University. He leaves Methodist College in Fayetteville where he was director of the special services program for disadvantaged students and adjunct instructor of business law. His office is located in HO-215-A and he may be reached by calling 3855.

Steven Schick, affiliate artist percussionist, will be available in the music division Tuesday, October 20, from 2-4 p.m. From 2-3 p.m. He will meet with percussion people and from 3-4 p.m. He will present an "Informance" for all interested people in KE-114.

The American Lung Association will be conducting "Freedom From Smoking" clinics on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-8:30 p.m. through November 3 at the New Hanover County Health Department. Call Deborah Haywood at 3726 for more details. $28.

Academic computing services will offer a workshop on SPSSX Graphics Wednesday, October 21, from 2-5 p.m. in HO-117C. This graphics package allows one to create virtually all types of graphs from data and in color. For additional information or to make reservations call Kim Stowell at 3805. Prerequisite: A working knowledge of SPSSX.

The Wilmington Parks and Recreation Department is looking for actors and actresses to portray historical characters for the 87-88 school year.

Interested parties should have 1-2 free hours per week and provide their own transportation. Participants are paid. Contact Audrey Evans at the Arts Center at 341-7860.

Two local artists were awarded prizes in the Riverfest Public Art Mural Contest held on Saturday, October 3. Patrick Dougherty and Carl Patterson each created murals on the side of a building adjoining the Riverfest tenting site. The two-day event. Judges Anne Brennan and Donna Moore declared the contest a tie for first place. Anne Brennan commented, "Both of the works were very good, very different styles, and the artists worked very hard. It's too bad they can't stay up until the rain washes them away!"

Mr. Dougherty's work in pastels was entitled "Working the River." Mr. Patterson's work in tempera was entitled "Wilmington, 1787." The second annual mural contest was sponsored by the Residents of Old Wilmington and the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear.

CFI loans offered

Three educational loan programs for North Carolina residents attending colleges in or out of state and for nonresidents attending colleges in North Carolina are still available through College Foundation Inc., in Raleigh — for the entire 1987-88 school year or for single terms.

One program is for dependent or independent students and is based on financial need. One is for independent self-supporting students and is not based on financial need. The third is for parents of dependent students and is not based on financial need.

For more information, write College Foundation Inc., P.O. Box 12100, Raleigh, NC 27605 or call 919/821-4771.

Halloween Fun at the Museum

On Saturday, October 24th, at 2:30 and 3:30 pm, storyteller Steven Henegar will present "North Carolina Mysteries and Legends" at the museum.

Mr. Henegar says, "I have stories old as the hills, new as the grass; soft as the moss; hard as rocks! So, young or old, there's a story I'd like to tell you!" Among the stories he will tell during this special Halloween program are "Sound Under the House," "Choking Doberman," "Dead Moon," "Granny Get Your Knife," and "Boy and Rattlesnake." Mr. Henegar will be available for question following the presentation, and he will be interested in hearing stories from the audience.

Mr. Henegar has a BFA in acting and directing from the University of Oklahoma and is currently artist-in-residence at Cape Fear Technical Institute. He has performed as teller, actor, and children's theater director for over fourteen years. He has worked with the North Carolina Mountain Arts Program, the Washington State Arts Commission, and numerous libraries, story festivals, and other cultural organizations across the country.

Hurricane Hazel Remembered

On Sunday, October 25th, at 2:30 pm, Spencer Rogers of the North Carolina Sea Grant at Ft. Fisher, will present a special film and slide lecture entitled "Hurricane Hazel Remembered."

Hurricane Hazel, the most destructive and deadly hurricane to hit the Lower Cape Fear region in modern times, struck the North Carolina coast on Oct. 15, 1954. The Hurricane Hazel film, a 30-minute black and white "historical document," was shot by WECT-TV6. The footage will focus on the destruction along the coast including aerial photography of New Hanover County, Brunswick County, and the Myrtle Beach area.

Rogers is a Coastal Engineer for the UNC Sea Grant, and he is on the staff of N.C. State University in the Department of Civil Engineering. Rogers has been part of the Sea Grant Marine Advisory Service on coastal processes and hurricane resistant building construction for nine years. He will provide comments to accompany the film and be available to answer questions following the presentation. Both programs are free.

Poetry Contest to host bands

Friday October 23 is the last day to submit your bad poetry to the English Club's Bad Poetry Contest. Prizes and gag gifts will be awarded to all winners and losers. The reading will be on October 27 in the University Union room 201 at 7:30 p.m. The will be four bands present. The public is free to attend and read their bad poetry. There is no admission and submissions can be taken at the Union Information Center, the Writing Place, and the English Department office.

UNCW Grad Stevens promoted to loan officer

Larry Robertson, City Executive for Southern National Bank in Wilmington, announced Oct. 13 the promotion to loan officer of Helen Ward Stevens, a 1984 graduate of UNCW.

Mrs. Stevens joined the bank in 1984 as a management trainee.

After graduating from UNCW with her Bachelor of Science in Marketing, While at UNCW, she appeared on the Dean's List Spring '82 and Fall '82 and was the recipient of the Lower Cape Fear Executives Association Scholarship (1983-1984) and was a member of Sigma Alpha Beta, a business fraternity. Before receiving the promotion, Stevens completed the RMA Omega Commercial Loans Business course.

Auditions to be held

The Thalian Association community theatre will hold auditions for the musical "A LITTLE NIGHT MUSIC" Monday and Tuesday, October 26 and 27 at 7pm in the Loft at 115 Red Cross Street.

18 roles are available, 15 of which are singing roles. People who audition are asked to prepare a vocal selection for presentation during the auditions.

The hit song, "Send In The Clowns," comes from this musical which will be directed by Frank Tribble with musical direction by Doregene (Dora-gene) Gurganus.

Additional information may be obtained by calling the Thalian Association at 251-1788.

Biology fellowships offered through Howard Hughes Medical Institute

Approximately 60 Doctoral Fellowships in Biological Research will be awarded in an international competition sponsored by the Howard Hughes Medical Institute (HHMI) and administered by the National Research Council.

HHMI supports the education of outstanding students and attempts to ensure the strength and vigor of the pool for biomedical research through its Doctoral Fellowships Program.

The eligibility requirements for this award are as follows:

1. Applicants may be citizens or nationals of the United States or foreign nationals.

2. Awards will be made for study in research-based doctoral programs (Ph.D. or Sc.D.) in biological sciences in the current areas of HHMI-sponsored research: cell biology and regulation, immunology, genetics, neuroscience, and structural biology. Specifically, the following fields are eligible for support under this program: biochemistry, biometrics, and biostatistics, biophysics, cell biology and regulation, developmental biology, genetics, immunology, microbiology and virology, molecular biology, neurosciences, pharmacology, physiology, and structural biology.

3. Hughes Doctoral Fellowships are intended for students at or near the beginning of their graduate study in the biological sciences. Thus, applicants must not have completed, by the beginning of the Fall 1987 term, more than 24 semester hours, 36 quarter hours, or equivalent, of graduate-level study in the biological sciences following completion of the baccalaureate degree in medicine (M.D.), veterinary medicine (D.V.M.), or dentistry (D.D.S.). These individuals are eligible to apply for support under this program for work toward a Ph.D. or Sc.D. degree in the biological sciences regardless of the number of hours of study they have had in the biological sciences.

4. Foreign nationals for whom

English is not the primary language are required to submit scores from the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL).

The application deadline is Nov. 13, 1987 and for information and application materials write to: Hughes Doctoral Fellowships, The Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418 or telephone (202) 334-2872.

The awards will be announced in March of 1988, and each award includes an annual stipend of $12,300 (for 12-month tenures) to the Fellow, and an annual cost-of-education allowance of $10,700 in lieu of all tuition and assessed fees. Hughes Doctoral Fellowships will be for three years with an option to extend for an additional two years.

HHMI welcomes applications from all qualified individuals and strongly encourages members of minority groups and women to compete fully in this program.

government slips and power is left to move upward."

In addition, he doesn't think that our society should "worship" the document "as a sacred text" and that we should not be afraid to build and grow within the boundaries set by it.

After his lecture, Dr. Richardson answered questions from the audience of about 70 people.

The questions ranged in subjects from due process to censorship. Superior Court Justice Sam Ervin, III moderated the question and answer session, as well as lending his professional view when he could.

In conclusion, Dr. Richardson urged Americans to "not to be crippled or cramped for using the document as it was originally intended... Always be prepared to experiment."

Economic activity here up between June and July

Overall economic activity in the Wilmington area (Brunswick and New Hanover Counties) rose between June and July 1987. The July 1987 level of the Wilmington Area Business Index (WABIX), prepared by Dr. Claude Farrell and Dr. W. W. Hall, Jr., at UNC-Wilmington, stood at 152.09, 1.6 percent above the June 1987 level and 6 percent above the July 1986 level of the index.

Retail sales were 3.9 percent higher, air passenger traffic at the New Hanover County Airport was 2.4 percent higher, and commercial capital usage was 1.9 percent higher. Employment was up by less than 1 percent.

The Wilmington Area Business Index (WABIX) is a monthly measure of overall economic activity in the Wilmington area. It has a base year of 1979. All data used in the index are seasonally adjusted. In addition, the retail sales data are deflated by the Consumer Price Index (CPI) and thus converted to 1967 dollars.

Freshmen speak out on orientation likes, dislikes

Many of the students who live in on-campus housing said that the school needs "something that we can do on the weekends." Suggestions for weekend activities ranged from dances to ice cream socials sponsored by student groups.

One student complained of trying to attend a club activity and after arriving on time, found herself to be the only person there — at 5:30 a.m.

Assistant Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Richard Mullendore is overseeing the project in hopes of finding "where and how we can ease the transition... into college life."

"There's always room for improvement in any program," he said. "With the input of these students we should be able to better help students have an even better start in their college career."

Yoga classes offered at Wrightsville Beach

Wrightsville Beach Park & Recreation Department will offer two 7-week Yoga Classes beginning October 27, 1987.

The 'Continuing Yoga' class will begin Tuesday, October 27, from 7:00-8:30 p.m. This class is for students who have had previous Yoga training and desire more challenge. Cost is $28 for Wrightsville Beach residents and $30 for non-residents.

The 'Gentle Yoga' class will begin Wednesday,

October 28, from 6:00-7:00 p.m. This class is structured for beginning students who wish to learn gentle and basic yoga postures, stress relief and relaxation. Cost is $20, Wrightsville Beach residents and $22, non-residents.

The instructor is Nancy Hayes, who has over 11 years experience teaching Yoga.

For more information, contact the Wrightsville Beach Parks & Recreation Office at 256-4744.

Senate reprimands seventh member this semester

By David King, staff writer

The Student Government Meeting began Monday with a reprimand for Senator Jim Humphries. This is the 7th reprimand in the past month.

A reprimand consists of two unexcused absences and further absences can result in stripped privileges.

The current attendance policy was implemented last year because of the inability to reach quorum due to absences.

Other items on the agenda include an amendment to allot $1600 to the Parks and Recreation club provided they raise an additional $400.

The allotment is for conference, banquet and fraternity expenses.

During schedule business the senate amended a revision of the constitution forcing all salary changes for SGA organizations be received first by a subcommittee of the finance committee.

During last week's meeting President King declared that it is wrong to take the power of the finance committee, and if the Media Publications Board felt that the finance committee did not give someone a fair sum, they could "give" a scholarship to them.

Redneck solution to the Persian Gulf

Perhaps all the drawn out mischief in the Persian Gulf isn't being handled in the best way possible.

What, you say. A staunch Reaganite capitalist warmonger like that redneck columnist saying that something has gone wrong?

Before you get your political feathers all up to ruffle, let me explain a little more.

Now, ya'll know that I am a wee bit partial to hunting. So are some of my closest friends. Some of those friends purely looove deer chasing in their 4X4 trucks (not my idea of how to do it.)

Once again, before the animal-loving folks who stick pins to their voodoo dolls with beads get to working on me, I think I have a solution to two problems at once: the Persian Gulf and my erstwhile contemporaries who are deer hunting from the shoulders of area highways.

Export a few hundred of my contemporaries over to the Gulf.

I mean, think about it. Ask for volunteers from all the states which have large numbers of truck driving, beer drinking, 'baccer chewing good ol' boys. Export said good ol' boys, with trucks, bass boats and Harley-Davidson motorcycles, along with whatever various and sundry armaments mounted in various areas on said vehicles.

And turn them loose. Really. The boats that the revolutionary navy critters are using are nothing but fancier bass boats than what Billy Joe has in the back yard.

Silkworm missiles? No big deal. Jim Bob never goes home from bird hunting without a limit of birds. He'd probably have to lead the missiles a little more, but no big deal.

Might have a little more incentive, because he wouldn't have to clean and cook a dead Silkworm.

Pickups, Politics and Hound Dogs

With Jefferson Weaver

Ya'll remember last year when that gentleman up in Raleigh took a potshot at an airliner with a Winchester .30-30 (that's the rifle John Wayne carried, to ya'll uneducated city folk) and actually hit the damn thing?

Think about it. Another example as to why a defense system of good ol' boys, a Redneck Brigade, if you will, would be effective can be seen every morning on almost every morning on many a back road from Virginia to Texas.

Imagine how worried many folks on a more or less normal level of consciousness become when they see long lines of large four-wheel-drive pickups parked beside the road with large hairy men carrying guns standing in the bed areas of said trucks.

Now, imagine yourself a wildeyed, hopped up person who has just been handed a poster of the Ayatollah and told to go take on the Great American Satan.

And that Satan shows up in boots, blue jeans, and a "God, Guns, and Guts" made America great — let's keep all three" T-shirt that's about three sizes too small and is almost covered in a long black beard.

Imagine that Good Ol' Satan parked in your back yard with a ten foot high GMC pickup sporting a full gunrack and a bumper sticker featuring Mickey Mouse extending an uplifted middle digit and saying, "Hey Iran!" while waving an American flag in the other hand.

Enough to frighten anybody, including your most fanatical. Multah, into believing that maybe capitalism ain't such a bad idea after all.

Pardon me while I go pop a top and listen to one of my Hank Williams Jr. tapes.

Which one? "A country boy can survive," of course.

Strike should be just a beginning

After being pushed around, shot at, and taunted in the Persian Gulf for so long, it was almost a relief that our government finally decided to "do" something other than hang around and wait to be shot at.

While we don't wish to sound hawkish, the strike against the oil installations in the Gulf is hardly the type of reaction that we expected.

Regardless as to what they say, the other countries in Western Europe are going to look to the United States and adopt a wait and see attitude — let's wait and see what those crazy Americans are going to do, and then we'll make our own move.

And a token hit like Monday morning's shows nothing more but the continued lack of a real policy in the Gulf.

One needn't be an expert strategist to see that when dealing with a group of more than slightly insane (or maybe "just" fanatical) people like the leaders of Iran and Iraq a strike should be something more than a fireworks display.

As it is, all we have really done is give the mullahs and the adolescent grenade throwers something to scream about as they rush in to kill more Americans. The attack was, as one commentator put it, almost "piddly-squat."

As an example, we offer the air strike against Col. Khadafy's sandbox some time back.

True, Khadafy isn't a Khomeni, but when was that last time we heard from the Gentleman from Libya?

History has shown that when diplomacy fails, fighter bombers can do wonders.

Guest Editorial

The only real "experts" on hunger are hungry people, and their hunger is caused by poverty. On World Food Day, 1987, the agencies of the Interfaith Hunger Appeal (IHA) ask you to reflect on this statement and support activities that enable people to lift themselves from the conditions that deny them access to food.

The problem of hunger cannot be solved by giving away food, although that may also be necessary in times of emergency. Rather, hunger will diminish only when those in need have the purchasing power and the opportunities to grow or buy their own food—in other words to become self-reliant. Self-reliance in turn, can be achieved only through a process of development in which people work together to remove the barriers—some of them institutional—that prevent the poor from improving their lives. All too often the social and economic growth of societies is achieved at the expense of those who are most in need. The benefits of growth must be spread broadly among all sectors of society.

To foster self-reliance, the agencies of IHA, Catholic Relief Services, Church World Service, Lutheran World Relief, and The American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, work in partnership with overseas colleagues to provide agricultural training, expand credit opportunities, promote income-generating activities and enhance decision-making skills of poor people. Removing barriers to development and helping to create opportunities allows for the remarkable resourcefulness, wisdom and skills of capable people to flourish. Sharing experiences and conclusions, the agencies of IHA respond to specific needs by acknowledging and building on the talents and customs of their partners in the developing world.

You may be thinking, "But what can I do?" I am only one person." You can do more than you think by (1) understanding the problems and causes of hunger and actively involving yourself in the development of public policies that address these injustices, (2) organizing or joining campus groups that inform and motivate others to a better understanding of global hunger and (3) upon graduation, involving your corporation, community, and religious organizations in efforts that will make the lives of some 500 million people more humane.

What can you do? You can do a great deal by keeping informed and involved.

STUDENT FORUM

History professor remarks on Britt's column

Dear Editor:

In twenty-one years of college teaching, I have never written a letter to the editor of a college paper. Nor am I writing to criticize a student editorial or news item. Rather, my letter is prompted by Montague Britt's column "Veiv From Right Field," carried in The Seahawk of 10-14-87. I realize that hyperbole is the specialty of political columnists, of both the right and the left, and that good taste rarely restrains an ideologue of any persuasion. But Britt owes an apology not only to all blacks, but to anyone who respects the truth, for his characterization of the Senate hearings on the nomination of Judge Robert Bork to the Supreme Court as "the most brutal and flagrant lynching in the nation's history." This statement he makes after ridiculing efforts of the Congress to pass a lynch law in the first half of the century.

I end this letter by calling your attention to the enclosed, a report of an actual lynching in Mississippi. The 1914 account is copied from Leslie Fishel and Benjamin Quarles, The Black American (Glenview, Ill.: Scott, Foresman and Co., 1976), 375. I hope that after reading it you will understand the extent of Mr. Britt's exaggeration, which is, in my opinion, motivated by racism.

Sincerely,

Melton A. McLaurin

Dole may yet be the candidate unless a new campaign manager won't work

In spite of repeated national polls that tell you differently, I have found that most conservatives, including me, who have expressed a preference, lean toward supporting Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., for president in 1988.

Dole has a record of showing friendship for a good understanding of the South, and his beautiful and brilliant wife, Elizabeth, who is, of course, a Southerner, should be an asset and a credit to the nation as first lady.

I haven't changed my opinion about any of the above statements, but a recent development has disturbed me considerably.

That is the resignation of U.S. Labor Secretary Bill Brock to manage Dole's presidential campaign.

Brock has been quoted, and by a responsible source, saying the right to work is not a valid issue.

I can conceive of no more vital issue at the present time, with an attempt to regain domination of the American system by the forces of organized labor.

Dole has been a friend of free enterprise and opposed forced unionism, but hopefully his supporters, or potential supporters will, as I certainly intend to do, see to it that right to work is made an issue and kept above as a major issue throughout the entire campaign.

Not only is preservation of state right-to-work laws essential, but in state elections the candidates ought to be questioned on what they think might be done to outlaw devious methods of giving preference in hiring to union members in defiance of state law.

Currently there is before the U.S. Senate a vicious device to force construction workers in right-to-work states into unions, and incredible as it is a senator from North Carolina, Terry Sanford, is reported undecided on how he will vote.

There is nothing in Sanford's record to give hope that he might be impressed by communications from conservative constituents, but it couldn't do any harm for North Carolinians who believe in individual liberty to give it a try.

The best news on the labor front since President Reagan fired the underworked, overpaid air traffic controllers for striking against the country is the total flop the football strike has turned out to be.

Unions virtually dictated all United States policy from the early 30's into the 70's, including many social issues totally unrelated to legitimate labor interests.

The power has been broken, and if the people understand what is at stake and stand up for the rights of the individual, it can be kept that way.

Hullabaloo is ho-hum: a less shiny view of festival

Riverfest was to be a big part of my weekend. In actuality it was 90 minutes of my weekend. I arrived at Chandler's Wharf at 10:30 a.m. Saturday and I had seen enough by noon. I didn't expect to have much fun, but I did expect to kill a few hours.

The Encore and This Week papers were loaded with Riverfest activities. After reading through them I realized not one thing interested me. Not one! Bo Diddley would have—but not for $15.00. He cancelled anyway—that figures. I figured that it might be fun to walk around and people-watch while sipping a few beers, or what the hell—guzzling many beers. So much for that plan.

Walking around with a beer is prohibited; you have to stay within the confines of a fence where beer is purchased. That sucks! I think an exception should be made for Riverfest and the Azalea Festival. The street is blocked off, and hell, it's supposed to be a party. It's so much fun to have a beer buzz on and goof on people.

Cairns

I walked from one end of the fest and back; it was very similar to walking in an open air mall. Vendors were selling junk; vendors were selling food; vendors were selling junk food. A Dixie Land band and a top 40 band played on and on—wow.

Since I can't write a whole column on Riverfest I would like to mention my biggest bitch about Wilmington. Ready? What does Wilmington have against rock and roll? I think that a real rock and roll band would have made Riverfest enjoyable—but noooo. It was the same old top 40 crap.

If any of you think that top 40 is rock-n-roll—then you have been sadly misinformed. If you believe that the so call rock-n-roll stations in this city play rock—fine. You can listen to them as you play with your Barbie dolls and/or G.I. Joes. If these stations want to play their crap, that's ok, but don't call themselves a rock station. The self-proclaimed #1 rock station in Wilmington is nothing but a farce and a hassle, and has got me listening to classical music in my car.

Recently I witnessed a guy circling the Behavioral Science building in search of a parking spot. He was blasting his stereo, and I couldn't believe what was coming of those speakers—it was actually Janet Jackson or Madonna. (The same thing as far as I am concerned.) I mean it was blaring, and polluting the entire area. This guy, (you know who you are) definitely wins the Geek Of The Week honors, hands down. If you are going to force your music (and I use the term loosely,) make it good blasting music like Zeppelin or The Cure. Something like that, you geek!

I finally wised up and now have the only rock-n-roll alternative in Wilmington. I hooked up my cable to my stereo and hear real music now. Of course I'm referring to UNCW's own WLOZ. I was beginning to think that rock was dead, but it is alive and well on WLOZ. From now on it is rock, blues, and reggae for this guy. No more Janet Jackson! I didn't realize how out of touch I was. I never even heard of many of these bands. They have great names like: Skinny Puppy, Naked Reagan and Bare Butt Spankings. I'm just kidding about Bare Butt Spankings, but I like that name. Naked Reagan is classic. I imagine the band got together and were trying to think of the grossest name possible. They probably talked of diarrhea or puke, and someone mentioned Reagan, then another band member said "Naked Reagan", and that tops them all. What would be grosser than that? (Sorry you young republicans. No offense.) WLOZ has the best weather reports too. I once heard that the temperature outside was about room temperature, and I also heard that it was cold and muggy. That is my kind of weather report.

Oh yeah, back to the Riverfest. From what I saw, nobody was having a good time. I saw many somber faces in the crowd. I did see a four-year-old having a blast with a balloon, but a four-year-old could be in a porta-john with a balloon and have a riot, so she doesn't count.

I guess I'm spoiled because I lived in Austin, Texas for six years, and they know how to have fun. They take fun seriously; they have it down to an art form. It is a tough place to go to school and try to pass. Temptation is everywhere. We need rock-n-roll, more hippies and more punk rockers to make festivals fun. All you good-looking UNCW women weren't there when I was. I could count on one hand the women who made my joints stir, and one was my wife.

I'd like to see UNCW women, hippies and punks at the Azalea Festival, and of course, Rock And Roll!

Upped drinking age hasn't changed things

No, raising the drinking age has not stopped students from consuming alcohol on campus. Even though only a very small percentage of on-campus students are 21 or over, we still encounter a number of alcohol related incidents every weekend.

It appears that alcohol has only become slightly more difficult to obtain. The most common means is having someone old enough to make the purchases for them. Fake identification are definitely more popular, but are not always able to pass "the card test".

Observations lead us to believe that consumption of alcohol on campus has been altered very little. One change detected, that could become an issue, is that when students do have the opportunity to drink now, they have a tendency to drink more excessively.

Damage to property, loud noise/disturbance, larceny, harassing/annoying telephone calls, fireworks and underage consumption are the usual problems. This does not include alcohol-related vehicle violations.

Many campus organizations and services work very hard to educate students about alcohol use and abuse. Students who would like further information, should contact or go by the following office(s):

Campus Police
395-3184
Student Health & Wellness
395-3280
Student Development Center
395-3280
Office Residence Life
395-3241
LivWell/Alternatives Center
395-3577
Dean of Students
395-3119

Students are also reminded that October 19-23 is National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week. Campus Police encourages all students to participate in these activities, especially Thursday's Jail-a-Thon from 10:00 A.M. until 2:00 P.M. Please call 395-3577 for more information about having friends and faculty arrested.

Breaking free of the "comparison syndrome"

One of the most difficult tasks we face is the development of a sense of ourselves that will allow us to break free of our tendency to always compare ourselves with other people.

Many of us often feel that the people that we talk to, hear of, or read about are more intelligent, more skillful, more attractive, more gentle, more generous, more practical, more spiritual than we are. It becomes incredibly difficult when we can't get away from measuring ourselves against others, mostly deciding that they are the real people, the together people and much better than we are.

If we think about this dynamic in our lives at all, it is clear that such feelings are distorted, destructive to our personal well-being, and damaging to a healthy spiritual life. But for many, there are 'very real feelings' that can generate a whole cycle of lowered self-esteem as we relate to people in a way that strengthens and confirms these feelings. It becomes the old self-fulfilling prophecy all over again. We enter into a new relationship and experience others as stronger, better, more valuable persons, and ourselves as weaker, worse, and not worth talking to. After a while the relationship becomes intolerable and we walk away from it feeling worse than when we started it.

Another dimension of this negative process is a tendency of folks with such low self-esteem to try and find ways to please others which leads us, in effect, to sell out our souls to the opinions of other people.

I raise this issue, because I am convinced that we can change and grow to a more fulfilling life based on a healthier and more positive acceptance of the goodness of our own unique selves. If you find yourself caught in either of these cycles, that is always seeing others better than yourself or always trying to please others by acting as you think they want you to, the first step you can take is by becoming aware of your attitudes and actions. You should become aware of these attitudes and the ways they affect your behavior, then you can decide to take responsibility for yourself and generate a desire for change. The next crucial step is to discover people in your lives or reach out to someone outside of your present circle of friends who can accept and affirm the real person that lives at the center of your Self. It takes reaching out to a helper, a counselor, or a professor, do it! It is worth the risk and the discomfort to develop a stronger sense of yourself.

Dealing with low self-esteem, is another reason we should develop our spiritual connection with God. Developing the paths to God of prayer and meditation allow us to be in the presence of that One who loved you before you could love, and who has given you your own self before any comparison to anyone else was possible. Each of us is a special unique creation of a loving God and the realization of that fact through our spiritual life can be an incredibly powerful factor in learning to love ourselves as God has loved us.

The journey to the humble sense of self-worth is difficult but the joy of discovering our own unique specialness is truly worth the effort. Think about it. When do you enjoy simply being yourself? When and where can you live when you are not self-critical or putting on some mask to please other people. It may be time to make some changes.

IN CONCERT:

Nanci Griffith performs next Tuesday

The Dark Night Concert Series comes to Wilmington on Tuesday, October 27 with a performance by singer/songwriter Nanci Griffith, perhaps the most significant American folk artist to gain prominence during the 1980s. Presented by Allison Lee, the concert will be held at Thalian Hall, 305 Princess Street, at 8:00 PM.

Since emerging as part of the rich Austin, Texas music scene during the late 1970s, singer, songwriter, and novelist Nanci Griffith has explored the lives of average people pursuing, finding, and losing their dreams. "Character songs are my favorite songs to write, observing real people and capturing them for what they are. I love that simplicity," she told writer Holly Gleason. "I think Nanci Griffith is a little piece of most of those characters in my songs."

Featured last season on public television's broadcast of "Austin City Limits," Nanci Griffith played to a standing room only crowd in Chapel Hill during the summer Dark Night Series. Rave reviews marked the release of her first major label album, Lone Star State of Mind, by MCA Records last December. Following four independent label albums, her move to Nashville marked a career milestone, but not a change of direction, for Griffith, who began singing in Texas honky-tonks at age 14. "They accept me as the artist I am," she explained. "They're being very careful about me....They don't see any changes for me....One of the things that they like about me is that I'm already a fully developed artist."

For Nanci Griffith success seems to mean acceptance for herself and her songs on their own terms. Preferring acoustic settings for her material, she finds no contradiction between her singer/songwriter integrity and exposure to the mass country music audience. "I'm a country/folk singer....I see myself as someone who's a borderline country person and someone who's a borderline folk person. I think the two have always complimented each other."

Opening the show will be singer/songwriter David Olney, whose musical career began, appropriately enough, by dropping out of the University of North Carolina during the late 1960s. The Nashville based leader of regionally popular rock band the X-Rays during the late 1970s and early 1980s, Olney has reemerged as an accomplished solo performer with a wealth of dark, surreal songs about aging prizefighters, petty crooks, ramblers, lovers, and players. His new Rounder release, Eye of the Storm, establishes this side of David Olney.

Tickets for Nanci Griffith and David Olney are $11.00 for preferred seating and $9.00 for the balcony. Tickets are available at the Thalian Hall box office (919-763-9328) and the Record Bar in Wilmington. For mail order ticket information, contact Allison Lee at 919-929-9670. Upcoming events in the Dark Night Concerts include Nanci Griffith at the Carolina Theater in Greensboro on Thursday, October 29 and Lyle Lovett at Chapel Hill's Paul Green Theater on Monday, November 9.

Affiliate Artist percussionist visits the area

Steven Schick, the third artist to visit the Wilmington area in the Affiliate Artists Series, is currently conducting a series of percussion "informances" in the local schools and community centers. Schick, whose residency here will end late next week, will present a public performance tonight (Wed., Oct 21) at Front Street News.

"Schick proved to have a gift for subtle phrasing and nuance in music that was as eloquent as any violin concerto." Thus critic Daniel Webster described a recent performance by solo percussionist Steven Schick. Interested in performing and expanding the demanding repertoire of contemporary percussion music, Schick has performed in major concert halls and universities throughout the United States and Europe. He has commissioned more than a dozen works, including the Percussion Duo by Pulitzer prize recipient Charles Wuorinen and Peter Lewis' Bricolage, a 1981 Friedheim Award winner. He has also recorded a number of these works for composers Recordings, Inc. (CRI) and the University of Iowa Press.

Schick has been featured as percussion soloist in television productions aired by the Public Broadcasting System (PBS), Iowa Public Broadcasting Network, and the Westdeutscher Rundfunk television network of Cologne, Germany. He was first prize winner in the 1980 International Competition of Brass, Winds, and Percussion sponsored by the American Wind Symphony in Pittsburgh. In 1982, he won Second Prize in the Gaudeamus International Competition for Contemporary Music in Rotterdam, Holland, and was awarded the Krantichstein Prize for interpretation of contemporary music at the "Ferienkursen für neue Musik" held in Darmstadt, West Germany.

A native of Iowa, Steven Schick holds Bachelors and Masters degrees in percussion performance from the University of Iowa and the Soloists' Diploma with honors from the State Academy of Music in Freiburg, West Germany. Currently on the music faculty of California State University at Fresno, he has also taught at the University of Iowa and Cornell College in Mt. Vernon, Iowa.

Selected to join the distinguished roster of Affiliate Artists Inc. in 1983, Steven Schick believes that educating and informing people about contemporary music is the best way to cultivate a wide and intelligent audience. In 1981, he coordinated, wrote and appeared as percussion soloist in an hour-long television production designed to introduce percussion instruments and music to school-aged children.

The Front Street News performance, which starts at 8pm, is Schick's only scheduled public performance. There is an admission charge of $5 for the general public, and $3 for students, children, senior citizens, and Arts Council Members. Advance tickets are available at both Front Street News and the Arts Council office.

The Foreigner' opens at SRO Theater Oct. 21

Charlie knows everyone's secrets. People confide in him because Charlie does not speak English. Or does he? Such is the premise of a hilarious comedy that will open an exciting new season of University Theatre at UNC-Wilmington.

"The Foreigner", by Larry Shue, will be directed by Dr. Terry Rogers and feature Paul Sebastian as Charlie. Stephen Reilly plays Charlie's friend Froggy LeSuer with Juli Brockman as Betty Meeks, the owner of a country fishing lodge. Other guests at the lodge are portrayed by Steve Vernon, Adrienne Carey and Brad Thomas. Terry Schappert, Mave Martin, Lisa Brannock, Cindy Carroll, Kimberly Clement and Sonia Brand complete the cast.

Hilary Russell will be assisting Dr. Rogers with Tom Macie as set designer, Caroline DeMoss as costume designer, Derek Hollands as lighting designer, Julie Macie as make up designer and Bonnie Rogers as poster designer.

The author, Larry Shue, was killed in a plane crash two years ago, but the comedies he left behind continue to delight audiences. As Michael Feingold of The Village Voice states, "some writers, like some actors, have the gift of making an audience laugh without having to stretch or stoop.... 'The Foreigner' proves that Larry Shue was one of those innately comic geniuses."

"The Foreigner" will be presented from October 21 through October 25 at 8:00 pm in the SRO Theater at UNC-Wilmington. Admission is $4.00 for the general public, free for UNC-W students and faculty. For further information, call 395-3440.

NEW HANOVER COUNTY MUSEUM OF THE LOWER CAPE FEAR

Halloween Fun at the Museum

On Saturday, October 24th, at 2:30 and 3:30 pm, storyteller Steven Henegar will present "North Carolina Mysteries and Legends" at the museum.

Mr. Henegar says, "I have stories old as the hills, new as the grass; soft as the moss; hard as rocks! So, young or old, there's a story I'd like to tell you!" Among the stories he will tell during this special Halloween program are "Sound Under the House," "Choking Doberman," "Dead Moon," "Granny Get Your Knife," and "Boy and Rattlesnake." Mr. Henegar will be available for question following the presentation, and he will be interested in hearing stories from the audience.

Mr. Henegar has a BFA in acting and directing from the University of Oklahoma and is currently artist-in-residence at Cape Fear Technical Institute. He has performed as teller, actor, and

I missed Gants when it first appeared on the shelves. I finally caught up with it in a used bookstore, and I'm glad I did. (A Dell paperback, you can probably special order it through an area bookstore if you're intrigued.) The authors, Richard Ashby and William Clair, are also policemen who have teamed up to produce an off-beat, compelling novel. Gants combines the elements of a police procedural and a supernatural mystery. This odd mixture has been toyed with before (Ed McBain has had a shot or two at it), but never with such handling.

Charlie Gants is a homicide investigator in Dallas, Texas. Recently divorced, he is entering his thirties and is relatively aimless. He and his partner, Wes Braverman, are investigating a series of brutal slayings attributed to the East Dallas Slasher. At the same time, the Dallas Homicide Division is rocked by the apparent suicide of a former homicide captain, admired by everyone on the force. Haunted by disturbing dreams, Gants begins to suspect there is more to the captain's suicide than meets the eye. Increasingly outrageous events lead him to connect the suicide with the Slasher's rampage.

Charlie Gants is an interesting protagonist, to say the least. Unlike many popular heroes, Gants is not particularly strong, courageous, smart or handsome. Throughout, he is more acted upon than acting. When a gorgeous blonde psychologist becomes attracted to Charlie, it's hard to tell what she sees in him. The plot, however, hinges on Charlie's lack of self-determination. It's his very sensitivity that makes him receptive to directing psychic influences.

The novel becomes progressively grim, and the conclusion is not uplifting. It doesn't give anything away to tell you the killer is apprehended—but the horror doesn't end there. The most chilling touch is achieved when the authors show how each character is a pawn or puppet. Everyone has strings that are being pulled by another individual, an institution, an ideal, or even, in Charlie's case, another world.

The writing is fairly straightforward, without florid descriptive passages. A better handle on characterization would have made the stretched-out plot easier to handle. I would have enjoyed a better feel for the locale. As portrayed, Dallas was synonymous with any metropolitan city, and East Dallas its bad section. The authors do quite a bit of harping on the tedium of police work, which I think most of the general public and reading audience has caught onto by now. Still, Gants is worth tracking down, if only for the intriguing blend of two distinct genres.

Walt Disney World sets audition tour

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Talent scouts from Walt Disney World will be on the road early this season in search of professional dancers, singers and musical-theater performers during a tour October, November and December to these 10 cities:

- Oct. 30 —Atlanta (Atlanta Civic Center, Room 201, 395 Piedmont Ave., NE)
- Nov. 1 —Chicago (Columbia College 11th Street Theater, 72 E. 11th St.)
- Nov. 4 —Detroit (Oakland College, Smith Audit, 27055 Orchard Lake Rd.)
- Nov. 7 —Cincinnati (Clarion Hotel Grand Ballroom, 6th & Elm Sts.)
- Nov. 10 —Provo, Utah (BYU Campus, 29 Knight Mangum Bldg.)

- Nov. 21 —Washington, D.C. (Marriott West End Ballroom, 1221 22nd St., NW)
- Dec. 5 —Orlando (Tupperware Convention Center, U.S. Highway 441)

They will be seeking a variety of entertainers for live shows in the Magic Kingdom, Epcot Center and in the Walt Disney World resorts located in the popular Central Florida vacation destination. All positions require dance/movement ability. Most are full, one-year positions offering relocation assistance, life, health and dental benefits plus vacation and sick days. Weekly salaries for chorus and principal performers, depending on the role, start between $298 and $432.

Auditions must be 18 years old before May 1, 1988, and should bring dance attire and a current non-returnable resume and photograph. They may be taught a dance/movement combination.

Singers should memorize short vocal selections (ballad and up-tempo) and bring vocal sheet music in their best key. Dancers will be encouraged — not required — to sing. Accompanist will be provided. For a detailed brochure call 305-345-5701 between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. (EST).

These are not auditions for technicians, stage managers, professional musicians, choreographers, show directors and variety acts — who can send resumes to Walt Disney World Entertainment Manpower Planning, Dept. BT, P.O. Box 10,000, Lake Buena Vista, FL 32830-1000.

Your Horoscopes for this week

For Wednesday, Oct. 21, 1987

Moon in Libra sextiles Saturn. Domestic conditions settle down. Investments, real estate ventures, and home improvements may take up your time. Emotional issues can be worked out with a minimum of hassle. Build for the future, and be willing to work for your goals. You may be ready for a committed relationship.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Concentrate on old, unfinished business so you can clear the decks for tomorrow's new moon. Bend over backwards to please your partner. You need others more.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Take care of your banking or mutual financial matters. After a brief hiatus, you get to see a few old friends. Your patience and carefulness pay off big dividends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Keep your communication lines open with everyone. Your negotiating skills are working fine. Do what you can to help a friend in need. Do more with your creativity.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Little is likely to upset your equilibrium. Devote more time to job responsibilities. This is a good time to surprise one of your friends with a small gift.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You'll stand out in the crowd. Your leadership ability is outstanding — and it's starting to emerge. Encourage your children's creativity. Movies or books are appealing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Your partner's feelings count now. Take a balanced approach to all things. Buy something for your apartment. Group activities are favorable in the evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Take the lead in business or relationship matters. Do what you can to improve your standard of living. Pay off debts. A romantic interlude is likely in the p.m.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You're in a soft and gentl mood, and others respond to your quiet charm. Find more time to spend with children. Your artistic tendencies are emerging.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). It may be up to you to arbitrate disagreements. Your love life is quiet but fulfilling. Keep your closest relatives abreast of your activities. You exercise sound judgment.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Weigh all factors carefully before you make any decisions. You may be thinking of making a marriage commitment. Your public image is positive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Take the necessary steps to ensure peace in your relationships. You're almost caught up on your work congratulations! Artistic pursuits will be satisfying. PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Leave little to chance. Good news may come — the news you've been expecting. Reconciliations are possible. Money can be spent on a few of life's luxuries.

For Thursday, Oct. 22, 1987

The new moon is in Libra. Relationships will be in the foreground throughout this month. Later in the day, moon enters Scorpio. You begin to sense an emotional undercurrent. Try to get to the depth of your feelings. A good heart-to-heart talk will help out. Thoughts of the unknown may occupy your mind.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). New developments freshen your relationships. Be willing to compromise to keep the peace. Wait until the evening to make a vital personal decision.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Do what you can to make your living quarters more harmonious. Luxury purchases are favored in the a.m. Your art project will succeed surprisingly well.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You feel a renewal of energy. Work conditions are improving, but you need to help them along. Take your best friend out to lunch. Surprises go over big.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). If a relationship isn't working out, now is the time to let it go. Superiors like your tactful approach. Be willing to do almost anything to improve your income.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Group activities take up your time. You can help society as a whole if you want to. A career in the entertainment industry may be possible. Educational opportunities exist.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Your financial situation becomes clear. If you want to have a relationship, you have to extend yourself. A bad love affair is finally healed. Put your health first.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You can wind up an important personal matter today. The evening hours will be emotionally intense. Use your influence to help one of your deserving friends.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Try to maintain your emotional equilibrium in the morning. The p.m. hours find you at your best. The next two days show outstanding results. Push yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Consistency will count for a lot. Your superiors may need handling with kid gloves. Luxury purchases are best made in the morning. You get the emotional support you need.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You may be drawn into public prominence. The evening hours may be quiet and reflective. Try to cut down on some of your business expenses. Complete what you start.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Favors are more likely to be granted in the early morning. Find some time to be alone later in the day. Thoughts of the hereafter may be on your mind. Look for answers.

For Friday, Oct. 23, 1987

Moon conjuncts Venus in Scorpio, making this quite a day for sultry romance. Maintain an air of mystery and you'll have others eating out of your hand. If single, you have a good chance of meeting someone tonight. Financial matters come to a head. You could make a lot of money if you're willing to take a few risks.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Tonight's activities are likely to be a combination of both business and pleasure. You feel sexier than usual. Saturday and Sunday are excellent for travel and sports.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll have an air of mystery tonight; it's OK to tantalize a few members of the opposite sex. Open communication on Saturday helps your love life; ditto on Sunday.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You may be in the mood for exotic entertainment tonight. Don't give people your life's story right off. You're in an adventurous mood both Saturday and Sunday.

Wachovia makes gift to Thalian Hall

The Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts announced today that Wachovia Bank and Trust has pledged support totalling $75,000 to the capital campaign to renovate, restore and enhance the 129-year-old landmark.

William Joyner, Wilmington City Executive for Wachovia Bank and Trust Company said, "We are delighted to be able to assist this important project, continuing a long tradition of community involvement on the part of the bank. Thalian Hall and City Hall are facilities used by all the citizens of our area and we know that our gift will help in seeing that Thalian Hall is here for generations to come. This campaign is large undertaking deserving of major support from all parts of the community."

Mrs. William H. Sutton, president of the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts, Inc. said, "Wachovia's leadership underscores the commitment to our downtown, the arts, to historic preservation and to the people of our area."

Based in Winston-Salem, Wachovia Bank and Trust has enjoyed a long and major presence in the Lower Cape Fear Region. Thomas H. Wright, Jr. of the Wright Corporation and a leader in the both this and the 1973 campaigns to enhance Thalian Hall is a member of the Board of Directors of the bank. Said Wright, "This project is one of the most significant of its kind that the community has undertaken in many, many years. Thalian Hall is a jewel, one which we must be certain is here for generations to come."

The campaign for Thalian Hall began in May. It's goal for the summer period was $500,000, and amount achieved on Labor Day. An additional $150,000 was pledged during the remaining three weeks of September. Mrs. Franklin Block, campaign co-chairman said, "We have a lot of large and smaller commitments which are outstanding at the moment. We hope to be at the $1.0 million mark by November 30."

The campaign is scheduled to continue until the end of the year and has an ultimate goal of $1.4 million.

Hurricane Hazel Remembered

On Sunday, October 25th, at 2:30 p.m., Spencer Rogers of the North Carolina Sea Grant at Ft. Fisher, will present a special film and slide lecture entitled "Hurricane Hazel Remembered."

Interested in Entertainment?
The Seahawk needs serious, straight forward persons interested in learning to write feature/entertainment oriented material. Must be able to accept criticism and editing where applicable. No petty hangup artists or perfect persons heed apply. Call 395-3229/3789 for information.

Hurricane Hazel, the most destructive and deadly hurricane to hit the Lower Cape Fear region in modern times, struck the North Carolina coast on Oct. 15, 1954. The Hurricane Hazel film, a 30-minute black and white "historical document," was shot by WECT-TV6. The footage will focus on the destruction along the coast including aerial photography of New Hanover County, Brunswick County, and the Myrtle Beach areas.

Rogers is a Coastal Engineer for the UNC Sea Grant, and is on the staff of N.C. State University in the Department of Civil Engineering. Rogers has been part of the Sea Grant Marine Advisory Service on coastal processes and hurricane resistant building construction for nine years. He will provide comments to accompany the film and be available to answer questions following the presentation.

Both programs are free.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Explore new styles of music, perhaps something from another culture. Your taste in food may be changing. Relationships need to be aired out a bit; don't cling.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You're in a more adventurous mood. Let go of a rigid weekend schedule. New friends are likely to be more stimulating than old ones. Take up a foreign language.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You'll have a taste for the exotic. If you go shopping, you'll have to resist the urge to overspend. Make long-distance telephone calls; catch up on the news.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Impulse buying could be a big temptation. Your sense of humor is your greatest asset. You'll have prophetic insight into business trends. Keep your overhead within bounds.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Promote your ideas, and back them up with action. Change meetings will be stimulating. Go to that book shop you've been meaning to visit. Money is spent easily.

Writer sings the roommate blues

Dear Dr. A.,

My roommate and I don't get along very well. He always has other guys in his room and they stay there all night. I really don't care what he does and if he's gay, that's his business. I just don't want other people thinking that I'm gay plus I don't want to catch AIDS!

I don't want to move out because I found the apartment, made the deposit and hooked up the phone. What can I do?

Sincerely,

S.C.

Dear S.C.,

I hear you addressing several issues: First, you say that you don't get along very well with your roommate. Apparently this has something to do with him having frequent overnight guests. It sounds like you made an agreement to share the apartment between the two of you. It is easy to understand that you resent the fact that others are staying there regularly, regardless of whether the visitors are men or women.

I strongly suggest that you discuss your feelings with your roommate. Be sure, though, that you don't attack him, otherwise he will react defensively and that will be the end of your constructive talk. This is best accomplished, in my experience, by calmly describing your concern, including your feelings, and also acknowledging your understanding of his position. This way you can get into a problem-solving mode of communicating with one another, rather than into a "I'm right and you're wrong" type of conversation.

I also want to address your concern about his possibly being gay, and your fear of catching AIDS. Unfortunately, I don't have enough room to do justice to these topics today. I will continue to answer your letter next week, though. Perhaps, in the meanwhile, you can practice the non-defensive kind of communication I talked about earlier.

Until then I wish you all the best,

Dr. A

Herzog, Kelly pull of some minor miracles

Back in April, no one in the baseball world would or could have thought that the World Series would pit two teams together like Minnesota and St. Louis. The Twins, or better known as the "Twinkies" in baseball circles, were coming off a sixth-place finish in the American League West.

They had a new manager, rookie Tom Kelly, and they had turned down ace righthander Jack Morris as a free agent. With these circumstances and several other physical problems with the ball club, Minnesota was a cinch to finish back in the second-division.

The Cardinals weren't that much of a surprise, especially since they had the two top Rookie-of-the-Year candidates on their squad and had acquired veteran catcher Tony Pena from the Pittsburgh Pirates. Add to this, the New York Mets problems in the early season, and the Cardinals seemed like a good choice.

By the All-Star break, St. Louis and Minnesota had not surprised many. The Cardinals were up by more than eight games, while Minnesota was on top in the AL West.

The Cardinals were somewhat surprising in that they led the league in batting after finishing last in that category in 1986, while the experts thought the "Twinkies" were on top in the AL West due to such a weak division.

But both teams had major obstacles that most teams would not have overcome. On Easter Sunday, the Cardinals suffered a huge loss when Mets catcher Barry Lyons crashed into John Tudor, breaking his knee. Later, the Cardinals lost #2 starter Danny Cox when Mike Aldrete of the Giants hit a line drive that broke Cox's foot. On Sept. 9, St. Louis manager Whitey Herzog lost his only power hitter, Jack Clark for the rest of the season with a severely sprained right ankle.

For the Twins, they didn't suffer from the injury bug, but from the inexperience. Only one before had the team been in the pennant chase, losing to Cleveland in a season-ending series and losing the division by one slim game. But the Twins won 18 of 27 in the month of September, locking away the division.

The reason that these teams won their divisions and the pennant, has to be their managers. Herzog and Kelly kept their troops cool under fire and exuded a sense of confidence in their players when the chips were down.

Herzog and Kelly deserve a lot of credit for getting their teams to the "fall classic." Both teams could not have done it without their cool leadership.

For each manager and his team, the World Series is a microcosm of the whole season.

For the Twins, a team that couldn't win on the road, but was invincible at home in the Metrodome, everyone thought the Tigers would bury the weak Twinkies. But they won both games in Minneapolis and took two of three in Detroit. They overcame their inexperience and calmly disposed of the mighty Tigers.

The Cardinals have another story. Plagued by a team that had their three top hitters injured, Herzog has pieced together a team that came through when it needed to, just like during the season. When their offense sputtered, the pitching came through. In every case, they clawed for everything they got.

In the second game of the NLCS, the got no offense and got beat 5-0. In the third game, they rebounded from a 4-0 deficit like they had so many times during the season to win 6-5. The Redbirds won 56 games in which they trailed during the 1987 season. Then after being written off as beaten, they got two of the best pitched games in Busch Stadium history to take the title away from the Giants.

Now the World Series represents everything to both teams. If the Twins can continue to win at home, not play too badly on the road, and get the big explosive innings they are so famous for, they may just beat the Redbirds.

For Herzog, he needs to get great pitching performances, clutch hitting, win a game or two at the Metrodome, and hope the Twins wake up a realize where they are at.

In any case, both managers have pulled off some minor miracles to get to baseball's finest hour. It will be a pity when the clock strikes midnight for the loser.

Seahawks fall to nationally-ranked William & Mary, 2-0

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

For UNC Wilmington soccer coach Jackie Blackmore, it wasn't result that really mattered, his troops had played well. For the UNCW record, it wasn't the kind of road trip you like to take.

The Seahawks dropped two Colonial Athletic Association soccer matches over the weekend, falling to Richmond, 5-1, on Saturday and 13th-ranked William & Mary on Sunday, 2-0.

"For a team as young as ours to play a nationally-ranked team this well is a good effort," said Blackmore. "William & Mary is a quality team and they may wind up winning the conference."

William & Mary scored 24 minutes and 27 seconds into the match when Ron Raab scored on an assist from Marty Taylor. UNCW then countered with when freshman Chris George headed a ball into the net, but the score was disallowed due to a foul.

The game remained scoreless until the last minute of the contest when Bruce Ensley scored on a penalty kick.

"I was real pleased with the way we stayed up with their speed," said

Blackmore. "We played with good intensity and we had our chances to score."

The loss was the fifth time this year the Seahawks had been shutout. It also dropped the Seahawk record to 5-8-1 and 2-4-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association. William & Mary improved to 4-0 in the CAA and 13-1-1 overall.

In Saturday's game at Richmond, Greg Sluyter scored the Spider's first three goals and Tim Leahy and Marc Choi added second half scored as the Spiders downed the Seahawks, 5-1.

"I thought our guys played great, but Richmond hit some superb shots," said Blackmore.

Marc Rose scored his first collegiate goal for UNCW.

Richmond improved to 5-6-3 overall and 2-1-1 in the CAA, moving past the Seahawks in the CAA standings.

UNCW has two games remaining on their 1987 schedule. They travel Sunday to Davidson before traveling to Francis Marion on October 27 for the season finale.

It's my ball

UNCW's Steve Allnutt outraces a Coastal Carolina player to the ball. Allnutt won this encounter, but the Seahawks lost the contest 3-0. The game was Allnutt's final home appearance as a Seahawks as UNCW finishes the season on the road.

Whitmeyer named to anchor UNCW cage broadcasts

From staff reports

A familiar face returns and a new one has been added to the UNC Wilmington basketball radio network for the 1987-88 season.

For the fifth straight season, Seahawk basketball can be heard on radio station WMFD in Wilmington, N.C. Veteran sportscaster Jim Whitmeyer will again be the "Voice of the Seahawks," bringing the action of UNCW basketball to fans along the coastal region. A new color analyst, Ken Winfrey, joins Whitmeyer at court-side this season.

"We're delighted to renew our association with the basketball program at UNCW," said Wally Voigt, general manager of WMFD.

"We feel it's an important factor in the Wilmington community. We're very proud to be associated with it." WMFD is located at 630 on the AM dial, and carries a 1,000-watt signal in southeastern North Carolina.

"We're very pleased to continue UNCW's relationship with WMFD," said Jim Bass, assistant athletic director for external relations. "The station has been very supportive of all our athletic activities. The continuity and quality that WMFD brings into the game broadcasts is of the utmost importance."

Winfrey recently relocated to the Cape Fear region. He has a versatile media background, serving as a sports writer for the Winston-Salem Journal from 1971-76, working with WSIS radio in Winston-Salem as a correspondent, and assisting the Wake Forest University radio network from 1973-77.

All 27 games on the UNCW schedule will be carried, with the pre-game show beginning 20 minutes before tipoff.

Spikers fall to Colonial foes

by D. Curtis Nichols
Assistant Sports Editor

The UNCW women's volleyball team traveled to East Carolina University to compete against two of the Colonial Athletic Association's (CAA) top squads. The Lady Hawks faced the Lady Indians of William & Mary and James Madison University Lady Dukes, dropping both contests.

In the opening match the Seahawks fell to defending conference champs William & Mary by the scores, 15-2, 15-13, and 15-12. The Lady Tribe again are off to another impressive start as they improved their record to 5-0 in the CAA after this weekend's action.

Please see Spikers, page 11

UNCW Lady Seahawks open cage practice for '87-88

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Seven newcomers could figure prominently as UNC Wilmington women's basketball coach Marilyn Christoph begins pursuit of her seventh straight winning season this week.

The Lady Seahawks kick off their season Dec. 1 at Coastal Carolina before returning to Trask Coliseum Dec. 3 for their home opener against Atlantic Christian.

"The first thing I have to do is get everybody acquainted with one another," said Christoph. "For the first two weeks, we have to get them acclimated to Division I basketball and the system. Then we'll settle into a routine and hope to find a chemistry."

Five returnees, six freshmen and one junior college player suit up for daily practices from 2-4 p.m. Practices are open to the public.

"The biggest need we have is to find someone who is a true center," said Christoph. "In order to compete in the league, we need someone that will fill up the middle for us. And, as always, we need someone to take the leadership role."

Christoph will look for leadership from the nation's leading field goal shooter, Sharon McDowell. The 5-8 blue-collar worker from Elizabethtown, N.C., shot 67.7 percent from the floor last season, helping the Lady Seahawks finish fourth nationally. McDowell averaged 15.9 points and 10.9 rebounds a contest in '86-87.

Sissy M o r s e

(Richmond/Rockingham, N.C.) and Johnie Smith (Nakina/Nakina, N.C.) are the other top returnees for Christoph. The 5-5 Smith led the Colonial Athletic Association in assists with seven per contest. Morse, a 5-10 sharpshooter who shot 53 percent from the floor in averaging 12.9 points, will pose Christoph's biggest threat from the three point line.

Freshman Christina Taylor (Pine Forest/Fayetteville, N.C.) may make the biggest impact of the newcomers. The 6-2 point player averaged 13.4 points and 8.4 rebounds in leading Pine Forest High School to a 24-4 record.

Other freshmen include Cindy Makowski (Holy Family/Bayonne, N.J.), Jennifer Bennett (Union Pines/Cameron, N.C.). Kelly Kincaid (Frank Cox/Va. Beach, VA), Tracy Bradshaw (South Rowan/Salisbury, N.C.) and Tressa Reese (Terry Sanford/Fayetteville, N.C.). Makowski is an Freshmen selection by the Women's Basketball News Service.

The lone junior college transfer is Roalyn Flood. The 5-9 forward starred at Chowan Junior College the last two seasons, and should see plenty of playing time. Flood averaged 12.6 points, 4.8 rebounds and 3.7 assists for Coach Belinda McKell, earning Player-of-the-Year honors in her conference.

"We have a good blend of seniors and youth," said Christoph. "If the two can learn to work together, we can have a very successful season."

By the way, "Where was Pete Rozelle?"

Do you know where NFL Commissioner Alvin Pete Rozelle was last week?

He wasn't at the negotiating table. He sat at a different kind of table. One provided by the Congress of the United States for witnesses called to testify. Yes, the NFL commissioner sat at a table before the Senate Judiciary Committee's anti-trust subcommittee to answer questions about the NFL and its deal with ESPN and pay TV.

Like the Federal Trade Commission, which is also investigating the links between the NFL and television, the Senate would like to know a few things about NFL deals with TV, and possible anti-trust violations that the NFL, a convicted illegal monopoly, may have engaged in. Sen. Arlen Specter (R-Pa.) laid it right on the line when he questioned the commissioner. Normally, he told him, the Senate would never have asked him to testify during a football strike, a sensitive time. However, since it was obvious that Rozelle had nothing to offer in the way of help in a settlement, he might as well testify instead.

All of this is connected, you know, to the current football strike. The USFL-NFL anti-trust trial of last summer; the FTC and Senate investigations; and the strike, all hinge on monopoly and what can happen when 28 people share monopolistic power and practices.

How well I remember that trial, where NFL executives and network executives fell over each other in their hurry under oath to deny that there was any kind of link, any kind of partnership between them. Now, of course, the partnership is apparent. The USFL took the NFL and TV to court because it couldn't get a TV contract. Without an outlet on TV, the league couldn't survive. The USFL believed that the NFL, pressured the networks, and the networks buckled under pressure. The USFL won the case in the sense that the jury ruled the NFL was an illegal monopoly. But the jury was unwilling to say, or do, anything more than that. The USFL -- the competition -- died, as the NFL meant it to. Those people brook no challenge to their supremacy and monopoly. Not from the players, the fans, or another league. Now the case is on appeal. And I wonder what the appeals court judges are making of the clear and apparent partnership between TV and the NFL during the strike? It raises whole new questions for the court and for the case.

Howard Cosell On Sports

And I wonder what the appeals process will make of the networks who are willing to televise these dreadful scab games, and the so-called reporters who won't even, just once, call it what it is, right on the air: scab ball. Oh, just once, won't one of you lame excuses for reporters call it scab ball loud and clear?

And just once, won't one of you on TV have courage and the honor to make the connection between the USFL trial, and monopoly and the current strike? Won't one of you explain to the public that because the NFL is a monopoly, the only game in town, the players who work for those economic royalist owners have no other choice but to unionize and to strike if necessary? That when you deal with a monopoly, you have to use the only weapons available? You can't take yourself or your product elsewhere, get another job, find a new boss. With the death of the USFL, that possibility ended. Can't one of you, any one of you, on any of the three networks, have enough pride in yourself, your intellect, your profession, to open your mouth just once and explain this to the fans?

And can't one of you, just once, talk about something more than player greed and player salaries? Can't one of you, just once, find it within your timid souls to talk about human and legal rights? That there are human and legal rights at stake here, no matter what an annual income is? Do the well-to-do and rich give up their rights? Hell no. They guard them to the death. Or, if you want to talk about money, just for once, can't you, any one of you, open your terrified-for-your-job mouth and mention owner money? Owner greed? Just once, can't one of you privileged network television sportscasters take a risk -- and certainly not much of one, not compared to the risks those striking players are taking -- and talk about union busting as the owners main aim in all this? The evidence is before your eyes. You broadcast it. You voice-over it. You call the plays for scab ball. One assumes you, at least one of you, is well enough educated to know that use of scab is a strike-breaking and union busting device. Why don't you just say it, for once?

And for once, why don't you all, with your six-figure incomes and your glamour jobs, stop sneering at football players and their high salaries. You have lots in common with those striking players. High salaries. Union membership. And not too many places to look for work, should NBC or CBS or ABC fire you for just once opening your mouths and telling it like it is. Right or wrong, those players deserve to be fairly represented on television. Doesn't one of you have the nerve anywhere inside those blazers to speak out?

And finally, can't one of you, just once, stop talking as if the outcome of this strike is a foregone conclusion? It isn't. I don't know what will happen ultimately and neither do you. But I do know this. If ever a group of people have shown themselves to be utterly contemptuous of their employees, the public, and perhaps even the law, it is the owners. If the players can hang on, I think they can win. Americans ultimately root for the underdog. But its up to the underdog to hunker down and dig in. There are more players than owners. And in America, the majority is supposed to rule. Even in football.

Water polo drops two in tourney

From staff reports

The UNCW Water Polo team, competing in the second round of the Southern League Water Polo Tournament, were able to capture only one of three matches over the weekend. The tourney, held on the campus of the University of Richmond, pitted the Seahawks against Hampton - Sydney, Richmond, and Washington & Lee. The Seahawks sank Hampton-

Sydney, 19-5, but were defeated by the host Spiders of Richmond, 13-8. In the final game of the weekend UNCW failed to knock off the Southern League leader Washington & Lee as they fell, 13-4.

The Hawks were led by senior captain Art Hall as he scored eight goals.

UNCW runs it's record to 6-7 with games remaining against Mary Washington and Lynchburg.

Athletes

of freshman athletes who scored below 700 combined on the SAT tests ranged from 48% to 41%, while for the overall freshman classes at the three I-A schools were from 14% at ECU to 1% at UNC-CH.

The most remarkable improvements were made not at any of the 'big three' schools but at North Carolina State Agricultural and Technical Institute, where in 1985, 85% of the incoming freshman athletes scored below 700 on the SAT. This year, 85% scored above that number. The report noted 'marked progress' at Appalachian State, Western Carolina, and Winston-Salem State University.

At UNCW, the policy for admitting students as exceptions states that if a student demonstrates, high school courses and grades ... the he/she has the academic background and achievement record to be successful at UNCW. He/she may be admitted even if his/her SAT/ACT college board scores fall below the minimum admissions requirements of a 700 SAT or 18

ACT score.

Applications are reviewed by the admissions office, and if an applicant has a C average but is below 700 on the SAT, the office may offer special admission to the prospective student. Applicants must submit three recommendations from teachers to the admissions office, and if admitted, the student must follow a set of guidelines and report to an advisor who acts as a 'monitor' for the student's progress.

In the fall of 1987, 77 out of 1,636 freshmen entering UNCW were admitted under the exceptions policy. Eight of those were athletes.

In the area of graduation rates, 1094 freshmen entered UNCW in the fall of 1981. As of August 31, 1986, 391 of those students had graduated, giving the school an overall graduation rate of 35.17% up to that point. The overall rate for the athletic program -- encompassing recruited student athletes (including those who were granted full scholarships on entering the school) was 64% of the students in the entire program.

Spikers

The second game of the three team round-robin had James Madison knocking off the Lady Seahawks, 16-14, 16-14, 14-16, and 15-10. The loss dropped UNCW (2-2) into a tie for second place in the conference with James Madison (3-2).

Earlier this week the Lady Hawks continued their impressive unbeaten streak at home as they crushed the Lady Camels of Campbell University. UNCW downed Campbell, 15-5, 15-6, and 15-2, raising their home record to 4-0.

"Wonderful, everyone had a chance to play," said Coach Kathy McDaniel. "We are pumped up and ready to play the two toughest games of the season."

In the first game the Seahawks scored seven straight points to end the game 15-5. The biggest asset for the Lady Hawks was their distinct size advantage. Lisa Mills, a 5-10 junior and 5-9 freshman Hannah Hilton controlled the net as they rejected many of Campbell scoring attempts.

In the second game UNCW used a quick 6-0 start on senior Kim Jones' serving to put away the Lady Humpbacks before they ever really got into the game. Jones accurate setting was another key to the success of the Lady Seahawks.

In the final game another freshman showed what the future holds for UNCW volleyball with pinpoint serving. Heather Kimball served six straight winners to stake the Lady Seahawks to a 14-2 lead.

After this week's action the Lady Seahawks improved their record 16-6 overall and 2-2 in the CAA.

UNCW returns to action this weekend in the first annual UNCW Invitational Volleyball Tournament. Baptist College, Appalachian State, and Campbell University will be competing in the all day Saturday tourney at Hanover Gym.

Food company looks for campus cooks

Thousands of dollars could be yours if you've raised dorm room cooking to a fine art, and can create a healthful recipe that uses Sweet 'N Low and can be prepared without a conventional kitchen.

The "Sweet 'N Low Grade 'A' Recipe Contest" features a Grand Prize of $5,000, First Prize of $2,000 and Second Prize of $1,000. University, college or culinary school employees who are members of The National Association of College & University Food Services are also eligible to win $2,000 in scholarship money for their schools to be used for education or training.

The recipes must be suitable for preparation in a residence-hall room using only small appliances such as a toaster oven, blender, wok, compact microwave or small refrigerator. They will be judged on the basis of healthfulness, taste, originality, ease of preparation and appearance.

Posters with entry forms and complete rules are being sent to food service directors at more than 600 colleges that are members of The National Association of College & University Food Services. Entry forms are also available by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope by December 15, 1987 to: Sweet 'N Low Entry Form, P.O. Box 1901, New York, NY 10116.

"School Bus Cookies" and milk

Just this past week I was caught behind one of those big yellow school buses that pick up and deliver hordes of students across our nation.

I had missed lunch and when the late afternoon hungries hit suddenly, I wanted the bar cookie that was a favorite at our house during those school bus years.

We called the cookie "School Bus Cookie" simply because the magazine pages which featured the recipe pictured a big yellow school bus and a little girl running, arms flailing, to where it waited.

I have forgotten which flour company sponsored the ad, but seem to remember it was a combination effort by a chip company and a peanut butter maker as well as the flour manufacturer.

After misplacing the recipe one year, I borrowed my daughter's copy and taped it into my recipe book. Several years later the original recipe showed up and that one was taped into another book. Since then I have followed that practice and no longer do I have to spend baking time looking for a special recipe.

We all loved the school bus cookie, which was rich with chocolate, peanuts and peanut butter. Its real name is "Choco Peanut Butter Bars" but no one at our house has ever referred to it as that.

You will need to preheat your oven to 375 degrees and "grease" a 13 by 9 by 2 inch pan before you start mixing. If you are using a glass pan, lower the temperature by 25 degrees.

We had a big metal cake pan with a slide lid that was the right size but we have used a glass dish too.

Cream the following: one half cup of shortening, peanut butter, brown sugar and white sugar. To these add one egg and two tablespoons of water.

I have used both light and dark brown sugar with equal success.

Add and mix in your dry ingredients which have been sifted plus six ounces of chocolate chips. You will need 1 1/4 cups flour, 1/2 tea baking powder, 3/4 tea of baking soda and 1/4 tea salt.

If you are using self rising flour, omit the baking soda, baking powder and salt.

The dough is thick so you will need to spread it in the

McGuire donates letters, notes from "Taps"

By Wendy Williams
Staff Writer

The letters of a group of misunderstood and frustrated Americans have been donated to the William Madison Randall Library by the man responsible for collecting and analyzing the writings.

Dr. Phillip McGuire of UNCW's history department made the presentation in Randall Library on Oct. 22. The presentation focused on his book Taps For a Jim Crow Army, about racial discrimination during World War II and features 125 letters, which McGuire donated to the library, written by both black and white soldiers during the war.

Dr. McGuire said that in his presentation he emphasized the letters. He said, "the letters were spoke of a troubled heart."

Dr. McGuire states that black soldiers were "loyal" to the United States but were "buffeted democracy for the Europeans" while black soldiers were suffering from inequality.

He said that blacks saw the military as an opportunity for social mobility. They felt that if white Americans saw their loyalty to the American cause, they would be accorded equal rights and privileges.

McGuire says that response has been very good for both his presentation and book. Taps For a Jim Crow Army, published in

27 Named for fellowship work

Twenty-seven freshmen at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington are participating in the first year of the North Carolina Teaching Fellows Program, established by the General Assembly to fully subsidize the college costs of up to 400 talented high school graduates each year.

The Teaching Fellows award winners will receive $5,000 per year for each of their four years in college -- or a $20,000 scholarship that will be awarded through a "loan forgiveness" program. For each year that a Teaching Fellow teaches in a North Carolina public school after graduating from college, one-fourth of the award will be given by the state. At the end of four years of teaching, the $20,000 Teaching Fellow award will be fully repaid.

The qualifications for becoming a Teaching Fellow include high school grades, writing samples, class standing and SAT scores. Other considerations include the intended major of the applicant, extra-curricular activities, community service and references from teachers and members of the community.

Teaching Fellows applicants must be screened and interviewed by committees within their school districts and then by a regional screening committee. Applicants

Flu shots recommended

By Carla Garrison,
Staff Writer

Immunization is something many students never consider because they are generally healthy, but in consideration of growing occurrences of preventable illness immunity needs to become a concern.

October 25 begins NATIONAL ADULT IMMUNIZATION AWARENESS WEEK. The UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center is observing this week by introducing some facts about immunization to students. A display arranged by Deborah Haywood and Katie Gilbert will be placed in the University Union all week for students to observe.

As of July 1986 the NC immunization law amended a requirement that all entering undergraduates and graduate students under 30 years of age show documentation of immunization against diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis, three oral polio doses, measles, and rubella (German measles).

Whether or not a person is required to have all or only some of these vaccines depends on age group. If someone entered college before fall 1986, they are excluded unless they drop for any period of time. An immunization document is required prior to reentry. If a student fails to report to the wellness Center with some form of verification they can legally be dropped from school and will be.

Mrs. Katie Gilbert, a "family nurse practitioner at the Student Health Wellness Center feels that, "many adults which include college students are under immunized and don't realize it."

The Health and Wellness Center is focusing on the five main preventable diseases frequent today. These illnesses are pneumonia, hepatitis B, tetanus, measles, rubella, and influenza.

There are 23 preventable strains of pneumonia and a Newsweek article in October reported that

Evans will lead spring break trip for class

By Celeste Bulley,
Managing Editor

A new English course, involving a trip to England is being offered for the spring semester to UNCW students.

The trip will be taken during spring break, and the cost for Eng. 292, excluding regular tuition, will be $989 per person. A payment schedule has been established to ease the strain on student finances.

Features of the trip portion of the course include round trip air from Wilmington, ten nights' accommodation, and tickets to "The Phantom of the Opera."

Also included is a 7-day "London Explorer Pass," good for unlimited use of London's Subway and famed red buses. Sightseeing will include Oxford University, Buckingham Palace, Westminster Abbey, Piccadilly Circus, St. Paul's Cathedral and others.

The in-classroom portion of the course will consist of student preparation for the trip.

Instructor John Evans explains that students will choose an area of interest concerning British culture and spend the first weeks of the semester researching their specific field of concentration. These area of focus will be discussed in

Kilbourne tells Kenan crowd, "Something needs to be done"

By Barry Bryan,
Staff Writer

On Oct. 22, in conjunction with National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, the slide/lecture presentation, "Under the Influence: The Pushing of Alcohol Via Advertising," was given in Kenan Auditorium.

Presenting the program was Miss Jean Kilbourne. Miss Kilbourne is an internationally known authority on alcohol issues and a member of the board of directors of the National Council on Alcoholism. She has spent the last ten years studying alcohol and advertising, which produced an enlightening and attention grabbing program.

According to Ms. Kilbourne, the revenue received by U.S. liquor companies is approximately $65 billion a year.

Kilbourne said the companies often are trying to recruit new drinkers through their ads. The ads are linked to those things that people feel good about or have generally strong feelings.

The advertisements were based upon psychographics. Psychographics are studies done upon the population by the advertisers to discover "hopes, fears, fantasies or whatever a large section of the population holds in common."

She said the ads use these ideas to give alcohol a wonderful image. An example was an ad of a beautiful woman in a bathtub with a glass in one hand and a bottle on a table beside her.

According to Kilbourne, all alcohol ads are based on either sex or death.

"The sex aspect gives people the idea that fertility and beer are a pair," she said. "That's the reason for the two young lovers with a beer in each hand."

She says the fear of death is used to hint that alcohol can help people escape by forgetting. She showed ads with images of tombstones in the trees. "These ads never mention that over 10% of all deaths in the are linked with alcohol," she noted.

Events termed a success

By Celeste Bulley,
Managing Editor

Alcohol Awareness Week 1987 was a resounding success according to Deb Haywood, Director of Wellness Promotion.

Although Ropes, the program planned for Oct. 20, was cancelled because of insurance problems, the activities for the rest of the week were presented with no further difficulties.

The "Mocktail" Party in Room 100 of the Union Oct. 21 was well attended, with over 300 people drinking the donations from local bars and enjoying the music provided by WLOZ.

That evening brought Jean Kilbourne to Kenan Auditorium. Her presentation on the effects of alcohol in advertising was very well received by the approximately 100 people attending.

The Jail-a-Thon, which was held Oct. 22 in the living room of the Union, raised $80 for other activities during the week. Thirty people, including Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs William Bryan and Dean of Students Pat Leonard, were jailed.

Classroom presentations by community resource people were held throughout the week and 100 Alternatives! t-shirts were given to the week's volunteers.

Fledgling will be magazine

The Fledgling, UNC-W's yearbook, is a thing of the past. The yearbook staff announced Tuesday that the Media Publications Board decided to do away with the 1987-88 yearbook.

The Board based the decision on the Fledgling's poor sales record. In recent years only 200 of the 400 yearbooks ordered, were sold. The Board feels that on a campus this size more than 200 yearbooks should be sold annually.

The Fledgling's co-editors, Beki English and Jenni Brown, have developed an alternative publication to the yearbook, which the Board approved Thursday. According to English and Brown the publication will cost much less to produce than the Fledgling, and will provide an exciting alternative to the standard yearbook.

The new publication is comparable to a pictorial magazine. There will be a collage of photos and opinionated articles in a graphically designed, soft-covered magazine. The yearbook staff has already discussed several promotional ideas for the magazine, including a new name. They feel poor promotion is to blame for the Fledgling's past sales record.

The new magazine will be available to students in April. The sales cost has not yet been determined.

Announcements and events

The N.C. Department of Cultural Resources has awarded $2,750 to the Randall Library for a telefacsimile network system. The equipment will be able to access articles not available in Randall Library by sending a message via the telefacsimile network. In return, the article needed is transmitted over the telephone and printed out on the telefacsimile in Randall Library. Gene Huguelet, director of library services, will coordinate the project which is expected to be on-line in the next few weeks.

The Women's Volleyball Team will host the UNCW Volleyball Tournament Oct. 23-24. Participating schools include UNCW, Appalachian State, Campbell and Baptist College. Also, the Seahawks will play East Carolina in a CAA match October 27 at 7 p.m.

LivWell '87 has been rescheduled for Wednesday, November 4, from 10:00 a.m.-2:00 p.m., on the University Union grounds. In the event of rain or cold weather, Hanover Gym has been reserved. For more information on LivWell call Deborah Haywood at 3726.

Reader's Theatre on constitution this week

The UNC-W Political Science Club and UNC-W Historical Society will hold a Reader's Theatre celebrating the 200th Anniversary of the U.S. Constitution on Thursday, October 29, 1987. The event will take place in Bryan Auditorium in Morton Hall on the UNC-W campus at 7:30 P.M.

The program will emphasize the concept of a "Living Constitution," noting that the American peoples' efforts to intercept the document have changed and evolved significantly over the years. Controversies surrounding the interpretation of issues not foreseen by the Founding Fathers have abounded ever since the Constitution's ratification.

Yet the Constitution does provide a basis for thinking and making judgements about these problems. Participants in the UNC-W program will demonstrate the Justices and citizens have argued about several of the great controversies in American history. Through dramatic readings, the participants will portray lawyers and Supreme Court Justices who confronted each other over Constitutional questions.

Issues raised in the presentation will include Constitutional concerns which are as important today as they were 200 years ago. The actors/readers will recreate the excitement of attempts to identify the Constitution's usefulness in dealing with our modern day problems.

The program is free and open to the public.

Dance team names new members

The 1987-88 Dance team tryouts were held October 4. Of the 36 girls starting ten were selected, making a 12 member team composed of one senior, two juniors and the rest sophomores and freshmen. Even though the team is very young, the talent is definitely first class.

This is the second year the dance team has performed. Before last year, the team was a pom-pom squad. The dance team practices five days a week, preparing new dance routines each week to be performed at halftime at some of the home basketball games.

The dance team performs to entertain the crowds and to get the fans more involved in the game. The dance team would like to encourage students and faculty to come watch them perform at halftime and watch them grow along with the university. The team will be performing at the following games:

Nov. 16 - Czechoslovakia National Team
Dec. 12 - Atlantic Christian College
Jan. 18 - The Naval Academy
Jan. 30 - East Carolina University
Feb. 8 - George Mason University
Feb. 18 - Campbell University

Knitting offered

European Knitting will be offered at the YWCA, 2815 So. College Road, on Fridays, October 23-November 13, from 9:00 to 11:00 a.m.

This quicker method of knitting uses two needles, but all the work is done with the left hand. Because the yarn is never dropped there is less motion. This is an excellent method for left-handed people who have tried to learn traditional knitting but found it too awkward. Experienced knitters will enjoy learning a faster method.

Cost for this class is $15 for YWCA members and $20 for non-members. For more information or to pre-register call the YWCA at 799-6820 or come by the office at 2815 So. College Road.

ROTC CAN FOOD DRIVE

The R.O.T.C. Dept. will be accepting donations of canned goods at the following locations:

Student Union
Harris Teeter Supermarket
1420 S College
From Nov. 2 to Nov. 8. All Donations will be presented to The Food Bank of the Lower Cape Fear.

The UNC Wilmington men's basketball team will be featured at the annual Seahawk Tipoff Banquet scheduled for Thursday, Nov. 12, at the Hilton Inn.

It is the second year for the banquet, which introduces the school's players, coaches and cheerleaders to the general public. Admission is $8 per person and includes dinner.

The banquet begins at 7:30 p.m. at the Hilton. Every youth in attendance will receive a free gift.

To order tickets or obtain more information, please contact the UNCW Athletic Department, UNC Wilmington, 601 South College Road, Wilmington, N.C., 28403-3297, (919) 395-3232.

Three UNC-Wilmington Art Division faculty members will display their work in a Kenan Hall exhibit. The display of work by Ann Conner, Stephen LeQuire, and Donald Furst will run from November 4 through December 4, and can be seen weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Kenan Hall lobby display area.

Ann Conner will exhibit a series of small oil and acrylic paintings. These abstract paintings approach image-making as a physical process from which the image evolves. They explore images which are also the subject of recent wood and linoleum block prints.

Stephen LeQuire will exhibit models for proposed outdoor large-scale sculptures and two wall pieces. The works are intended to create the idea of mass and weight although they are made from lightweight materials. These pieces are constructed from various woods including teak, mahogany, walnut, ash, hickory, cherry, and oak. LeQuire uses grids and curvilinear surfaces made from strips of wood and lattice to imply massive form.

Donald Furst will display work in a variety of printmaking, drawing, and painting media. The subject matter, which includes room interiors, hallways, and an outdoor scene, ranges from the serious to the humorous.

Kilbourne addresses students

Her main point was that to reduce the effects of alcohol on society the standards must change. "People must come to see it as all right not to drink," Kilbourne said.

"Cigarette smoking is an example. People today think nothing of it if you don't smoke ... That is because its been accepted and the standards have changed."

In conclusion she answered questions from the audience, one of which was "Do you think the drinking age should have been raised to 21?" Her response was that it was necessary to try and control the alcohol distribution. She explained that even with the age limit at 21, younger people will get alcohol, but it should be harder. According to Kilbourne, 1 in 5 teenagers (14 to 17 years old) is an alcoholic or problem drinker. In 15 to 24 year olds, alcohol abuse is the #1 cause of death.

"Something needs to be done," she said.

Evans to lead class on British trip

seminar and an appropriate itinerary will be established to help meet those interests.

After returning from the trip, students will write up their experiences in their specific areas — i.e., art, theater, music — and the writings will be collected and published as a UNCW students' guide to British culture.

This course is the result of student interest in relating experiences from previous trips with Evans for credit. Evans, a lecturer in the English department, studied in Oxford in 1983 and has traveled extensively throughout England.

He has taken similar groups to England for the past three years and is hoping this course will stimulate interest in interdisciplinary programs — involving language, history and art departments — between British universities and UNCW in the future. While the touring in England focuses on various areas rich in British culture, Evans comments, "Staying at a bed and breakfast with an average family gives the student a view of the middle class life."

If students are interested in the course, the deadline for signing up for the trip has been changed from Oct. 15 until Oct. 30. The cost of $989 follows a payment schedule with the first payment of $150 due on the 30th. A payment of $400 must be made by Dec. 3, and the final $439 will be due on Jan. 18, 1988. Although the deposit will be applied to the total cost of the trip, the amount will be forfeit if the student cancels.

To sign up for the course and join the group, contact John Evans at 395-3326 (office phone) or stop by his office in Morton Hall, room 152, from 8:00-10:00 a.m. Monday/Wednesday.

Crime

The Student Health and Wellness Center had a small fire at the end of September due to a melted tea pot cord. There was no extensive damage.

A Port-A-John was set on fire at the Greene Track and Field construction site on New Riegel Road. This has happened three times starting on the weekend of Oct. 10 with the last one being on Oct. 22. The case is still under investigation.

On the weekend of Oct. 17 unknown subject(s) were reported to have thrown chairs out of Galloway's fifth floor windows, and for trashing an unlocked room, also in Galloway, with Pork-N-Beans.

First, second and third floors of Hewlett Hall were flooded Oct. 15 from a fire hose that was turned on by students.

Several sexually explicit phone calls were made Oct. 17-19 to various students on campus from unknown subjects.

One campus trash can, "No Parking Fire Zone" sign, "Resident and Guest Only" sign, and a "Really for Sale" signs were recovered this past weekend of Oct. 24-26 on campus resident rooms.

Military Science has scholarships available

(UNCW News) — The Military Science Dept. at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington has a variety of scholarships available to students, and all of them include full-tuition, according to Lt. Col. Ronald Martin, professor of military science at UNCW.

"It seems that many students in high school and their parents know about our four-year scholarships but they don't know that we have other scholarships available as well. So when they apply for a four-year scholarship but are not selected to receive one, they feel left out. They shouldn't," he noted.

"There are a great many highly-qualified and deserving young men and women who lose out on the four-year scholarships because the competition for them is so keen," he explained.

"Because of that, we offer three-year full tuition scholarships, too, and those young men and women, or any other qualified student already on campus in their freshman year, can apply for them.

All of our scholarships pay for full tuition, books, lab fees and other education expenses, plus up to $1,000 a year in subsistence allowances for each year the scholarship is in effect."

According to Capt. Richard Longo, there are several categories of three-year scholarships available.

The first if offered to men and women already enrolled in Army ROTC and is called a Host Institution Scholarship. The second category is for students who are not in ROTC, and these are referred to as non-enrolled scholarships. In addition, there are two-year Army ROTC scholarships available for college sophomores.

ROTC scholarships are awarded strictly on merit, so grades are important. Also the student, whether in high school or college, must be able to demonstrate leadership potential through participation in athletics and other school extra-curricular activities, such as clubs and organizations.

The applicant must also be able to pass a physical aptitude examination and be medically-qualified for military service. Scientific and technical degree candidates, such as engineering and computer science majors, also get special consideration.

Army ROTC scholarship students who successfully complete their academic and ROTC requirements are expected to accept a commission as a second lieutenant in either the Regular Army or the Army Reserve. There, they will get some of the best leadership and management training in their field.

"With the costs of a college education going up every year, we find more and more students applying for Army ROTC scholarships," Martin said.

Anyone desiring more information about ROTC scholarships should contact Capt. Rich Longo or Capt. Kris Frasure at the Military Science Department, UNCW, 601 S. College Road, Wilmington, NC 28403, or call collect, 395-3739.

BSU Bike-a-thon raises $400

By Alise Ellis, Staff Writer

Bowman Supply Company, with the help of the Black Student Union, held a bike-a-thon to raise money for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. Approximately 25 people were sponsored to ride in the bike-a-thon, and received pledges for each mile they completed, resulting in an estimated $400 raised.

The bike-a-thon was organized by Charlene Caesar, of Bowman Supply, and Chris Meredith, of the Black Student Union. The two mile course started at the Student Union and continued around the perimeter of the campus.

Volunteers received free t-shirts helped with registration, and provided moral support by cheering the bikers on.

The first place winner was Tyrone Robinson, who rode 60 miles, while Timothy Wuester came in second with 56 miles. The youngest entry was Ms. Caesar's son, Antoine, who was seven.

Later this month Chris Meredith will be setting up a booth in the Student Union for any separate donations to be given to the children's hospital which fights childhood cancer.

A Halloween visit to a haunted house

Halloween is the time of the year for tricks and treats and all that fun stuff while you're still a kid. However, grown-up type kids like you or I have this way of looking plumb silly if we go wandering around in a Spiderman suit.

Therefore, we do things like visit haunted houses, and walk through very old graveyards at midnight.

After we had overgrown the costume stage the gang back home started entering into such activities with great earnest. After all, there were about fifty zillion old houses here and there in the woods, all of them haunted, and there were probably twice that many cemeteries located here and there, also haunted.

It was Halloween of our senior year in high school. Three out of the five had already committed themselves to the military, another had been accepted to some big University far, far away, and I didn't have the slightest idea in hell what I was going to do.

The house was a typical old plantation house, situated right off of a back road near the county airport. It had been a part of every great ghost story and nightmare in our neighborhood since the late thirties. It had been owned by a doctor of psychiatry who had fed his wife arsenic so she would go cuckoo and he could make better friends with his nurse — his wife's sister.

Pickups, Politics and Hound Dogs

With Jefferson Weaver

The story says that the wife, after being chained in the attic for years, broke loose and strangled her hubby and dear little sister.

Dear wife's grave is directly behind the house, and nothing grows on top of it — ever. That much I have seen.

But I digress.

There were six of us that night — only three of us were the regular gang. The others were the hangers on hoping to fill our shoes when we left high school. One carried a big flashlight, and another a large stick — "my spook basher" — which they brandished like kids playing army.

We fought our way up what was once a fine cobbled.

driveway, now covered in thorns and whatever else was hearty enough to grow in the pine thicket now surrounding the old house.

There was very little left of the porch — a farmer had converted the house into a barn, and the smell of tobacco was everywhere.

It was cold that night, and a wind was blowing. The wind made some very appropriate noises — was it the wind? — through the old windows which stared like eyesockets into the night. The double front doors were long gone, as were the stained glass panes that had formed a ten foot high, eighteen inch wide border to years before.

The hole that was left gave.

AIDS — It isn't going away

We've made the pitch here before, and we've been accused of beating a dead horse, but the most deadly killer mankind has ever dealt with is still one of the most important editorial issues today.

AIDS. It's not just going to go away. It can happen to you, your girlfriend, boyfriend, roommate, instructor, your parents.

College students, while less sexually active than those of several years ago, are still prime candidates, unless we use those brain cells we are supposedly in college to nurture.

Buy and use condoms correctly.

Limit your sexual activity.

It won't kill you not to have a new notch on the wall every Sunday morning. In fact, it could kill you to make that new notch on the headboard of your bed.

You don't catch AIDS like a cold. You can't get it from handling dishes, or touching someone's clothes, or thinking about it. You get the disease by transferring body fluids — sperm, saliva, etc.

We have also preached about the installation of vending machines for those unspeakably embarrassing latex things in places where students are likely to purchase them — bathrooms in the Union, residence halls, etc.

October was AIDS Awareness month. While some people will yawn and whisper ennuï that those people up in the Seahawk are hung up on this thing, maybe more sensible people will be more sensible when it comes to sex.

It's only a matter of time before UNCW has its first AIDS case. If you are that case, it's too late for saying I should have...

STUDENT FORUM

Student cites bias in an unlikely place

After attending this university for the last four years, I find the degree of segregation and racist attitudes on campus disturbing. Some twenty years after the Civil Rights movement it seems that many of the strides that were fought for have been forgotten. I find it frightening how quickly we forget what and where we have come from. Christians, the people that society feels they can look to for some degree of hope and guidance, seem to have lost their sense of direction.

In my opinion, if any of the organizations on campus should work to break down these attitudes, it should be the Christian groups. Instead they have become victims of comfortable living and the ideas of the secular world, the very things that Christ denied and gave up his life for.

At a time when there is a real need for true outreach, why is it only to the white students? It seems that the black students have been cast as a second class citizen and not worthy of being recognized.

I dream of the day when blacks will be treated as equals and not viewed as second class citizens. If the people that have traditionally been the leaders of society continue to remain segregated, then how are the non-Christians to respond? Until the Christians here on campus start to make some changes then things may never change!

We will miss Dawn — and so will you

The resignation of Senator Dawn Clodfelter from our Student Government Senate will be one sorely missed by the students, as they have lost yet another independent vote.

While we didn't always agree with Ms. Clodfelter, we did respect her. She was one of those senators who seemed to feel that merely attending the meetings wasn't quite enough.

Her work outside the Monday night meetings has in times past exceeded the record of some of those senators who missed nary a meeting but were never seen anywhere near the SGA office the rest of the time.

While missing meetings for several weeks in a row could and would cause problems, there could and should have been compromise somewhere by someone.

Because the Judicial Board felt her excuses regarding absences were unjustified — and it should be noted that she had questioned whether or not one member of the three on the board at that time had a conflict of interest — she resigned.

Who's to say that anyone wouldn't react the same under the circumstances, rather than face the betrayal of a body that not only allowed conflict of interest but forgot her record as a senator.

We are talking about a Senate that seems to spend more time on chasing people away and spending $50,000 at a whack than doing anything else.

And then they vote to send letters that fall just short of demanding that their meetings be covered.

Wake up, UNCW. Those folks around there are well on their way to spending your money on their pet projects and groups, and you won't be able to do a thing about it.

the house the rather disturbing appearance of a very old person crying in loneliness.

We made the tour of that house that night, examining the chain traces in the walls of the upstairs (and still shuttered) bedroom; we peered up chimneys, crept through a tunnel which connected two bedrooms through a very musty hallway, and the other kids tried to scare each other silly.

The more of the polished, hand hewn wood paneling I touched, the more I wished I could have seen this sixteen-room castle before it died. The house was built before the War Between the States, and had been abandoned during the Depression, but I still imagined what it was like when Dr. McKay through his legendary parties and dances in the old place.

I wondered what it was like when tension filled the air as community leaders gathered in the doctor's living room to discuss the impending secession of North Carolina from the union.

It began to dawn on me that this wasn't just a haunted house; it was a relic of a more gracious time long past, of people that staid out of sepiä or tintype or even oil painted canvas.

The old house burned right after Thanksgiving that year; the landowner was afraid someone would go inside and never come out intact again. We went out there right after that, gathering what we could.

I saved a blob of melted red and white glass, probably from the gable of the house, since most of the glass had long been gone. That was all that was really salvageable.

The Doctor and Mrs. McKay — perhaps both Mrs. McKays — can now rest easy. There will be no more barely post-adolescents rooting through the ruins of their age.

When we all stood looking at the smoking fat pine timbers that were all that was left of the old house, we all knew that nothing about our innocent small southern town childhood would ever really last forever.

Even memories can burn down sometimes.

Gore's words don't match his record

I note with interest that Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., is trying to set himself apart from the carbon-copy liberals seeking his party's presidential nomination.

The senator had better pray that the voters don't look at the record, because, it will show him to be one of the most consistent ultra-liberals in the Senate.

Ted Kennedy of Massachusetts isn't a candidate right now, but he could very well emerge from a divided convention as his party's standard bearer. But whether or not he ever does run for the nation's top elected office, Kennedy is the number one dirty word in any conservative's vocabulary, and he is certainly the criterion by which liberal politicians are judged.

Gore, like almost everybody else, is slightly less liberal than Kennedy, but he's still way out to the left of any of the Republican hopefuls.

Americans for Democratic Action rates Kennedy 80 percent and Gore 70. ADA is the most liberal of all rating groups.

The Committee on Political Education, organized labor's political arm, working diligently with Kennedy, Joe Biden, Pat

Schoeder et al to convert the United States to a socialist-labor system, rates Kennedy 93 percent, but Gore, with 86, is still well up there in the groups' estimation.

And believe it or not, Gore shows up worse in the evaluation by the American Conservative Union, which rates Kennedy 10 and Gore 9 percent.

On the issues, according to the National Journal Survey, Kennedy voted with the liberals 70 percent on economic issues; 84 percent on social and 75 percent on foreign policy, in 1986.

The survey found Gore more

Gore has been trying to sound strong on defense and foreign issues lately, but I hope he doesn't fool any substantial number of voters.

The late Henry Jackson, one of the most liberal senators ever, as far as social and economic issues were concerned, made a name for himself as a conservative, actually I've seen him referred to as "the right," believe it or not, because he did advocate a strong defense.

Certainly anybody who can't accept Kennedy's philosophy won't find an acceptable alternative in the Tennessee ultra-liberal.

Not all potential candidates, Democrats or Republicans served in Congress recently, and so some can't be ranked in this manner, but statements by the individuals indicate only liberals in the running for the Democratic nomination and conservatives are the only serious prospects for the GOP.

Of two Republicans who compiled legislative records, Sen. Bob Dole comes across as the most conservative - ADA, 0; COPE, 16; ACU, 91, and according to the Journal Survey voted conservative 84 percent on economic issues; 77 on social and 77 on foreign.

New York Rep. Jack Kemp scored 15 with ADA; 18 with COPE and 89 with ACU. The Journal found him voting conservative 71 percent on economic issues; 56 on social and 86 on foreign.

Sen. Gore, it's hard for a leopard to change its spots, but it isn't easy for a liberal either. LTJ Features

Public Safety Notes... By Sgt. Regina Lawson, Crime Prevention Officer

Chancellor's safety committee gets results

The Chancellor's Safety Advisory Committee was appointed two years ago, based upon a recommendation of a Special Task Force on Safety and Security. The Committee has met twice during this school year and has set its goals for the year.

The Committee was formed to provide a vehicle for communication to the Senior Officers of the University to discuss significant campus needs in the areas of safety and security. Last year's recommendations have largely been carried out. The new sidewalk extension and the additions to campus lighting that took place over the summer and are continuing now, were among recommendations of this committee.

During this school year, the Committee has selected two broad topical areas. A Subcommittee on Transportation Safety will look at everything from bicycles and skateboards, to locations of speed bumps and traffic flow on the campus. The other Subcommittee will review the University's efforts in the Governor's Workplace Requirements for Health and Safety.

Dr. Andy Jackson, of the Psychology Department is Chairman of the Subcommittee looking at transportation safety. Other members of this Subcommittee include Kim Tracey, Allison Woodcock, Dean Pat Leonard and Captain Billy Dawson. Their task is to make recommendations to improve the safety on the campus with regards to pedestrians, vehicles and bicycles. You may contact any of these people with your thoughts or suggestions for this particular area.

John Geddie, Coordinator for Campus Safety, is chairing a committee with Dr. Barbara Greim of Mathematics and Mr. Joe Hack of the Physical Plant, to review the Workplace Requirements for Health and Safety. This is a comprehensive program that covers OSHA, radiation, laboratory practices and many other safety concerns. Faculty, staff and students are encouraged to call any of these people with suggestions and problems that they would like to have addressed.

The Chairman of the Chancellor's Safety Advisory Committee, Charles King, hopes to have a final report available to the Senior Officers by February of 1988 so that recommendations may be included in budget proposals for the upcoming fiscal year.

Please feel free to contact any members of the Committee with your suggestions in any area of safety on the campus.

PAY PHONES CONNECTED TO CAMPUS POLICE

Many people new to the New Hanover County area may not be aware that this county has an enhanced 911 system. From any of more than 55 pay stations on campus, a person needing emergency assistance may simply dial 911. Your call will be routed from the 911 center located in the Sheriff's Office downtown, immediately back to the Campus Police Station. Using the pay stations requires no coin for 911 calls. Assistance is only seconds away if you avail yourself of these pay stations.

Resident students may also use 911 from their residence hall rooms. Your call would be routed directly back to the Campus Police. Faculty and staff users would need to dial "9" on the University's telephone system before dialing 911. We still have plenty of the orange stickers with the University's emergency telephone numbers, should you need additional ones.

A Halloween tale some of us can relate to—very well

Halloween is my favorite time of the year, so I will attempt something different this week. I will try my hand at short horror fiction. Eat your heart out, Stephen King.

THE HANGOVER

Frank awakened with a start, and he was shivering violently. The throbbing in his skull was so intense that he could have sworn that he could see his forehead swelling and deflating like a balloon. His disorientation brought him to the brink of panic. Within seconds he realized, with a little relief, that he was home, and in his own bed; but how did he get there? Erasing the cobwebs from his mind was no easy task. Aspirin was the only clear thought that he could produce. The thought of eating six of those babies comforted him a bit. As he slid out of bed he noticed that he was fully gressed—boots and all. He stumbled to the medicine cabinet only to see a lonely old, crusty bottle of Pepto-Bismol which he had bought months ago when he had a case of the squirts. Frank figured that a few swigs certainly wouldn't hurt, but the cap was crusted on too tightly.

His teeth were wearing sweaters, and his mouth felt as though it could use a shave. The tube of Crest lying in the sink looked beaten and abused. He now remembered his struggle to squeeze a pinch out of it yesterday. Frank ripped the tube open with his teeth and stuck his fat toothbrush into it and stirred it around. He was amazed at how much paste was still in there after it was declared dead. He vigorously brushed his mouth.

Recollection of last evening was battling it's way out of his weary brain. Mike—that's it—he was at Mike's watching the game, and drinking a million Old Milwaukee's, and swilling Jim Beam out of the bottle.

He hadn't been that drunk since—since that fatal night. He hated thinking of that, but he couldn't bury the memory. That night he hit that old bitch, Blanch Bender, and ruined his life. The only old lady walking her dog at three in the morning, and he had to hit her. The thought of the thump the car made when he hit her always made him shudder.

His memory was hazy after that. Cops, pictures and questions after questions flashed through his head. He remembered all too clearly the months to follow. His lousy, shyster lawyer with his constant, "don't worries." Worst of all, the rotten six months in the hell hole they call a correctional institute.

Mike forced himself to stop thinking about the past, and start thinking about the present. The present needed aspirin. Frank finally realized how badly the house smelled. He knew that he wasn't much of a housekeeper, but the house never stunk like that before, except maybe the time he left the ground beef on the counter for three days. The car. That's where he kept aspirin. It seemed that his headaches always started in the car.

He glanced around the counter tops in the kitchen for some meat that he may have left out. No meat, but the stench was overwhelming. He threw his head out the door and wretched several times; about a liter of brown fluid escaped his mouth. The Old Milwaukee commercial, "it doesn't get any better than this" sickly ran through his mind.

He was definitely relieved to see his car intact. The car was full of mud and stunk to high heaven, causing him to wretch repeatedly. The car stinking too made no sense to him, and somehow frightened him.

He grabbed the aspirin and headed for the living room, hoping that the stench wouldn't be as bad. The first thing he noticed was the mud, and then the stench slapped him across the face. A shudder ran through him like an arctic wind; paralysis engulfed him; he knew what he would see, but his eyes wouldn't close.

A boney fragmented body in a tattered, blue dress sort of floated towards him. A knobby, boney protruberance which was shriller than chalk gone awry on a blackboard, it taunted, "I saw that you were in no condition to drive last night, so I gave you a lift. You wouldn't want to hurt anyone again—would you Frankie?" The only things that escaped Frank's mouth were a giggling noise and a thin line of spittle, which raced towards the floor.

Sailing under a cloudless sky helps ease the mind

The incredible weather that we have been enjoying the past few weeks makes it easy simply to be glad to be alive. Sailing under a cloudless sky driven by a spritely wind with poppates rolling across a wake and good conversation about our common sense of well-being is an act of worship in itself. Suddenly, in these brief hours, the world seems to be as God wants it to be and we feel good, and at peace.

To return to the dock, is to return to schedules, to responsibilities, to the various kinds of tasks and concerns that crowd in on us and leave us, sometimes overwhelmed, often confused, and frequently worried about ourselves, our future, and the world in which we live out our lives.

We do live in a challenging world. It really is not easy to grow up and make sense out of our lives and to find a place in our society. What we need is a deep sense of security that will allow us to live with less fear and worry in a world that sometimes seems to be falling apart. Some seek that security in relationships and some security can be found there. But the only real security that I have found that can be absolutely depended upon is the security from a deep and personal relationship with God, the Creator of all life. That rock bottom kind of faith that I have learned through my Christian journey adds much meaning to my afternoon on the ocean as well as adding to the depth of my relationship with people as well as being the source of a sense of fulfillment in the way I live out my professional life.

The security that comes from a deep connection with our natural environment, from significant relationships and from a meaningful career, rooted ultimately in our faith, is what provides the balance that we need to sustain hope and joy within us. Without the cultivations of these resources, we become too frustrated, frantic, and overwhelmed with all that life brings our way.

We need balance. We need to experience the love of God that comes, for me, in the way I described above. Faith, then, is not a luxury, but a fundamental key to our sense of well-being. I am so thankful for the reassurance I continually get through so many dimensions of my life about the goodness of life. I hope your daily experience is likewise rich with experience of goodness and love and worth to balance whatever it is that drags you down.

Laugh it up with Jeff Justice

Campus Comedy

by Heidi Berge

UPB Concerts will present Rick Crom and Jeff Justice in a comedy show at 8:00 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 29 in room 100 of the University Union. Admission will be $1 with a UNCW I.D. and $2 for the public. It is rare that two comedians of this caliber come together under one roof.

Rick Crom is a New York comedian who hosts his own cable television show and is known for his hilarious perspective on life, love and today's news. His views are eye opening and side splitting. Politics and sports are blended into his evergetic, conversational, yet satirical style which is developed through his ability to listen to everyone... almost.

Jeff Justice is a 14-year veteran of the comedy world, enchanting audiences from coast to coast, on cruise ships, and casinos with his unique blend of comedy and magic. Remember David Copperfield - the incredible magician who made the Statue of Liberty disappear into thin air a few years ago? Did you ever wonder how he did that? You might come out and ask Jeff Justice. He is a consultant for Copperfield's amazing television specials. Wonder if he can make mid-terms disappear...

If Jeff Justice can't make mid-terms disappear forever... no doubt he will for a few hours anyway. Take a break this Thursday night with Rick Crom and Jeff Justice at 8:00 p.m. in room 100 of the University Union. Laughter is good for the soul, and you may not see these two together again!

Nathanson's smooth guitar set the mood last Friday eve

by Heidi Berge

Rob Nathanson, Assistant Professor of Music here at UNCW, gave a benefit guitar recital for The Good Shepard Day Shelter for the homeless Friday night, October 23 at Front Street News in downtown Wilmington. His two performances included Classical and Baroque music spanning the 17th and 18th centuries reminiscent of a quieter time when refined ladies and gentlemen sat and let the music softly speak. And speak, Nathanson's music did. While cars and funnekers whizzed by the Front Street window, Nathanson played to the more sensitive side of his audience. They sat at tableclothed, candlelit tables and remained entranced by Nathanson's soothing guitar mastery.

One of the most striking songs of the evening was a more modern piece composed especially for Nathanson in 1984 by Dr. David Kechley, a talented composer who taught at UNCW.

The piece is called Strumming: A Sonata for Solo Guitar with movements entitled Searching, Night Song, Day Dream, and Spider Dance. The piece included guitar frets creating a soft tinny sounding chord. Combined together, these techniques make for an involving and dramatic performance.

Front Street News and Rob Nathanson pulled together in the hopes that The Church of The Good Shepherd might be able to expand their outreach to the homeless. The church currently provides a soup kitchen for 75 to 100 people a day Monday through Saturday; but they are trying to expand services to include a job referral service, showers, a clothing exchange program, and a literacy program.

Whiteside Burton, Rector of The Church of The Good Shepherd says it is "an experiment: in becoming friends with those who are disenfranchised." One real way to give is to become a trained volunteer. If you are interested and can commit to a few hours a week, call Mr. Burton at 763-6080.

It's a hit!

Catch 'The Foreigner'!!!

by Heidi Berge

The SRO production of "The Foreigner" is being held over because of popular demand. Performances will be this Friday, Saturday, and Sunday night at 8:00 pm. Call the Creative Arts Department today to reserve tickets. UNCW's production of "The Foreigner" is top of the line comedy!

Who is the Foreigner? A man, just an ordinary, somewhat reserved and shy man whose name is Charlie Baker, a not too foreign name and initially a not too foreign man. Paul Sebastian, a UNCW Drama Alumnus, plays Charlie in waves of reserve and abandon. Paul is in perfect comedic harmony with the rest of the cast, and at the same time he holds just the right amount of audience empathy for us to understand Charlie's plight. Perfect, Paul.

Charlie's friend "Froggy", a classically trained (remember Crocodile Dundee?) played by Stephen M.R., has a fantastically exaggerated accent which at times is a bit much and a bit loud. But his character's flair is too much to resist for long... Froggy decides to protect Charlie after "committing" him to a few days vacation in a comfortable, southern Georgia hunting lodge to recover from his wife's "23" indiscretions and ailing health. Froggy tells the owner, Betty Meeks, that Charlie is from a far away country and cannot speak English with the hopes that she'll leave him in peace. Charlie is not too gung-ho with the idea at first, but he goes along.

The lie backfires as widowed Betty Meeks becomes excited at the thought of an exotic specimen so close at hand. She dotes, yells to communicate, and coddles poor Charlie every chance she gets. (No rest for the weary!) Juli Brockmann, a Drama major and familiar face at SRO, portrays Betty as the somewhat worn but strong willed hostess. At one point she and Froggy share a less than believable hug, but she definitely highlights the cast's hilarious ensemble of characters.

Steve Vernon, as Rev. David Marshall Lee, needs a more sanctimonious air as the unscrupulous minister who praises God for the little "miracles" brought his way. He is always out scheming - I mean - working while his poor ex-Debutante fiancée, who is also newly pregnant, tries all she can just to get his attention.

Adrienne Carey, UNCW Drama major, is excellent as the ex-Deb with a hands-on-hips, toss of the head, impatient attitude that is truly believable. One of the funniest scenes is when she displays her impatience while sitting with Charlie reading the paper. Adrienne starred in the Dojji production in the SRO last year.

The plot thickens as Brad Thomas enters as the Deb's half-wit brother, Ellard who - if she deems intelligent enough - will gain half of the family fortune. The Reverend Fiance' does his best to block this decision. Brad's credits on the SRO stage are too many to print, but with Halloween approaching, I'll mention his credit in the DEG movie "Trick or Treat" last year. Brad is one of those actors that seems destined for success. Don't be fooled by his captivatingly funny portrayal of a down-home simpleton. Perhaps the best scene of the play is between Ellard and Charlie as they mirror each other while eating breakfast.

Ellard's foil is Owen Musser. Terry Shappart, a UNCW Senior from Connecticut, must be acquainted with a Good-ole-boy somewhere because he adds new dimensions to the "Hey Vern" commercial character with Owen Musser, except...he's a little darker...and a little scarier...

Yes, if you're looking for a little realistic theatrical fright this Halloween weekend, you'll find that too in "The Foreigner". Smoke pots, white sheets, eerie lighting, a disappearing - well... you really should see it.

The technical aspects of the play enhance an already tight production. Tom Macie's set is so comfortable, the audience wouldn't (and doesn't) mind vacationing at the quaint hunting lodge. Caroline DeMoss literally and figuratively fits each character as her costumes speak right along with the script lines. And the lighting?...well, that one scary part... is really good!

If you'd like to see this masterpiece you'd better make reservations. Call the Creative Arts Department. Last week's shows were completely sold out by Thursday night.

Movie Update

by Anita Bradshaw

"Dirty Dancing" with Patrick Swayze and Jennifer Grey was a very entertaining movie. As the title suggests there is alot of dancin' goin' on! Swayze and Grey make an unlikely pair, but when together, the magic they portray is quite convincing. Go see this one, and if you've seen it I think it's worth going to see again—just to make sure you didn't miss anything. Independence Three-PG 13.

"Like Father, Like Son" stars Kirk Cameron (from T.V.'s Growing Pains) and Dudley Moore. It's a comedy about a transference of identity, i.e., the father's thoughts were taking place inside his son's body and vice versa. You can imagine the ensuing mishaps and travesties that follow. The two wreak havoc everywhere they go. This is a "lay back and take your shoes off" type of film. Just roll with it and don't try to follow any logic or pattern. Independence Three-PG 13.

"Surrender" stars Sally Field and Michael Caine and that's about all it has going for it and even they should have surrendered when the film was on the editor's desk (sorry, I couldn't resist the pun). Fields seems to really be struggling to help this film along but her efforts are in vain. The film just never comes together.

Skip this one and go see something else, you'll be alot happier. Cinema Six-PG.

"Someone to Watch Over Me" is a basic ploty story, or ploddy story if you wish. It's about a happily married man that leaves his wonderful home, pretty, witty and intelligent wife, and loving son to fall in love with a good-looking bimbo (and it didn't hurt that in this case the bimbo had millions of American dollars!!) Still, in all he seemed too happy in one scene (breakfast) and a couple of scenes later (that same night) the guy seems to realize he and this girl have something special. I know Americans supposedly live in the fast lane, but not the French Express. We movie-goers had to swallow this same overall story with Fatal Attraction, but this has taken believability and thrown it out the window. Looking around the posh interior of the "bim's" Manhattan apartment was nice and a few other scenes where wealth was flaunted unmercifully, but otherwise there's not much to see. Oleander Twin-R.

"Tough Guys Don't Dance" starring Ryan O'Neal and was a tough one to swallow. O'Neal plays a guy who seems to be involved with every woman East of the Mississippi but can't remember when or why. They end up murdered but he can't remember if he was the perpetrator or not. The movie sludges along in this mode seemingly non-stop. Most of the film takes place with O'Neal recounting events of the past few days to his dying father. This at times lends itself to alot of confusion. The story was taken from Norman Mailer's book; it should have been left there! College Road Cinemas & Oleander Twin-R.

Students work as teaching fellows

must also have personal interviews with Teaching Fellow screening committees to identify candidates with qualities that would make an outstanding teacher.

According to Dr. Lou Lanunziata, assistant professor of curricular studies and coordinator of the UNCW Teaching Fellows Program, students chosen for the Teaching Fellows Program generally have SAT scores at least 200 points higher than average students. "The idea behind the program is not to increase the number of teachers, but to bring in the brightest teachers," Lanunziata said.

"The program enables the Teaching Fellows to become enriched in many different areas of study, through weekly enrichment seminars, guest speakers and field trips. They also get involved in working in the schools earlier in their college career. This kind of experience makes them more well-rounded teachers."

For the first year of the statewide program, Lanunziata feels it has been very successful at UNCW. This year nine universities have the Teaching Fellows Program while four other schools, two public and two private, have been approved for the program in 1988.

"We are very fortunate to have this program at UNCW," said Lanunziata. "We feel that we have a fine education program and view all of our education students as outstanding students. The Teaching Fellows Program is an addition to a good program already, and one that many students can benefit from."

The first students in the North Carolina Teaching Fellows Program at UNCW are listed below:

Ann Marie Newton, Laurel Ann Spencer, Kimberly Shay Watson Gladys Diggs, Tammie Smith, Robin Lorraine Walker, Julie Walters, Jennifer Anne Laskey, Jill Marie Lanskey, Kristel Bailey, Lori Ann Cockman, Sharon Gray Davis, Tami Dizon, Kelli Duncan, Kristina Edwards, Gerald W. Hall, John Allen Hammett, Joel Jones, Mark Millard, Christopher Mowrer, Patricia Ann Neal, David J. Otto, Tracie Pierce, Annette Rackley, Brian Shackelford, Lisa Steele, Susan Kay Tomlinson.

Alston tells Senate "Get involved"

By David King,
Staff Writer

The Oct. 26 Student Gov. Meeting began with a executive session of congress in which reporters and all non-senate members were asked to leave. Procedures continued with ad hoc committee proposals by the treasurer.

The first proposal suggested a campus legal service or lawyer where students could come and get free legal advice.

The second proposal was for the creation of a Speaker's Bureau, which would consist of a pool of college students who would speak at ceremonial or civic affairs. The participants of the Bureau would be, in many ways, ambassadors for UNCW.

Lastly, the installation of an academic awareness program, which would monitor and question major drops in academic performance.

During standing committee reports, the Senate allotted a $200 budget for the Toastmasters Club, whose emphasis is improving public speaking.

Next, the senate heard from the Chancellor's Safety Council. The main issue dealt with the erection of a light pole at the side entrance of Trask Coliseum adjacent to the Hinton James building.

In addition, the bike safety problem was addressed again, due to increasing biker—car collisions on campus. Since the funding of a bike path is not currently feasible and because bikes are considered to be on the sidewalks, the Senate brainstormed for possible solutions.

One solution which called for more speed bumps was not well received. Students with suggestions can contact Kim Tracy at the SGA office in the Union.

During scheduled business, a proposal to extend the petition deadline from 10 to 15 days failed by a majority vote. At this time, the Senate appointed Senators Holler and Earls to the Senate Judiciary Committee to fill the slots left vacant by the recent outbreak of resignations.

Senator Christopher Mercer was automatically positioned to office of Attorney General because he was the sole petitioner.

Several positions such as Senior and Junior Class President are currently available. If interested in any SGA positions, see Kara Austin in the SGA office, Room 200 in the Union.

Students are also encouraged to participate in the election of Spring Representative at Large Wed. the 28th, in the Union.

The Senate concluded its session with SGA Vice President Kara Austin exhorting members to get involved with Senate debate, reminding them that the Senate's purpose is not solely giving out money.

Nineteen tapped by Phi Eta Sigma

On Oct. 3, nineteen students were inducted into the Phi Eta Sigma National Honor Society. The honor society is for students who have acquired a 3.5 grade point average while carrying a full load during their first year. At UNCW less than 2% of the freshman class qualified for the honor.

Dr. Ibrahim Said Sadek from the Mathematical Science Department was inducted as an honorary member. He was chosen by the students for being able to stimulate and encourage them to achieve a high level of scholastic achievement.

Following the initiation in Alderman Hall, the members were honored at a banquet in the Hawk's Nest. Dr. Saul Bachner from the School Of Education, and Dr. John Stokes, Dean of General College, spoke to the students and encouraged them to maintain their academic excellence.

This year's chapter officers are Amy Harrell-President, John Murphy-Vice President, Karen Fedorchak-Secretary, and John Bates-Treasurer. The advisor for the UNCW Phi Eta Sigma is Dr. W. Lee Johnston.

There are Phi Eta Sigma Chapters at over 200 universities in the U.S. The UNCW chapter was started in 1979.

Immunization

20,000 to 40,000 Americans die annually of the disease. One vaccination can prevent all 23 strains in most cases.

People at risk and who should seriously consider the vaccine are those with removed spleen, chronic lung disease (asthma, bronchitis etc.) and anyone who has had it before.

The shot can be obtained for only $6 at the New Hanover County Health Dept. after an evaluation from the wellness center or family Dr.

Hepatitis B has become a growing threat with some 300,000 contracting the disease last year alone. Anyone at risk is urged to partake in the vaccine.

Those at risk are homosexual men, IV drug users, medical personnel, and heterosexuals with multiple partners. Heterosexuals are becoming a greater risk factor, of the 300,000 listed above 120,000 were heterosexual.

This vaccine is administered over a 6 month period in 3 doses and lasts a life time. It is

Toplin leads summer trip to Britain

By Celeste Bulley,
Managing Editor

Students can have an opportunity to study and travel in England, Scotland, and Wales for four weeks this coming summer. Professor Robert Toplin of the History Department at UNC-W will lead an educational program in Great Britain during the summer of 1988.

The course, which begins July 17 and ends August 17, carries six credits and will cost approximately $2150. The price includes round-trip air fare from Wilmington, UNC-W tuition, rail transportation through England, Scotland, and Wales, and a room with breakfast at British universities.

Students will stay at Oxford University, the University of London, and the University of Swansea. Guest lecturers from these and other universities will take part in the class discussions. The course will emphasize a comparative perspective, contrasting the history, culture, and economy of Great Britain and the United States. Particular attention will be given to attitudes toward class, race and ethnicity, immigration, private enterprise and the welfare state, organized labor, and government regulation of television entertainment.

Special activities will include visits to historic and cultural sites, excursions to the theatre, and interviews with British citizens from various walks of life. Cities to be visited include London, Stratford, York, Oxford, Cambridge, Bath, Edinburgh, and Swansea.

While in Great Britain, students will be participating in discussions and readings, and upon their return, students will be required to write papers about their experiences focusing on the above areas.

Dr. Toplin is "excited about the variety of activities and the opportunities for experiencing British culture." He hopes the course can help pave the way for interdisciplinary studies at UNCW, and that sometime in the future UNCW can host an exchange program for juniors with the University of Swansea.

Dr. Toplin's comments, "I hope this can be a stepping stone for students who have not had a chance to travel abroad."

Students wishing to receive more information about the course should contact Professor Toplin in the History Department weekdays between 2-4 p.m. in Room 231 Morton Hall. Dr. Toplin's office number is 395-3318.

Delta Sigma Phi wins ice cream contest

By Alise Ellis,
Staff Writer

The Intramural Council and Swensen's sponsored an ice cream eating contest Oct. 17 to benefit a local charity. A crowd gathered around the table and cheered as a representative from each fraternity, using just his hands, devoured two pounds of ice cream with all the trimmings.

The winner was Brent Kinney of Delta Sigma Phi Fraternity, which sponsored the United Way. Swensen's donated $150 to the charity and during the contest served thirty-nine cent ice cream cones.

Swensen's has planned several more events with the fraternities and basketball team in hopes of becoming more involved with campus activities.

It was just a game... or was it?

As the last out was made in Sunday night's World Series Game, a sense of disappointment pervaded my house. Seven Cardinal fans had gathered hoping to pull the ailing Redbirds to the World Championship.

When the final out was made, the Twins started their celebration, and the Minnesota fans cheered louder than at any game this season. The disappointment of pulling for St. Louis all summer long, only to see them come up short was hard to swallow. Even harder to swallow was the 16 bottles of champagne that sat chilling in our icebox waiting for a celebration.

When the Twins scored in the eighth inning to extend the lead to 4-2, most of the once excited fans had left for their own quiet little place to go and sulk.

After sitting outside for the end of the ninth inning, coming in only to see the final out, I returned to my perch on my front porch and pondered what could have been. With a bottle of the champagne that should have been swallowed in celebration of a Cardinal victory, I solemnly toasted their defeat. As the night grew older, my thoughts of the Cardinal's season turned warmer with the effects of the champagne.

How could I be so down when the season had been so great? All those wonderful nights of staying up late to listen to Jack Buck and Mike Shannon on KMOX radio out of St. Louis, the Cardinals' consecutive doubleheader sweeps of the Dodgers, Terry Pendleton's two-out two-run homer off the Mets' Roger McDowell sending the game into extra innings, the division-clinching game against the Expos and the pennant winner against those bad-mouthed Giants.

How could things be so bad? How could I be so depressed? It was only a game. Or was it?

That's baseball. That's American sports. No one cares who finished second, third or last, just who won everything. Our sports represent our society, the want for everything. I wanted everything. I wanted the Cards to win every time out, but that isn't possible.

Like most fans, I expect only the best from my teams. Even though I have no say in their performance or strategy, I expect something I have no control over. I can't return them like a defective product, nor can I demand a refund. I have no guarantee of how well they will perform, but I'm as loyal to them as anything I'm associated with. As a fan I have no rights. My only hope is that the Cardinal organization will take my money that I spend on them and use it wisely to make themselves the best in baseball. You could look at it like an investment and I have to choose as to whether I want to keep supporting them.

In the case with the 1987 World Series, at first I wished an immediate refund, but with all the good they provided for me during the summer of 1987, how can I give up on them so easily. It is the memories that makes sports so great, and the memories of the 1987 St. Louis Cardinals will be forever etched in my mind.

The Cardinals may never reach such heights again, but I was there in their time of glory and I'll be there in time of their defeat. I am a true Cardinal fan. No matter how much razzing I take, they will be my team. Loyalty to a team, something that disappears regularly about this time of the year, but that's sports. The underdog is always the one that gets support when decision time comes. Our country has always pulled for the underdog. It was built by underdogs.

But as always at this time of the year, some of the Met fans are now all of a sudden Twins fans. Red Sox fans come out of the closet to become avid Minnesota fans and the list goes on. For a team that had very few fans in this area before the season started, now there is a huge following. By next year, they will all be pulling for whoever else is winning. The Twins fans will be reduced to their normal few and become just a fading memory. But that's sports and life. For those whose loyalties never sway, it is "wait til next year" or "we're number one." In any case,

UNCW linksters sixth in Seahawk tourney

From staff reports

The UNCW men's golf team, competing in the Seahawk Invitational at Echo Farms, finished sixth out of a field of twelve. The Seahawks finished with a two-day total of 641 and were led by Rick Kimble's 156 (76-80).

Guilford College captured the team title with a score of 612, 10 strokes better than their closest competitor, Greensboro College. Greensboro finished with a 622, followed by Campbell University and James Madison's 623.

Lee Porter of Guilford received the medalist honors with a two-round 148 (74-74) total. Tom Funderburk and Jared Spencer of Campbell and JMU respectively, tied for second place with a 151.

Seahawks shut out Davidson in overtime

From staff reports

The UNC Wilmington soccer team, behind two overtime goals and the superb goalkeeping of Donnie Lewis, downed Davidson College, 2-0, which entered the match ranked eighth in the South.

Denis Hamlett scored with just 1:07 left in the first overtime period on an assist by Dean Marnell. The goal was Hamlett's team-leading seventh of the year as he continues his fine rookie campaign.

Sean Wallace scored his first collegiate goal for the Seahawks' final goal on an assist from Keith Roach with 5:37 left in the second overtime.

Davidson (9-5-3) had a chance to win the game in regulation when the Seahawks were called for a penalty in the box with 18:03 left in regulation, but Donnie Lewis stopped the penalty shot.

UNCW (6-8-1) will play their final game of the season when they travel to Francis Marion Tuesday.

Green-Gold Scrimmage set for Jacksonville

From staff reports

Coach Robert McPherson will carry his UNC Wilmington basketball team to nearby Jacksonville, N.C., for the annual Green-Gold intra-squad scrimmage Nov. 11.

The Seahawks opened practice last week in preparation for the season opener Nov. 28 at home against Georgia Southern. UNCW meets the Czechoslovakian national team in an exhibition game Nov. 16 at Trask Coliseum.

"We have a lot of alumni in the Jacksonville area, so it's an opportunity for them to see our club first-hand," McPherson said of the scrimmage. The Seahawks will split into two teams for the 7 p.m. contest at Jacksonville High School.

"It's also a chance for us to have an actual game-type environment prior to the start of the season."

McPherson is reshaping the Seahawks after the loss of six lettermen from last year's 18-12 squad, including all-time scorer and rebounder Brian Rowsom. Junior forward Greg Bender (Ross/Fremont, Ohio) and senior guard Mark Gary (Highland/Alexandria, Ind.) are the lone starters back for the Green and Gold.

"We're anticipating a nice turnout in Jacksonville," McPherson added. "We'll have game officials and it will be as close to a real game as we can make it."

Four junior college transfers and three freshmen are expected to contribute heavily to UNCW's rebuilding effort. Larry Houzer (Jefferson State), Antonio Howard (Emmanuel), Willie Williams (Faulkner State), and Tim Brewer (Westark) are the junior college players. Scott Tierney (Homewood/Flossmoore/Homewood, Ill.), Major Wiggins (Jones/Oriando, Fla.) and Brannon Lancaster (Terry Sanford/Payetteville, N.C.) are first-year players.

Appalachian State captured the First Annual Lady Seahawk Invitational Volleyball Tournament with a perfect 3-0 record in the round-robin event at Hanover Gym Saturday.

The Lady Mountaineers (14-7) beat Baptist College, 15-9, 15-7, 18-16 in the first-round before downing the host Lady Seahawks in the second-round, 15-9, 15-5, 13-15, 15-10, in what proved to be the deciding match.

ASU then went on to punish Campbell (0-23) 15-0, 15-11, 15-8, in the nightcap.

UNCW, which finished with the second best record, earned wins over Campbell, 15-4, 15-6, 15-10, and Baptist, 12-15, 15-4, 16-14, 15-4. Baptist (15-11) captured the day's only other match with a 15-2, 15-6, 15-4 win over Campbell.

The Most Valuable Player Award went to App's Kris Zubay, while the All-Tournament Team consisted of ASU's Donna Joye, Andrea Canady of Campbell, Anita Kidd of Baptist, and three UNCW players: Yvonne Holan, Lisa Mills and Dede Devoley.

"The three players that made the all-tournament team played really well," said Kathy McDaniel, UNCW Head Coach. "By the end of the tournament, we were just really tired."

UNCW, now 18-6 on the season, hosted East Carolina Tuesday night.

South Carolina routs Harriers

By D. Curtis Nichols
Assistant Sports Editor

The Gamecocks of the University of South Carolina swept the UNC Wilmington men's and women's cross country squads Saturday. USC defeated the men harriers, 18-40, while the Lady Seahawks did not fair much better as they fell to the Lady Coxs, 18-38.

Andy Foster, of USC, ran the five mile course in a record time of 25:27. Foster's torrid pace set the stage as the USC runner's finish in nine of the top ten spots. The lone Seahawk top ten finisher was Layne Fuller as he placed third with a time 25:53.

"Layne Fuller ran real well," said Coach Ron Richardson. "He knocked almost two minutes off his last time."

Freshman Caroline Hooper led the Lady Hawks as she was the highest UNCW finisher, crossing the finish line fifth, with a time of 18:56. Williams finished the five kilometer course in a time of 17:49 just edging out fellow teammate Dana Purser (17:51) for first place. The Seahawk harriers close out their seasons November 7th in Williamsburg, VA at the Colonial Athletic Association championship.

Tip-off Banquet date set at Hilton

From staff reports

The UNC Wilmington men's basketball team will be featured at the annual Seahawk Tipoff Banquet scheduled for Thursday, Nov. 12, at the Hilton Inn.

It is the second year for the banquet, which introduces the school's players, coaches and cheerleaders to the general public.

Admission is $8 per person and includes dinner.

The banquet begins at 7:30 p.m. at the Hilton. Every youth in attendance will receive a free gift.

To order tickets or obtain more information, please contact the UNCW Athletic Department, UNC Wilmington, 601 South College Road, Wilmington, N.C., 28403-3297, (919) 395-3232.

UNCW's Roy Walker goes up strong against teammates Scott Tierney and Jeff Brannen during a men's basketball intersquad game Saturday. The Hawks will play their annual Green-Gold November 11th at Jacksonville.

Dr. A. advises student who fears roommate is AIDS risk

I would like to continue my comments about your concerns. You told me that you personally don't care if your roommate is gay but that you are worried about others possibly thinking the same about you. Sort of, guilty by association. If you truly don't care what his sexual orientation is, does it really make that much difference what other people might assume, especially those who form an opinion about you on such a superficial basis? Think about it!

Your final concern (no pun intended) is that of contracting AIDS from living with a member of a so called 'high risk population', as are male homosexuals.

The AIDS-virus has been found various bodily fluids. However, it is present in concentrations sufficient for transmission only in blood, semen, and vaginal fluids. For you to become infected, the virus has to first enter your body. Since the AIDS virus is very fragile outside the body, there are only a couple of pathways by which the virus can gain entry. The easiest way is by way of a mucous membrane. That is the kind of skin we have in body cavities like our mouth or eyes, and also in our genital and rectal areas. Consequently, contact of blood, semen, or vaginal fluid with any of these membranes, as is the case during unprotected sexual contact, is very risky. The second way, AIDS can be contracted, is by somehow breaking the protective barrier of our skin and coming into contact with blood, semen, or vaginal fluids. This occurs most easily through voluntary or accidental ingestion of someone else's blood, as is practiced by many intravenous drug users. Theoretically, this mode of transmission is also possible if you have open wounds and come into contact with someone else's bodily fluids. However, you are a lot more likely to catch many other diseases this way than you are to catch AIDS because, as I mentioned before, the AIDS virus does not survive very well outside the body.

The third way to catch AIDS, is for an unborn baby to contract the disease from his or her infected mother.

As you can see, non-sexual interactions with a roommate will not give you AIDS. Even hugging, sharing eating utensils, and bathroom facilities cannot give you the disease. This has been demonstrated by numerous studies with family members of AIDS patients who did not catch the disease in spite of intense non-sexual contact.

I hope I was able to clarify some of your concerns.

All the best,

Dr. A.

The start and end of two different seasons

Today is a day of beginnings and endings.

The 1987 baseball season is at a close. It was a quiet year for baseball, despite the uproar surrounding Al Campanis and charges of institutionalized racism in the front offices. The season spun out, undisturbed by a strike, or overt labor disputes to interrupt play. After a brilliant start, the Brewers faded. The Mets almost did it again. The Cleveland Indians finished in last place, as usual. A young rookie manager named Kelly wound up in last place, as usual. A young rookie manager named Kelly wound up in the World Series with the Minnesota Twins. His opposite, crusty and aging veteran manager Whitey Herzog, wound up there, too.

But in the sports world, nothing is ever really what it seems on the surface, never what it appears to be to the casual observer, or the fan determined only to know the players and the scores. Quiet as the season was on the field, the turmoil rages elsewhere; openly at an arbitration hearing in California. Baseball took its labor disputes to the table, and won, in a major pronouncement decision that found the owners guilty of conspiring to destroy free agency. Two baseball seasons began this year. One on the diamond, one off the diamond. Only one ends this October. The other will continue, as arbitrators look for a way to remedy the free agency problem. In every ending lie the seeds for beginnings. The World Series may finish the official season. Unofficially, the most important play goes on, the kind that affects the structure of baseball, the money of baseball, the players and the public interest.

Today, NFL football begins again, after weeks of a strike and scab football games. On the surface, perhaps, it will look like the real thing, played by the real thing, with results that deserve to be counted in the standings. But like so much else in the sports world, that surface is illusory.

For today is a beginning, but there will be no quick end to the intense animosity caused by the strike. Players who stayed on strike must now play with the likes of a Mark Gastineau, a strike breaker, a scab. They are all over the league, those scabs, and there is hatred for them all over the league, too. No, this will not be regular NFL football that the public knows and supposedly loves.

In Chicago, Mike Ditka is keeping a taxi squad of 17 former scabs. The team voted 41-1 against Ditka's decision. He overruled his players. The Bears were a solid group during the strike. They don't take kindly to a return like this. Constant uproar is going to be the keynote of this beginning. And there is no telling if, and when, it will end.

Look at the coaches today as they take the field. All along I have wondered what they have felt, and thought, those monkeys in the middle, caught between their players and the owners who pay their salaries. Enigmatic silences were suddenly a coaching specialty. Not one spoke out in support of, or in defense of, the players. Not one refused to coach scabs, even though many coaching records will apparently be damaged by the contests. Those ridiculous, meaningless encounters may actually help determine who goes to the championship games.

How would they tolerate such willful self-destructiveness from those owners, their bosses? Yet not a one spoke up, not really, not even Bill Parcells of the Giants, though he spoke a little. Parcells, whose beginnings with the Giants led to a Super Bowl victory last year, has had an ending slap him full in the face. He will never be the same again, never feel toward management what he felt before. His eyes have been snapped open. Unwelcome knowledge had come his way. And it will never disappear, no matter how immersed he may become with his players and the game. His repayment for a brilliant coaching job and the Super Bowl was — scab ball.

Bill Parcells begins anew today, a different man. And that, too, will have an effect on play. Who can tell how many other coaches feel as Parcells does? They all have good reason to. They have been made to shill for the owners, for men who have revealed themselves to be beneath contempt. That is an ugly position to be placed in. The return to regular rosters cannot eradicate that taste, or restore self-respect. NFL football begins again today. But its past image is gone. Football has never been so damaged. Damaged in the eyes of the players and in the eyes of the public. For that, we have to blame the 28 owners who refused to bargain in good faith. Whatever happens on the field today is just a footnote to that story. Today's beginning is not free of the past.

Nowhere in the sports world does the surface convey the reality. We are told baseball is our national pastime, fed World Series mythologies, and yet, when the Series rolls around hardly anyone watches it. The ratings are lower than ever. Experts blame it on the fact that no teams from New York or California are playing. But what kind of an excuse is that? If the game is America's game, our heart and soul, then what could be more American than Minneapolis-St. Paul vs. St. Louis? That's the heartland. And the World Series is the big event of baseball's year. So why isn't anyone watching? I don't know. But it saddens me a little. It's further proof that what we tell ourselves about our sports isn't really true. Not any more.

And this is why. The most important ending of all came when the majority of professional athletes in this country decided they wanted to be employed differently and treated differently than in the past. The unions were formed. Players fought management. The players wrote off the past image of the good boy lackey athlete and demanded to be treated as employees, not as property.

This was—and still is—a huge sociological change for this country. We expect our athletes to behave a certain way: as boyish, grateful, servile entertainers. When professional athletes put an end to that stereotype, and to slave mentality, owners and the public alike rebelled.

But rebellion is pointless. The new breed of athlete is here to stay, a permanent fixture, even despite a broken strike. Today, the men who play the World Series, and who return to the NFL, have broken with their past, put an end to it. They have made their new beginning. And who can tell where, or how, it will end?

sports are our number one asset of this country. They bring us together in a sense of friendly competitiveness.

Sports are something we hold onto forever. The 1987 baseball season will provide many memories, but Game #7 of the World Series on October 25, 1987 will be something I will never forget. After all, it was just a game. Or was it?

Seahawk athlete dies in accident as truck, car collide head on

By Jefferson Weaver,
Editor in Chief

The star pitcher of UNCW's women's softball team was killed Monday morning when her car collided head on with a northbound tractor trailer on US highway 421 south of Clinton.

Lisa Kay Primovic, whose twentieth birthday would have been next Monday, was dead on arrival at Sampson Memorial Hospital in Clinton, according to Trooper Kennie Buchanan of the Highway Patrol. The accident occurred approximately 14 miles south of Clinton, about forty miles from here.

Buchanan said that Primovic's car crossed the center line and ran onto the left shoulder before pulling into the path of a northbound tractor-trailer carrying a load of asphalt.

The driver of the tractor-trailer

"She ...wanted to contribute to the team any way she could."

Softball coach Maggie St. Ledger was treated at Sampson Memorial and released.

According to Joe Browning, Sports Information Director at UNCW, Primovic started in 25 out of 28 games during her first year on the team. Her win/loss record was 15 and 11, and she had an outstanding earned run average of 2.81.

Softball coach Maggie St. Ledger said that Primovic was "dedicated but quiet."

"Lisa had been our most consistent player," St. Ledger said Monday night. "She would have been the number one pitcher on our staff this year."

"She was always improving and wanted to contribute to the team any way she could."

Primovic had planned to major in Physical Education and was a native of Powhatan, Va.

Grant will fund research on seaweed as food

(UNCW News)

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has been awarded $102,189 for study on a project titled "Propagation of Economically Important N.C. Seaweeds for Mariculture by Protoplast Isolation." The grant, given by the North Carolina Biotechnology Center, was awarded to Dr. Donald "Fritz" Kapraun, professor of biological sciences.

This award represents additional monies for Dr. Kapraun's ongoing research with this project. As a result of his previous research, a modular, highly-automated, land-based irrigation system for seaweed was designed and constructed. Screening of selected isolates for suitability as mariculture seed stock was initiated in the lab and a technique was developed for isolating viable protoplasts from Ulvaria and Enteromorpha which can be seeded on commercial nylon nets at densities appropriate for outdoor cultivation.

"We propose to continue this research by identifying natural populations which show promise for use in mariculture, and to improve seed stock by a combination of pure and applied genetic research techniques," says Kapraun. "It is our goal to develop a simple and inexpensive procedure to isolate protoplasts, seed them on nets, and grow the resulting plants to harvest-size in an outdoor land-based mariculture system."

SGA meets legal advisor

By David King
Staff Writer

This week's SGA meeting opened with guest speaker, Paul B. Eaglin, the new Assistant to Chancellor of Student Affairs. Eaglin, appointed to the position three weeks ago, is a legal advisor to the Chancellor.

His services will be available to the student body if approved by the Chancellor. This offer was in response to the SGA's Treasurer's proposal of last week suggesting a free legal advice service.

He went on to clarify that he would not legally represent UNCW, but only offer legal counsel.

During scheduled Business, Senator Mercer was sworn in as Attorney General, and Sarah Schilling, a newcomer to the Senate, was sworn in as Junior Class Vice President. In addition, a new appointment to the position of Senior Class Vice President, leaving a Senior Senator slot to be filled.

Later in the meeting, Chief Justice Moore previewed an amendment to give greater power and structure to the Student Supreme Court. The amendment passed with no debate.

Moore also read a letter he had written to the Seahawk Editor, Jefferson Weaver. In his letter Moore defended the spending allocations of the Senate.

A discussion of the changes in the Fledgling format followed, with members questioning the increase in the cost of production of the Fledgling. Members felt it should be cheaper to produce a magazine than a regular hardbound yearbook.

The meeting concluded with a spokesman for the Financial Committee stating that the SGA has to absorb the cost when not enough is raised through advertising and yearbook sales.

Last year the SGA took a several thousand dollar loss in Fledgling production.

Livwell '87 set to kickoff

By Elizabeth Peacock,
Staff Writer

The rescheduled LivWell 87, which focuses on the maintenance of one's health, is to be held Wednesday from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m., in front of the University Union. Since the event was first planned, some minor changes have occurred.

According to Deborah Haywood, coordinator of UNC-W's Health and Wellness Center, "One big change is now we have a rain location." In case of rain, the health promotion will be held in Hanover Gymnasium.

Another change is that students and faculty alike will have information on eating disorders, drug and alcohol abuse, AIDS, and smoking available to them by a video/computer area.

"It's going to be on the porch outside the UNCW Bookstore," stated Ms. Haywood. She added that those attending will be able to see video tapes on nutrition as well.

Unfortunately, the UNCW nursing students are involved with clinical rotation and will not be available for health screenings as was previously planned, but others will be involved.

The entertainment for Wednesday will be light jazz provided by the campus radio station, WLOZ.

When asked about the probable turnout for the event, Carolyn Hess, a UNCW pre-nursing student for LivWell ALTERNATIVES! center, said "the number of students attending depends on the publicity of the event."

According to Hess, "It's a great opportunity for students to collect valuable information."

Charges dropped here

By Susie Witkege,
Staff Writer

The assault charges filed last week after an attack in Galloway Hall were dropped this weekend by the victim in a written statement to police.

An unidentified male assaulted the female resident of Galloway Hall on Oct. 24. The trespassing charges were not dropped and the case is closed.

In other reports, an investigating officer could not find any sufficient evidence concerning bomb threats to King and Morton Halls after questioning three different suspects on Oct. 29. The case is closed until further evidence is discovered.

Over the weekend, a staff employee was taken to Cape Fear Hospital by a Rescue Squad for abdominal pain and hyperventilating. The subject was in the men's basket room of Trask Coliseum when the pain occurred.

A Sony Instant Movie Projector was taken by unknown subject(s) from the Central Receiving Warehouse on campus on Oct. 27. The projector has not been recovered.

On Nov. 1 police recovered some but not all of an undisclosed amount of camera equipment that was stolen in the Chapel Hill area by some UNCW students. The students were apprehended when they attempted to sell the items on campus.

Damage to state property was done by unknown subject(s) kicking in the glass of Graham Hall's front door on Oct. 29. Approximately $200 worth of damage was done to the door.

Pinewood improves safety

By Jefferson Weaver,
Editor in Chief

Pinewood Apartments Manager Patsy Kimel said Monday that the staff at her complex is "not only willing, but anxious" to speed up improvements that should make those apartments safer.

Some apartments in the Randall Drive complex were burglarized early in October when residents came home to find doors kicked in and sliding glass patio doors torn from their tracks. A suspect was arrested Oct. 10, and according to Ms. Kimel, there have been no more burglaries at the complex.

"This can happen anywhere you live," she said. "Pinewood is no exception, but we are trying to make things safer."

Management responded by letter to a petition, circulated by residents, which asked for various safety improvements such as better lighting and a security guard.

More lighting is being installed in parking areas, and pins are being installed on patio doors to prevent their removal. There are no plans to hire a security guard at present, because, as the letter points out, there have been no other break-ins since the first suspect was apprehended.

One problem for the management is the fact that there are 384 units at Pinewood, and all of them have the patio doors. Ms.

Kimel said it will take "some time" to install the pins on all the doors.

While the burglar did come in through the patio door in some cases, a more direct method was often used — breaking down the front door. Ms. Kimel said there is little that can be done about this problem.

"The doors are of a very strong steel," she said. "They are equipped with deadbolt locks, but there is little else we can do."

In their letter, the Pinewood managers and Phillips Management Group (which also owns College Manor) say that since the suspect was captured, there are no plans to install burglar alarms or hire a full- or part-time security guard.

Grad turns hobby into income

By Alise Ellis,
Staff Writer

Strumming his guitar, Bedford Musdell recalls the Grateful Dead concert in 1984 which inspired him to start making tie-die t-shirts. Within the last few months, he has turned this hobby into a business. June 5, Bedford started producing Dragondyes Hi-Tech Die-Dyed Clothing out of his home in Wilmington.

Since his graduation from UNC-W last May, Bedford has put his communications degree to work as an engineer of master control at WJKA, but eventually would like to devote all of his time to Dragondyes.

It took Bedford two years to perfect his dye and chemical combination, which enables him to state, "Our shirts won't bleed, run or fade." His designs run the gamut, with variations in each shirt. Some shirts have subdued "cool" colors such as purple, blue and green, while others have predominantly "hotter" colors like yellow, orange and red. Since Bedford mixes his own dyes, there is usually never a problem developing a color for a client.

Bedford, who has three employees, Onion, John Blanton, and Nancy Barker, to help with sales and design, has increased his production since the summer. The company has sold approximately 300 shirts since June, and they still have 100 shirts in stock. Although it is easier for Bedford to fill standard orders, he prefers to do custom dyeing.

Custom tie-dyeing allows Bedford to become more creative with his designs and the colors he uses. He tries to make each design unique to Dragondyes, whether it is the basic spiral design, or the more complicated dashiki. According to Bedford, "Dragondyes puts their love and time into each design."

Dragondyes' best seller is the spiral design, which takes approximately three days to complete, while others may take up to five. They use 100% cotton short sleeve and long sleeve shirts, as well as shorts, leggings, and skirts.

Bedford's goal is to design a tie-dye shirt and logo for a new band and possibly travel with them to increase the sales of Dragondyes. If anyone is interested in Dragondyes, you may contact Bedford by writing Dragondyes, 228 Ashford Avenue, Wilmington, NC 28405.

Announcements and events

Nov. 6, 1987, from 7:00 p.m. until 10:00 p.m., "Endless Summer: New Hanover County Beach Life," a new exhibit, opens at New Hanover County Museum of the Lower Cape Fear. A Beach Party, featuring oldie beach music, free hot dogs and Pepsi Cola, sponsored by New Hanover County Museum Foundation, 63 MFD Radio, and Pepsi Cola Bottling Company, will be held during the opening.

Beach season doesn't end on Labor Day at least not in New Hanover County. The ocean, the sea breeze, a good dinner of fresh seafood found year-round, offers a perennial escape from everyday living. Today everybody loves the beach and with little effort visitors can be enjoying the sand and surf, but this has not always been true.

Seasonal beach residents and visitors did not begin using New Hanover County Beaches until the end of the 19th century. Going to the beach at the turn-of-the-century meant packing a picnic basket and preparing for an all-day excursion on either the Seacoast Railroad to Wrightsville Beach or Captain Harper's steamer Wilmington to Carolina Beach.

The exhibit traces beach beginnings in New Hanover County: Figure Eight Island, Shell Island, Wrightsville Beach, Masonboro Beach, Freeman's Beach, Carolina Beach, Wilmington Beach, Hanby Beach, Kure Beach and Fort Fisher. Architecture, commercial and residential development, and recreational pursuits, are explored through scores of photographs, a simulated trolley and beach-related artifacts.

It's all free at the museum.

GEOLOGY CLUB

Will meet this Friday at 2:00 in FR 215. Anyone interested in joining is welcome. We need your input on upcoming collecting and camping trips. If any members can't make this meeting, call Sue 791-4481.

The 1987-88 UNCW Faculty & Staff Telephone Directories will be distributed next week.

May Craven, professional speaker will be speaking on communication skills in Bear Hall Room 112 at 4:30 on Wed. Nov. 4, 1987. Sponsored by Phi Beta Lambda Business Fraternity. All students are invited to attend.

WWQQ 101 FM in conjunction with Hills and Wilson's food stores present the 4th Annual Holiday Food Festival, Sunday, November 8, 1987 from 10 AM to 5 PM in Trask Coliseum at UNCW.

Approximately 40 different national, regional and local food distributors and manufacturers will have booths set up for the public to sample food, see demonstrations and to receive coupons, recipes and product information.

Tickets are free and will be distributed by Hills and Wilson's food stores. These tickets will be announced the day of the show. Last year's show drew 25,000 people and this year the show has nearly doubled in size.

Contact operations manager, Brenda Garrison, at WWQQ 101 FM for more information.

A discussion about recent Vietnam films titled "Hollywood's Vietnam: Myth or Reality?" will be held by a panel of faculty who served in Vietnam Tuesday, November 3, at 7:30 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium. Those participating include Larry Cable of the history department, Rick Dixon of sociology, Roger Lowery in political science and Jerry Seiple in English. The discussion is sponsored by the UNCW History Department and the Historical Society. Free and open to the public.

The Fall Atlantis Literary-Art Magazine Students Readings will be held Saturday, November 7, at 7:00 p.m. in UU-201. Students will read their own poems and short stories. For more information call Charles Fort at 3329.

Financial Management Association is sponsoring a trip to Wall Street Dec. 17 - 20. Anyone interested should contact Dr. Ron Copley, extension 3516 or Ruth Craft 799-1060 as soon as possible.

The men's basketball team will be featured during the second annual Seahawk Tipoff Banquet scheduled for Thursday, November 12, at 7:30 p.m. at the Hilton. The banquet is open to students, faculty, staff and the general public. Admission is $8 and includes dinner. To get tickets call 3297.

Any student who is interested in housing on campus for the spring semester should come to the housing office and put their name on the waiting list. The list is growing and spaces available will be limited so don't delay.

The University Program Board and WHSL will present Max Weinberg: The Big Beat From E Street, a multi-media lecture extravaganza, November 11 at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

PMS, The "Missed" Diagnosis will be the topic of a lecture presented by the YMCA on Monday, Nov. 16 from 7:00-8:30 p.m. Dr. William Sisson, a Wilmington chiropractor, will discuss treatment of pre-menstrual syndrome from a wholistic approach. The program will include time for questions and answers.

According to Dr. Sisson, "Many women suffer from PMS but are diagnosed as having other problems. If PMS is not addressed in its entirety then the patient tends not to improve."

Cost for this lecture is $2 for YWCA members and $3 for non-members. Advanced registration is requested. To pre-register or for more information call the YWCA at 799-6820 or come by the office at 2815 So. College Road.

The Atlantis, UNCW's Art and Literary Magazine, has extended this year's submission's deadline until November 20th at 5:00 p.m. This will be the last possible date of submission for the 1987-88 magazine. Submit works to the UU Room 202-F. In addition, the Atlantis is sponsoring an art contest. Cash prizes will be awarded, 1st place fifty dollars, 2nd thirty, and 3rd twenty. Submit art contest entries in Room 205 of the UU (Atlantis office). The art contest deadline is November 20th at 5:00 p.m.

The Young College Democrats of the University of North Carolina Wilmington will be hosting a representative of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis (Mass.) Wednesday night November 4, at 5:30 pm in room 201 of the University Union on campus. John Parachini, the Eastern Coordinator of the Dukakis Presidential Campaign, will address the group on the policy positions and platforms of the Governor. All students and interested individuals are invited and encouraged to attend the presentation. The College Democrats of UNCW does not, nor will not, publicly endorse any candidate for the Democratic Nomination but wishes to provide information on the individual candidates to the student body of the institution at large as well as the local public.

Ann Conner, Stephen LeQuire and Donald Furst of the creative arts department will display their work Nov. 4 through Dec. 4 in the Kenan Hall lobby. Conner's work will consist of a series of small oil and acrylic paintings, LeQuire will exhibit models for proposed outdoor large-scale sculptures along with two wall pieces and Furst will display work in a variety of printmaking, drawing and painting media.

Sizemore breeding "Superbug"

By Wendy Williams,
Staff Writer

Dr. Ronald Sizemore, Associate Professor of Biology at UNCW, is currently trying to find a strain of genetically altered bacteria that can help solve a major problem of today's world — pollution.

"Superbug" is a genetically engineered bacteria that breaks down crude oil. It can dispose of a wide variety of oils but it works very slow.

Sizemore is studying natural genetic energy in order to determine the danger of releasing manmade strains into the environment.

Sizemore says that people are more afraid of manmade strains than natural ones, but he feels this fear is misplaced.

"Many of the manmade strains have the same environmental effects as "except that they work at a more rapid pace."

Sizemore has worked with Dr. Donald Kapraun studying seaweed genes in Kapraun's program, with the plants. However, Sizemore says that funds are low for the programs. He hopes to get a grant from the UNC SeaGrant program, which has given him sponsorship before.

Fraternities , sororities, fight stereotyped images of "the Evil Greek"

By Donald Smith
Staff Writer

Over the past few years, fraternities and sororities all over the United States have become the topic of controversy. Several fraternities have hazed pledges to the point that they had to be hospitalized, and in some cases, death has occurred.

In Austin, Texas three fraternity members were expelled after the confessed to hazing a pledge to the point that he had to be hospitalized.

A more recent form of hazing happened here in North Carolina last spring in Durham.

Three pledges from North Carolina Central University were struck by a car and seriously injured after they were blindfolded, placed in the middle of a road and ordered to stay there until they were given permission to move.

Here at UNCW the fraternities and sororities are doing everything they can to change the image fostered over the past few years. They are very actively involved in various organizations throughout the campus and the community as well.

Delta Zeta sorority member Sherry Brisson agrees that over the years fraternities and sororities have gained a bad reputation due to the mistakes of a few groups. Delta Zeta is also involved in several functions both on campus and off.

"Delta Zeta to me is like a smile that never goes away," commented Sherry Brisson.

Jeff Collins, president of Delta Tau Delta feels that hazing is no way to help members gain respect for their fraternity.

"The biggest strength of any fraternity is their brotherhood," commented Collins.

"People always find it easier to not get involved with anything, they find it easier to criticize the efforts of others," commented Kerri Whelan, member of Alpha Delta Pi.

Alpha Xi Delta is new to the campus, but it didn't take them long to become involved in various charities.

"Alpha Xi Delta has taught me how to be a better person," commented Kym McIntosh, President of Alpha Xi Delta sorority.

CFI offering loans for non-residents

(RALEIGH).-- College Foundation Inc. (CFI) announced this week that, for the first time in 25-year history, out-of-state students attending colleges in North Carolina are eligible to benefit from CFI's educational loan programs. Heretofore, the Foundation's loans were for the benefit only of North Carolina legal residents attending colleges in or out of state.

In May 1987, the N.C. General Assembly modified the enabling statute of the N.C. State Education Assistance Authority to guarantee educational loans of nonresident students and parents of benefiting students attending postsecondary educational institutions in North Carolina. Because the State Education Assistance Authority is the guarantor for most of CFI's educational loans, this statute change enables the Foundation now to make educational loans to out-of-state students and parents of benefiting students attending colleges in North Carolina. The borrowers and benefiting students must, of course, meet the other eligibility requirements for these educational loans.

College Foundation is the central lender for three educational loan programs funded by North Carolina full-service banks and special investors.

N.C. Insured Student Loans (N.C. ISLs) are for dependent or independent students who show financial need in order to attend their colleges. For these loans, the federal government pays the interest while students are in college. N.C. Supplemental Loans for Students are for independent self-supporting students who do not qualify for interest-subsidized N.C. ISLs or who need more loan funds than the maximum N.C. ISLs.

N.C. PLUS Loans are available to parents of dependent students, either undergraduate or graduate/professional. Like the Supplemental Loans for Students, PLUS Loans are NOT based on financial need.

Additional information and applications are available from college financial aid offices or directly from College Foundation Inc., P.O. Box 12100, Raleigh, NC 27605 (919/821-4771).

Telefax now in Library

—The North Carolina Department of Cultural Resources has awarded $2,750 to the Randall Library at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The money will be used for a statewide telefacsimile network system which is being directed by the State Library and funded through the Library Services and Construction Act Title III.

According to Gene Huguete, director of library services at UNCW and coordinator of the Randall Library project, "an additional one-time $500 grant will also be received for the purchase of supplies and installation costs for the machine."

In explaining the system, says Huguete, if a faculty member needs an article that is not available in Randall Library, a reference librarian will be available to send a message on the computer and in return the information is transmitted over the telephone and printed out on the telefacsimile."

Howard F. McGuinn, assistant state librarian at the State Library in Raleigh and over-all coordinator of the statewide project, says "29 libraries in the state will receive the telefacsimile network including 15 of the University of North Carolina constituent institutions. Think of it as a long-distance copier, it speeds materials back and forth and only takes 30 to 60 seconds per page of material. The system has unlimited opportunities, you can access materials not only in North Carolina but across the nation and in Canada."

The telefacsimile network system will be setup in the interlibrary loans area of the Randall Library, and is expected to be available for use in the next few weeks. The telefacsimile network will speed the interlibrary loan process for faculty and students. Guidelines for use are in the process of being developed.

The Christmas season is all ready upon us, and nothing is left sacred

It is upon us. The unofficial start of the Christmas shopping season.

Used to be, all the madness didn't hit til December 1. Then it was Thanksgiving.

Now, in yesterday's local paper, Revco, K-Mart announced their pre-holiday, post-Halloween sales.

Last year, I bemoaned the fact that we no longer had Ronco when the search for Aunt Fannie's present had turned to nothing she didn't or wouldn't have. I mean, imagine this scene:

The location: a brick ranch style home in the suburbs of Wilmington. A station wagon and a sedan are parked outside in the driveway. It is the Home of Jim and Polly Ester, (say Polly Ester fast if you don't get the joke.)

The time: Christmas morning. While all the little Esters are playing with their new Rambo Limited Range ThermoNuclear Device and singing 'Peace on Earth, good will to men', the time comes for Polly to open that box that always carries that one special present every year.

What will that present be? Last year, she got a genuine simulated cubic zirconia ring. Year before, Jim gave her a nightgown that was so naughty it can't be washed in the daylight.

What is it this year? "Oh, Jim! Just what I've always wanted! A ronco Slicer-Dicer-conference-calling-trash-compacting-in-the-shell-egg-scrambler."

Now, what will the Esters do for that extra-special present at Christmas time?

Luckily, Walter Drake still puts his little catalogs in the Sunday supplement magazines, so we are still assured of a good supply of Vacutex blackhead removers and nose hair trimmers.

Pickups, Politics and Hound Dogs

With Jefferson Weaver

Catalogs are really fun. Someone once wrote that if you took one copy of each catalog printed in the US in the space of one year, and lined them end to end, you could cover the world several times over.

You can buy anything in a catalog -- I mean anything. The government puts one out with all its surplus typewriters, jeeps, Korean War fighter planes, and filing cabinets. Some lady who had absolutely no shame whatsoever (her name is Victoria Secret) puts out a catalog full of nightgowns and such that aren't exactly what you'd send home to Momma and are candidates for prosecution under the obscenity law. And if any of you have any back issues, I am willing to pay top dollar for them.

Along with catalogs come the little slippery full color flyers that you see in about every newspaper except this one (except this week). Everybody has a flyer: Belk's, K-Mart, Revco, Brendle's -- everybody that has something to sell you that you either need when the store isn't open or wouldn't buy for your least favorite cousin in Oklahoma.

Embattled by the elements of Christmas in November, I ran to what I thought would be my last sure refuge from such things -- my favorite pawn shop. I knew I would be safe there, safe from the tinsel and glitter and dancing Santa Claus.

A place where men could be men, and discuss the finer points of a rifle or a fishing pole or a dog or a motorcycle. A place of solitude, where you occasionally go by just to 'visit,' or 'to kill some time.'

As I walked through the door, I was overcome by the same feeling that General Robert E. Lee probably felt when the thought hit him that we might not win. A feeling of desperate hopelessness.

You see, twisted in and out of the shotguns and rifles, wrapped around rods and reels, even topping a line of CB radio antennae, was a glistening, red and silver line of Tinsel. One of the 'demonstrator' fishing rigs had a gaudy dancing Santa Claus tied on the end rather than a gaudy fishing plug.

Nothing, yet nothing, is sacred.

Progress is great; but can we afford the price?

When the Board of Governors here a while back, they approved -- to the delight of our faculty and students, and to no one's surprise -- a proposal by the University to expand parking areas and to build one entirely new one.

We are worried that the University could suffer from these new lots -- if no one pays any attention to preserving the natural and architectural beauty of our campus.

"You have such a nice, clean campus here" is a line heard over and over, said by everyone from student's parents to Elderhostel participants to the trustees and governors who gave UNCW the honor of accepting our invitation to meet here.

A couple from UNC-Charlotte told us that they wished more had been done to care for their campus when the building began. Ditto for Elizabeth State University trustees we spoke with.

And the culture shock of the architectural variety on the mether campus at Chapel Hill is just short of infamous -- going from an eighteenth century dorm to a Frank Lloyd Wright laboratory doesn't say much for preserving a heritage long earned.

The temptation to go chain-sawing in the name of progress is awfully inviting to institutions as young as ours. We are growing, and at an incredible rate.

But like any growing baby you can't wear the same clothes forever, hence the moves from Market Street years ago and the gradual -- sometimes not so gradual -- move towards the sea behind us.

There's a line from a once popular song about the colonization of America. The line goes, "Someone laid the forests bare/nobody caught him/put up a bunch of ugly boxes...."

Care has been taken so far in protecting the aesthetic quality of our campus. It's up to us to be sure that our campus doesn't turn into a bunch of "ugly boxes."

"THERE'S ONLY ONE DRUG LAW THAT REALLY WORKS ... THE LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND."

Student Forum

Moore chides The Seahawk

I am very upset by the continuous display of contempt and blatant disregard that this newspaper shows the Student Government. You continuously lambaste Student Government for frivolous and wasteful expenditures when you know that this is anything but the truth. Student Government is here to distribute this money equally as it can, to not just the Medias, UPB and the Executive Account but to all of the student organizations. After all, it is, as you so repeatedly mention, the students' money. How can we spend "$50,000 at a whack" when we don't have $50,000 to spend? The finance committee met on several occasions to try and make fair recommendations for allocations to each organization to be approved by the Senate. The Senate and the finance committee are made up of students who pay their student activity fees, which they in turn are responsible for. It is not an easy job to do this but we are proud of the decisions we made. We have no money to waste on frivolities because we have allocated most of it. And since it appears that you will not do your job in reporting the facts, I will.

We allocated a total of $205,001 to the Executive Account, which has a mandatory salary expenditure of $32,000, University Program Board, four Medias, including yourself, and twenty-one organizations with memberships of over 600 students. Those allocations breakdown as follows:

Executive Account $67,000
Office Manager and Secretary $32,000

Office Operations $35,500
University Program Board $59,000
Office and Conventions $6,090
Special Events $6,680
Coffee House $6,400
Minority Arts $6,000
Concerts $17,280
Fine Arts and Lectures $10,780
Film and Video $5,850
Medias $44,500
Fledgling $14,000
Seahawk $12,000
WLOZ $10,000
Atlantis $8,500

Student Organizations $32,801
Gospel Choir $1,745
NCSL $4,000
Crew Team $4,120
NAACP $800
Football $7,600
BSU $2,400
Phi Beta Lambda $4,000
Rugby $1,440
Mus. of World Cult. $800
Geography $600
Geology $800
Political Science $800
Historical Society $1,440
Racquetball $656
Recreation Majors $1,600
Student Council for Except Children $200 College Democrats $200
Sociology $200
Wrestling $200
Toastmasters $200
Surf Club $200

Now, how can we spend money on frivolities, when you can see we don't have any?

In addition, in the past you have mentioned salaries. Well, let's take a look at them.

Student Government Association Monthly Salaries $600

President $225
Vice President $175
Senate Secretary $60 x 2 = $120

University Program Board Monthly Salaries $135

UPB President $75
UPB V. President $60

Fledgling Monthly Salaries $200

Editor $100 x 2 = $200

Seahawk Monthly Salaries $1,692.50

Seahawk Editor $301.50
Entertainment Editor $301.50
Sports Editor $301.50
Business Editor $301.50

In a time when apathy is so rampant on college campuses, why must you remain ignorant to the facts? Why not report them accurately? Now, I think that it is high time that the Seahawk does its job and report the facts accurately and stop telling half truths and let student government do the job that they have been doing, that is representing all the students. Remember, when you sometimes forget your Journalism Integrity that you get your start up money from student activity fees.

View from Right Field

with Montague Britt, syndicated columnist
PO Box 713 Dunn, N.C. 28339 41987 LITJ Editor

A recent letter to the editor to a paper carrying this column from a Professor Melton A. McLaurin accuses me of racism and disputes my opinion of the vicious lynching of Robert Bork by the United States Senate.

But I stand by my statement—Robert Bork was lynched, and my opinion is supported by President Ronald Reagan, the respected syndicated columnist William Safire and many others, so I was wrong I am in some distinguished company.

McLaurin resorts to a distortion that has been used for years to discredit patriotic and concerned Americans who stand up for state's rights—the act of calling them racists.

We states righters have always contended that the more centralized power, the worse it will be in the long run for Americans of all races, particularly when that power is delegated not by the Congress or the legislatures of several states rights, calling them racists.

We states righters have always contended that the more centralized power, the worse it will be in the long run for Americans of all races, particularly when that power is delegated not by Congress or the legislatures of the several states but by the federal courts, as during the Warren years.

The United States of America is not based on the premise that the end justifies the means, and Bork would have stood firm for the intent of the framers.

That was the real reason the ultra-liberal activists such as Ted Kennedy and Joseph Biden opposed the appointment.

As for my being motivated by racism, I have been delighted ever since the municipal primary elections that in the city of Durham a black is the candidate of the conservatives and a white man has the liberal following.

This tells me that those people will base their choice on the only valid criteria for casting a vote—the qualifications and the philosophy of the candidate, regardless of race, creed or color.

What the people of Durham decide is, of course, their business, not mine, but I sincerely hope that the black man will be their next mayor, because there appears to be no doubt of his being the best man.

So much for racism.

I did not "ridicule" efforts to enact a federal anti-lynching law, as the professor said. I said the attempt was, what it obviously was, an unnecessary piece of legislation designed only to allow the Federal Government to usurp more of the powers reserved to the states.

He cites a 1914 lynching account. Lynching was a deplorable crime, but I wasn't talking about 1914, but in the 40's when no lynching had occurred in the South for years.

Unfortunately, as we acknowledged, the crime did reappear in a few cases when the struggle over civil rights intensified, and that I never condoned.

But one of the worst, and least publicized lynchings was not related to what is generally classified as civil rights, but to that most basic of all rights, the right to work.

A black man in an industrialized northern state was beaten to death by union goons because he crossed a picket line to do his job.

What about that, professor, Wasn't that a lynching?

The quest for a roof, — and a good roomie

I thought my first column should be about something at least half of the students here could sympathize with. I know I can't be the only UNCW student who has just adjusted to this year's roommate. Fortunately, it only took two months this year—I think my roommate from last year and I never got quite this far.

At any rate, in making last year's decision between spending several weeks on a cot in a Galloway lounge or renting an apartment, I had to consider more than which would be cheapest.

Most students at this school have to make the decision sometime, but I'm not sure that students are ready to make it as freshmen.

Last year I lived at Campus Edge, so the transition from home to apartment was much like home to dorm would have been. (As anyone who has lived at the Edge knows, its size makes it just a glorified dorm room.)

Still, I can't help feeling that students shouldn't be given a choice as freshmen—they should be required to live in the dorms. A lot of people debate this, saying the dorms are far too noisy and that it is too hard to get anything done. I say tough.

Come on people, this is college... it's supposed to be a challenge! Living on campus must be very difficult, but it also builds strength of character. Although I'm adept at dealing with people in a business-like manner from living off-campus, my on-campus friends don't freak as readily when their roommate gets into their party supplies.

If freshmen were required to live on campus, I'm sure the whole housing situation would be reworked to allow for all those difficulties; maybe people would utilize the library more often and I'm sure that the South College Road Hardees would appreciate the business. (And believe it or not, I'm not the only one who feels this way.)

So maybe you should encourage your young friends who are coming here some day to nurture a little intestinal fortitude—they'll need it, wherever they live their freshman year.

Public Safety Notes...

Traffic officers are there for a reason

At the beginning of this 1987-88 school year, the Public Safety Department of UNCW started several programs that will improve the safety and convenience of every person on campus.

One of these programs is assigning officers at the intersections of "G" Street and Randall Drive and Riegel Road and "G" Street at the changing of each class. The purpose of this traffic control assignment is to expedite motor vehicles, bicycles and pedestrian traffic through these intersections at a faster and safer pace.

I am one of the officers assigned to work traffic at the intersection of "G" Street and Randall Drive and I have observed a very dangerous situation occurring: that needs everyone's cooperation to prevent a serious accident between a motor vehicle and a bicycle. Bicycle riders are running past stop signs, and are also making left turns in front of motor vehicles, as they start off after stopping.

Bicycles must follow the rules of the road, it is the law. The rules of the road include obeying the directions of a Traffic Control Officer as well as many other rules.

Please follow our signals when we are directing traffic. Your trip will be faster and safer.

The other major program in this school, is the initiation of Police Officers walking through the Residence Halls on a regular basis. The number of cases of vandalism and thefts have dropped. We don't walk through with the intent of cramping your style, but we will take appropriate action if it is needed.

This week's Public Safety Notes were prepared by Officer Obbie Blanton. Officer Blanton has been with the University for a little over a year. Before coming to the University, he was a Lieutenant with the Wilmington Police Department, a position from which he retired. Officer Blanton has both a son and daughter who are now Police Officers for the City of Wilmington.

Happy Birthdays bring bah humbugs

I recently had a birthday. Thank you, hold your applause until after the column is read, please. Now, what exactly does a birthday mean? Once you have had twenty-one of them, it doesn't mean much. A birthday is the greatest thing in the world when you are a kid. Presents! That's what it means, and a party. Toys, cake and ice cream. Wow!

The whole childish celebration continues through adulthood. It's a weak imitation and quite insignificant. You were born on that date—period. People were programmed since childhood on how to reply if someone has a birthday. Of course they say "Happy Birthday." You know you are getting old when it isn't followed by "How old are you?"

A kid loves getting older. They love to brag—like "I am nine years old," and they are so proud as if it is a hell of an accomplishment. Kids always get one half year older. Do you ever hear, "I'm twenty-seven and a half years old?" When an adult says, "Today is my birthday," what does that mean? They are physically, psychologically, emotionally and legally a year older than they were yesterday? No, what they are saying is "Give me a present, make a big stink over me, this is the only day that I get treated as someone special." You can usually get people to buy you drinks all night, but the next morning you wake up feeling ten years older.

It's kind of weird celebrating your Dad's birthday. You must see him that day and what do you tell him - you got it - "Happy Birthday." He replies with the traditional "Thank You." Then you give him a new shirt. Father's don't usually look happy about birthdays. I don't think it's because they are a year older. It's because they are embarrassed at the birthday ritual. It's the same thing every year. Now if you gave him a new Porsche and a forty twenty-one-year-old chick to use for the day, that is a different story. The next day Dad would be counting the days until his next birthday. Instead, it is cards and shirts and piers and maybe a cake.

Speaking of cake. How about that great birthday song. A real musical genius must have spent years writing it. Let's see, it starts with "Happy Birthday to you," then it leads to "Happy Birthday to you." At the risk of not being redundant he threw in, "Happy Birthday dear Rick," then back to "Happy Birthday to you." What a beautiful song. My family always sang the second verse (I bet the same guy wrote it). "May the dear Lord bless you, may the dear Lord bless you." Talk about poetic. Brings tears to my eyes. The Beatles attempted to improve these lyrics. John and Paul wrote hundreds of songs, but the best they could do was, "You say it's your birthday - so Happy Birthday to you - we're gonna have a party." Not even John and Paul could think of a better reply when someone says it's their birthday.

Maybe family and friends should get together on your birthday and discuss your accomplishments or misadventures of the year past. Joke about the night you spent in jail or congratulate you on the great job you got. They can write it all down, and you can see if you are actually getting mature and wiser. It might wake some people up, like if their major accomplishment was remembering to go to the unemployment office twice in a row, or for drinking thirty-eight beers without throwing up. If you had a good, productive year it would make you feel good to realize that others know what you have accomplished.

I don't think this column is going to start any new traditions. So, if you have a birthday coming up, then Happy Birthday.

Facing — and handling — unexpected crises

It is both interesting and a little bit frightening to watch the wild fluctuations of the stock market and to hear emerging concerns, not only about the slow down of our economy, but about out and out depression with all the personal and job insecurity that might entail. At this writing, already two suicides have taken place as the direct result of loss of personal wealth.

We are an affluent nation experiencing a lifestyle that is way above the lifestyle of most of the rest of the world. I, personally, certainly enjoy the good life—sailing, eating out, having a nice home and cars and vacations and so on. For those of us who try to live out of our Christian faith, our responsibility is to live in creative tension between our personal well-being and the needs of those around the world who live in hunger and illness and despair.

But when there is a sudden change from the possibility of our continuing to be upwardly mobile to finding ourselves becoming rapidly downwardly mobile, we are faced with a whole new situation that strikes right at the heart of our personal sense of security. We need to face the fact that we have become dependent on our American affluence and that dependence skews our perspective on what we have to have for life to be meaningful and even, for some, loving living. It is a telling symbol of this inner crisis that people who have good marriages, strong families and who live in a supportive community, when faced with the loss not of job, but of significant portion of their wealth find themselves seeing no other possibility for support. No matter what happens in the next few weeks or months to our economy, it is worth reflecting on what lies at the center of our values, what those elements are on which we depend for our sense of personal worth and satisfaction with our lives. There is ample evidence, story to be piled upon story, that people who are cut off from the love of God and the loss of health or the loss of freedom through imprisonment in war or the loss of job or house, that having significant relationships and a view of life that allows some sense of meaning even in the darkest days, and most fundamental of all, an understanding sense of the love of God; enables such people to continue to value life and find the inner security that allows joy to real and hope to be sustained.

What is it that you value? What does sustain you? On what do you depend for a sense of meaning in life?

In Concert!

The Big Beat From E Street

Max Weinberg

Max Weinberg will visit campus next week

The Concert Committee of the University Program Board and radio station WHSL will present Max Weinberg: The Big Beat From E Street, a multi-media lecture extravaganza, at 8 pm on Wednesday, November 11th. The show, which was originally scheduled for October 15th, will be held in Kenan Auditorium. Admission will be $2 with UNCW ID and $5 for the general public.

Bruce Springsteen calls him the Mighty Max. Robert Palmer, noted music critic for the New York Times, says he's "the rhythmic backbone of the E Street Band." Modern Drummer magazine crowned him "King of the Big Beat." His famous snare drum sound helped re-define rock drumming. Yet Max Weinberg, one of contemporary music's most respected drummers, is more than just the keeper of the beat in what many consider the world's best rock 'n' roll band.

He's also the author of the critically acclaimed book The Big Beat (Conversations with Rock's Great Drummers). Contemporary Books, 1984. In it, Weinberg depicted the growth of rock drumming from its very beginning by interviewing such legends as Ringo Starr, Rolling Stone Charlie Watts, and Elvis Presley's original drummer, D. J. Fontana. As reviewers accurately pointed out, it was the first time the story of rock 'n' roll was told from a drummer's perspective. Because of this, The Big Beat earned a permanent place on the rock history bookshelf.

Now Weinberg is entering yet another phase in his career, namely that of public speaker. "The message I got from rock 'n' roll was: Believe in yourself and anything is possible. This is my story," says Weinberg. "Stepping out from behind the drums to tell this story is a natural extension of my performing with Bruce and the rest of the E Street Band."

Although you'd never know it from his achievements and reputation, there was a time in his life—during the recording of Bruce Springsteen's classic double album The River—when Weinberg nearly lost everything he had accomplished as rock 'n' roll up to that point.

As he likes to say, Weinberg then "re-invented" himself as a drummer. The results can be heard on one of rock's biggest selling records ever, Born in the U.S.A. But there's more to the story. In 1983 while recording Born in the U.S.A., Weinberg found it more and more difficult to play the drums without severe pain in his hands. After years of physically demanding performances, he had suffered injury so bad that doctors told him he'd eventually get to the point where he wouldn't even be able to pick up a drumstick again, let alone remain in the E Street Band. They told him to find a new profession.

Numerous operations and countless hours of practice and rehabilitation later—coupled with an inner drive and determination to overcome this near-crippling injury to the tendons in his hands—Weinberg beat the odds. In fact, Weinberg has never played better. Tell Bruce Springsteen how powerful his song "Born in the U.S.A." is and he'll probably tell you as he did Musician magazine, "That's Max. Max was the best thing on that song."

It's topics such as motivation, goal setting, overcoming obstacles and ultimately achieving success—spiced with stories and anecdotes pertaining to the twelve years Weinberg has spent playing behind his mentor and longtime friend, Bruce Springsteen—which will be the heart of Weinberg's presentation. A skilled, articulate speaker and the antithesis of the typical rock drummer, Weinberg has something meaningful and entertaining to say to college students—be they aspiring rock drummers or future corporate executives.

"It doesn't matter what your goals are," says Weinberg. "It's just important to have them and work towards them, all the while remembering, as Bruce says, to guard against losing the best part of yourself."

Musical 'Camelot' opens Wednesday

Opera House Theatre Company is proud to present its production of Lerner and Loewe's "CAMELOT", beginning with a Gala Preview Performance on November 11, 7:30 p.m. to be followed by a cocktail buffet at Justine's Restaurant. Tickets for this event are $50.00 per person. From Nov. 12-Nov. 15 and Nov. 18-22, tickets are $10 and $12, and performances are at 8:00.

"CAMELOT" is one of the most beautiful of all the Broadway musicals. The magical story of King Arthur, Lancelot, and Guinevere is supported by some of the most lyrical music ever written. Songs such as "If Ever I Would Leave You", "Camelot", and "How To Handle A Woman" will enchant and delight audiences of all ages.

This Opera House production is directed by Lon Crisculo and stars Fred DeJaco as King Arthur, Cindy Colucci as Guinevere, and Robin Dale Robertson as Lancelot. David Parker appears as Pellinore. Also featured are Beverly Skinner as Morgan Le Fey, Steve Cooper as Mordred, Michael Titterton as Merlyn, Ann Smith as Nimue, and as excellent supporting cast of knights and ladies.

Jim Martz is musical director

UNCW Concert Choir will present Bach's Magnificat

Joe Hickman

by Heidi Berge

A program of choral music will be presented in two parts by the Concert Choir on Friday, November 6 at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. Admission is free and the public is invited.

According to Joe Hickman, Conductor and Director of Choral Activities, the Concert Choir will be joined by the Chamber Singers and a number of visiting performers. The first half of the program will include choral music by a variety of composers, and J.S. Bach's Magnificat will be presented during the second half of the program.

Soloists for the concert include Soprano, Beth Bell; Alto, Donna Dease; Tenor, Jerry Cribbs; and Baritone, John Pierce.

Featured soloist will be Soprano Alice Pierce, a new faculty member to the UNCW Creative Arts Department who teaches voice in the music division. Ms. Pierce holds a M.M. from Indiana University, has sung with the San Diego Civic Light Opera,

UNCW Concert Choir

Whitewater Opera, Illinois Opera Theater, and a number of well-known symphonies. She was also a recent finalist in the 1986 Metropolitan Opera Auditions. Ms. Pierce's experience in opera will culminate in presenting a three credit Opera Workshop for interested students next semester, as well as her contribution to this Friday night's choral concert.

Bach wrote the Magnificat as a song of celebration and joy for the Virgin Mary as she learns she is chosen to carry the Christ child. Magnificat translates to mean "My Soul Doth Magnify the Lord". It is one of Bach's most beautiful and well known works written for a five part chorus of mixed voices in twelve sections.

Don't miss this spectacular performance. It will raise your spirits and gear you up for the Christmas Season!

'Faith Journey' salutes Dr. Martin Luther King

Joyce Bryant, Music supervisor of AFRI productions

The Minority Arts Committee of the University Program Board and the Black Student Union will present "Faith Journey," a musical theatre documentary of drama, song and movement on the accomplishments of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. at 8 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 4, in the University Union Room 100. Admission is free.

Faith Journey presents Black spirituals/freedom songs that reach beyond the barriers of class, race and nationality. AFRI Productions, the traveling Black Musical Theatre Troupe, recently appeared in a four part PBS series entitled "Thank God!", the musical history of the Black church and was viewed in some 250 markets foreign countries.

Faith Journey: A Musical Memory of Martin, fuses the power of song, preaching and prayer, to spark the passion and pride of a people turning the corner of history. The message is in the music which serves as the spine of this theatre piece. This musical theatre documentary combines choreographed movement, choral speaking, and dramatic episodes with moving melodies to skillfully blend a momentous movement on American life.

SHORTS

Chamber singers perform in Virginia

The UNCW Chamber Singers will present an expanded version of the first half of Friday night's concert in historic Williamsburg VA on Saturday as part of the Bruton by Candlelight concert series. This marks the eighth consecutive year in which UNCW choruses have been featured in this historic concert series, which dates back to the eighteenth century.

Membership in the Concert Choir and Chamber Singers is open to any student at the University, and plans are now being made for activities in the spring, including a two-week tour of West Germany in the last half of May of 1988. This tour will be open to all choir members, but it will be necessary to receive a deposit on the air fare before December 1. For details concerning the tour to Germany or to audition for membership in the choir, please contact the Music Division Office at 395-3390.

William's Hardwired: Cyberpunk Clone

by Scott Urban

Like "rap" to music and "sitcom" to television, "cyberpunk" has become a catch-phrase in science-fiction, a blanket term that is used to cover many writing styles. Walter Jon Williams' Hardwired is 1987's entrant in the "Cyberpunk Sweepstakes". Wait a minute, you ask- what the heck is "cyberpunk"? It's a movement within science-fiction circles that began in the early '80's, a movement characterized by hi-tech slang, computer terminology, and glitzy stylistic techniques. Cyberpunk's leading exponent is William Gibson, whose novel Neuromancer won the Hugo award for best science-fiction novel a couple years ago. Comparisons between the works of Williams and Gibson are inevitable, and in a sense, Williams has brought the comparisons on himself.

Hardwired is set in an indeterminate number of years in the future. The rich and privileged classes now live and work in orbiting space stations. Immense business corporations run all aspects of life and have subjugated Earth during the "Rock Wars", turning it into a virtual feeding ground, a resource to plunder at will. Those who are left on Earth must make their way in any fashion possible, and so are smugglers, thieves, assassins and prostitutes. Men can now directly "interface" with machines, projecting their consciousness into computers. And computers can be surgically implanted into men, augmenting their natural abilities and giving them undreamed of powers (hence the term, "hardwired").

Cowboy is a professional smuggler, running goods and supplies across a divided America. Sarah is a bodyguard and assassin who is on the run from some treacherous employers. They are thrown together in a complex smuggling operation that goes wrong, and must face the massive forces of an orbital corporation out to kill them. Eventually, Cowboy organizes the smugglers into a unified force opposing the orbitals, and Sarah regains control of her life. The novel ends on an upbeat note, with the promise of some sort of redemption for a divided mankind.

Williams, however, has left himself open to some pointed criticism. Gibson's protagonist in Neuromancer is also named Cowboy—Gibson's also teams up with a female bodyguard—and the conceptualization of Earth's future is almost identical. Do the similarities cry "Plagiarism"? I don't know—but if I were Williams, I wouldn't get too close to Gibson for a while.

At the same time, Williams has other problems. His characterization of Cowboy is a little too sketchy, and Cowboy is not fallible enough for our interest. Sarah is more full-fleshed as a character, particularly as shown in her relationship with her scheming brother, a male prostitute. Williams tries to emulate Gibson's neon-tinged prose style, but his inspirational light is a lot more dim. When Gibson's Neuromancer came out, his cyberpunk pose (which at times reminds me of literary equivalent of Miami Vice) was refreshingly unique, but now, in Williams' hands, it seems forced.

By the way, if it sounds like cyberpunk is right up your alley, be sure to check out William Gibson's Burning Chrome now out in paperback. This is a collection of Gibson's shorter works, most culled from OMNI. Among the stories is one of my favorites from the early '80's, "Johnny Mnemonic".

to look for a key witness for her case. That, dear reader, is why we have policemen. Another example, an already too busy Washington lawyer would not have taken up time with an open and shut case like this one. It just doesn't happen folks.

Bad poetry contest was fun Everything was bad!

by Heidi Berge

The Goblins were out in force at "UNCW's First Bad Poetry Reading Contest" last Tuesday night at the Hawk's Nest. Mischievous spirits must have prompted the English Club to sponsor such an ungody event. Everything was bad.

The band mistook their opening performance for a dress rehearsal, starting over one song four times. Poor things. The female clad in black leather jacket, skin-tight neon blue leggings, tube top, and Candie's stiletto heels wielded a hot pink electric guitar and whipped out her demonic Kila-like tongue at the flashing cameras of James Juma, UNCW English major and Seahawk's own Wes Perry. Her solo guitar performance as the judges deliberated, however, nicely slowed down the beatings of the audience's anticipatory hearts. Then, the rest of the band picked them up again, grinning our ears with unmerciful noise.

The Bad Poetry continued along the same vein as Randy Seales, President of the English Club, played host. Mary Divins started things off with a work entitled "Dish Jockey" - the rhythmic woes of washing her creative mind down the drain with the rest of the mundane soap suds. Mary tied for an Honorable Mention with Seahawk feature writer Claire Fitzpatrick's "The Top to bottom: Ben Steelman, English Club members, The Liquid Gorillas, and Heidi Berge.

Butterfly" - a rather melodious little poem with a gory ending for the butterfly.

It gets better! Third place was shared between Laura Story's "Cut Me" - a conversation with her fingernails, and Stephanie's "Ode".

The Liquid Gorillas almost stole the show and walked away dragging their knuckles with Second Place. The Gorillas performed their version of "A Psychological View of the Origin of the Kidney" with bongos, costumes, and props. They could have won had the contest been confined to scholastic talent (I'm not recommending it should have been).

A local luminary snuck out of his ever-busy Star News office to tout his talents. Ben Steelman won First Place. The entertainment writer quickly declined this prestigious bestowal by saying that it wasn't fair for him to win, he had been working a long time to be "paid to write badly".

The evening was all in fun and that's how everyone took it. The English Department does, however, have regular meetings to read original, higher quality literary works every other Tuesday night at 7:00 p.m. in Room 202, Morton Hall. The upcoming schedule is as follows:

Nov. 17 - poetry
Dec. 1 - fiction-nonfiction
Dec. 15 - poetry

If you are interested in sharing some of your "good" writing, bring 5 type-written copies of your work. Or if you'd just like to sit in with these literary minds, come as you are.

Movie Update

by Anita Bradshaw

Here's our new rating system: One denotes the worst movie, four is average, and seven is the best. We hope this makes things easier for the reader.

Suspect starring Dennis Quaid (The Big Easy) and Cher (Silkwood) was full of encroachments that even the ole artistic license couldn't smooth over. Moments like when Tiley (Cher) went downtown, where the derelicts live, at night, to look for a key witness for her case. That, dear reader, is why we have policemen. Another example, an already too busy Washington lawyer would not have taken up time with an open and shut case like this one. It just doesn't happen folks.

Besides these blunders, the movie just doesn't gel. The murderer is supposed to be a surprise, but if you half watch the movie you had him figured out. On my new scale, this film rates a four. Oleander Cinema Six-R.

The Princess Bride is for adults as well as kids. This is an entertaining film worth seeing. This spoof on fairy tales is written in such a delicate manner that even the most avid "tale-watcher" can't take offense. The characters are all lovable, especially the moronic giant.

Go see this one, it's well written, light & easy, everything you'd expect in a good, fun film. I give this film a six. Oleander Cinema Six-PG.

Your Horoscopes for this week

by Joyce Jillson

For Wednesday, November 4, 1987

Moon in Taurus will give you the stamina to accomplish whatever you want. Neptune helps out, too; you can achieve success almost as if magic. Try to cut down on your expenditures, or start a savings account. Concentrate on accumulating enough money to make a major purchase down the road.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Money isn't everything, but now it means a great deal. You have the stamina to meet any challenge. Remember that you may have to wait for results. Get guarantees.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You're right where all the action is. If you keep your wits about you, you could make a financial coup. If a relationship isn't working, then let it go.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Your patience is tried, but the results will be worth the wait. You may need your Taurus friend more than you know. Your jangled nerves feel better in the p.m.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Today's vibes will suit you just fine. One of your major hopes and wishes will be granted. Relationships are intense but satisfying. Give praise not criticism.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Career and home matters come to a head, and a decision must be made. Your profession will bring you the recognition you deserve. It's better to save than spend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). An important legal matter reaches a climax. Postpone a major trip if at all possible; the results you expect won't be forthcoming. Spend your funds wisely.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). If you want luxuries, you'll have to work for them. Joint financial matters are in a state of flux, and so are your emotions. Love is either red hot or cooling fast.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Relationships need special handling; some of your deeper feelings pop up to the surface of your personality. Make no rash financial moves. Real estate ventures grow.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Job conditions go through a cycle of reorganization. Take additional steps to keep your health up to par, perhaps by getting more rest. Stick to routines.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). The investment pictures may tend to be unstable; wait before you rush your decisions. One of your children may soon leave home. If single, you're ready for another love.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Thoughts of moving to a new location may be occupying your mind. A reconciliation is possible, but it may take more time. Money should be invested into your house.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Your mind is whirling a mile a minute; keep track of your brilliant ideas. You may be traveling more over the next few weeks. Sending an angry letter will be a big mistake.

For Thursday, November 5, 1987

The full moon is in penny-pinching Taurus. Soon you'll be able to start new money-making projects. In the meantime, you'll probably have your hands full with what you've already started. Be more conservative in your approach to life. As Mercury goes direct, personal decisions are easier to reach.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your mind will naturally focus on your partner. Someone who was out of your life is now returning. Your business associates help you to be more objective about your career.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You may end up signing that important financial document. Travel plans are subject to a vast revision. All of a sudden you feel your life moving forward again.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). The pace of your life gathers momentum again. Brilliant ideas are likely to flood your mind. Make plans to go on a major trip -- Tahiti would be ideal!

CANCER (June 22-July 22). It's time to rearrange your furniture. A family member may soon return to the roost. It's better to invite people over rather than go to their place.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Career matters continue to peak out. Short trips are likely to be necessary, but you'll enjoy the change of scenery. Get your bills and important documents into the mail.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). An important letter finally arrives. Your relatives are likely to see things your way. If you like to work with your hands, you could switch to a new career.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You have some letters to write and some communications to finish. Trust your own ability to make decisions. Love affairs require good mental rapport.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Behind-the-scenes negotiations will bring the best results. A relative may come back into your life. Now is the time to explore your writing ability.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Little is likely to hold you back, once you clarify your intentions. Life in the city may be getting to you. You may hear from your favorite person in the world.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It's time to get caught up on your work. Be more emotionally understanding of your friends. Talking in front of people is becoming a bigger part of your career.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Your money-making potential is increasing. Your ideas are original, but you must learn how to materialize them. Long-distance love affairs go well.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Your mind is geared for digging out secrets; your intuitions will help you with practical matters. Take your partner's opinion into account.

For Friday, November 6, 1987

While the moon's in Gemini, you're best bet to meet someone is to talk, talk, talk. Or you can take a trip, meet your neighbor, or trust your sense of curiosity. Life is too short to fritter away on uninteresting people. Sell yourself. Sales people should have a field day. Remember, talk, talk, talk!

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You may feel like visiting a variety of fun spots tonight. Going to a play may intrigue you on Saturday. Sunday finds you in a playful and witty mood. Be extroverted.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). This evening you may find yourself attracted to a willowy Virgo. Saturday is excellent for traveling out of town. Sunday is slightly more settled, but not much.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You're feeling at your magnetic best, and others respond to your charm. Get an early start on Saturday's activities. Sunday finds you in a vastly entertaining mood.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You'll enjoy conversations that are free-wheeling. Saturday may find you having to choose between two suitors. On Sunday, you know how to make your partner feel special.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You're in the mood for variety -- in people, places and things. You'll be able to spend more freely on Saturday. There's no need to worry about your popularity on Sunday.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Others will be eager to search you out for your lively company. Health-related activities, such as visiting a spa, are ideal for Saturday. Try an airplane ride on Sunday.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You'll be romantically attracted to people's minds; and they to yours. Widen the scope of your social activities on Saturday. You can be the perfect host or hostess on Sunday.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Forgo old friends for new ones, if this would prove stimulating. Love affairs on Saturday may bring you a surprise you'll never forget. You enjoy scintillating conversations on Sunday.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Entertain at home if possible. Have some fun with parlor games on Saturday -- just the two of you. Sunday may end up being a talkfest; you find out how much you mean to other people.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). People are talking about you favorably. Saturday is ideal for meeting a new group of people, those who share your interests. On Sunday, you're ready for a change of pace.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Seek diversions that are close to home. Others are attracted to your open friendliness on Saturday. You have a variety of social invitations to choose from on Sunday.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Virgos and Scorpios will be drawn to you this weekend. On Saturday, you have an emotional breakthrough with your partner. Make travel plans for the future on Sunday.

For Saturday, November 7, 1987

Mars (energy) favors Saturn (structure). Well-timed actions carry you to the heights. Approach life as if you were an architect and build your plans brick by brick. Moon in Gemini still prevails. You still have time to escape from the city if you get stir-crazy. Or bury your nose in an upbeat novel.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your optimism about life shows no bounds in the afternoon. Your partner riles you up a bit, but you can handle it. Work out business agreements peacefully.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). With Venus in Sagittarius, your planetary ruler, you've been in a sportive mood lately. It's time to take larger risks in life; use your influence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You're feeling inner and outer harmony. Keep your channels of communication open. Try to narrow down your interests rather than scatter them.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You feel like you have to fight for your security. Domestic problems are coming to a head. An indirect approach helps you get your way; be subtle.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You may need someone to talk to, just to blow off a bit of steam. Try to find an interesting mental diversion. You may have to deal with someone else's anger.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Expenditures are up, but you may not be able to avoid them. You'll accomplish more if you slow your pace a bit. Try to get your partner to communicate freely.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You radiate energy and ambition. Promote one of your creative ideas. If you believe in yourself, others will cheer you on to success. Money flows through your fingers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You can be a hit socially. Keep working on projects until you finish them. Let others take care of their own responsibilities as much as possible; stay free.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Try to get caught up on your sleep. Your partner should be convinced before you go ahead by your own. It may take you a long time to verbalize your feelings.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You continue to be in demand socially. It will be easier today to get over a broken relationship. One of your friends will come through in a pinch. Be loyal.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You get last-minute help when you really need it. You may be thinking of going into a new profession. Keep up to date in your letter writing. Speak freely.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Give what you know people need: praise. The climate becomes more positive in your love life. Honesty brings you closer to your friends. Phone calls are eventful.

WEEKEND LOVE REPORT: Moon in Gemini will live you up, like a good tonic. So shake the cobwebs out of your hair, put on a smile and be willing to communicate; you may discover something new, both about yourself and the person sitting across from you at the breakfast table. Besides scrambled eggs, what you need more than anything is to air your views. If you've been holding back on some of your delicious stories, you now get a chance to try them out. Dust off your witty repartee and pull a practical joke or two. The picture on Saturday is similar, as moon in Gemini continues. A change of scenery is always a good idea with the moon here. It doesn't matter what your destination is. The important thing is to press down the accelerator pedal and go! If you're the non-verbal type, then try to open up; the future of your love life may depend on it. When striking up a conversation with someone new, keep things light at first. Get to know the person better before you start telling them about your recent divorce or abdominal surgery. Even on Sunday, the moon is in jack-rabbit Gemini. The afternoon hours are fine for enjoying a delicious brunch with friends or viewing an action-packed movie. Stay in motion throughout the weekend; there's more to life than being a couch potato and watching TV!

COUPLE OF THE WEEKEND: While Mars and Saturn are on good terms, Aries and Capricorn will find comfort in the arms of each other. This relationship has business possibilities, too, as long as the partners don't vie for power. Aries can depend on Capricorn; and Capricorn restrains the Aries impulsiveness.

An atypical prep reunion

When one graduates from high school everyone always agrees that in five years or sooner you and your friends would meet for a semi-formal reunion. This weekend I had the opportunity to see and visit with two classmates in a place that none of us would have planned to even visit, much less meet.

University of Miami standouts Michael Irvin and Greg Cox attended high school with myself at St. Thomas Aquinas High School (STA) in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. Saturday the Hurricanes traveled to Greenville, N.C. to face the Pirates of East Carolina, so I followed them with the hope of seeing my buddies.

Thanks to some serious "brown nosing" I was able to receive press passes for the contest and permission to visit the lockers after the game. Sitting in the press box at Ficklen Stadium, watching the teams warm-up reminded me of the muggy Friday nights in Ft. Lauderdale watching St. Thomas prepare for an important game. Seeing numbers 47 (Irvin) and 25 (Cox) run through pre-game drills brought back the fondest thoughts.

In 1984 Irvin and Cox both had types of seasons one could only dream about. Irvin, a wide receiver, caught 59 passes for 987 yards and 12 touchdowns in his senior season. That year, Irvin received All-State and All-American honors. His teammate Cox had an equally impressive year. He connected on 27 of 28 extra points and was accurate on 10 field goals, seven of them being longer than 35 yards.

Like Irvin, he was a member of the All-State, Parade All-American teams, and was selected Offensive Player-of-the-Year in Broward County.

Against ECU the 'Canes counted on the talents of my schoolmates to defeat the Pirates, 41-3. Irvin had four receptions for 38 yards. Cox's contribution on the afternoon was five extra points and two field goals. One of Cox's field goals was from 52 yards, a career best for the place kicker.

In the visitor's lockerroom I was able to catch up with Irvin before the rest of the media arrived. As I approached him he started as if he seen something he wasn't supposed to see. When I introduced myself, he acknowledged me just seeming to agree for the sake of conversation. I began to talk about St. Thomas and mutual classes and teachers that we both had. Everything began to click and we talked as if we were in the hallways at school.

When I ask what it felt like going from local high school star to eventual NFL draftpick, "It is a long ways," said Irvin. "I believe it is like the saying 'being in the right place at the right time.'"

"My whole career has been based on luck. It seems as if I have always been fortunate enough to be the right person."

Next we proceeded to discuss what St. Thomas has done for his collegiate career.

"It has given me the chance to meet many people and communicate on a more personal level. Most importantly it has strengthened my academic background."

By now, the aggressive newshounds had appeared and my time with Mike was waning. I congratulated him on his success and wished him luck with the rest of the season.

By now I was able to locate Cox before I was able to speak he yelled out, "Curt." We said the standard hellos and then began to "BS" each other about all the stupid things we use to do in Spanish class.

A Miami Herald reporter and a Miami television station crew pushed their way through and began throwing question at Cox concerning his career best field goal.

Throughout the entire interview with the Miami correspondents Greg stood next to me and continued to answer the questions they asked in my direction.

Once again I questioned the ex-Raider on the education and athletic training he experienced at STA. "I don't know," Cox admitted. "Coach (George) Smith (head football coach) taught me everything about winning. But most importantly I found out what it meant to have friends that you could count on."

The day was perfect for a reunion, my team won and my friends were winners on and off the field.

I will remember Cox's last statement each time I see him play on television. It is one statement that summarizes how comradarie exists between us as classmates even after four years. "See you in Lauderdale this summer, we'll go to the beach sometime."

Take that

Junior, Lisa Mills slams a set from Kim Jones against East Carolina. The Lady Seahawks defeated the Lady Pirates in three games boosting it's record to, 22-9. UNCW prepares for the CAA conference tourney at ECU by ending it's home schedule Thursday against St. Andrews.

Youth figures as key to the future of the UNCW swim teams

From staff reports

Youth figures to play a prominent role in the outcome of this year's swimming fortunes at UNC Wilmington, according to 11-year coach Dave Allen.

Allen, who started the swimming program at UNCW, directed the men's and women's teams to fourth and sixth place finishes respectively in the 1986-87 Colonial Athletic Association's Swimming and Diving Championships. He believes the contributions of several newcomers should bolster the Seahawks this season.

"I'm optimistic at this point," said Allen. "We've got some depth and we look fairly solid as long as we don't get hit with any injuries. I think we've got some quality people."

The men's team posted a 6-4 record one year ago, marking the eighth winning season in the past nine years for Coach Allen's men. The midway through the season, and closed out the campaign with victories over William and Mary and UNC Charlotte.

Allen says the biggest difference is this year's team is numbers.

"We're going to be too deep in mostly all of the events and that's going to give us good balance," he said. "We have a lot of people, but we need some big improvements in the young swimmers. This particular recruiting class could be a very good one."

Allen will anchor the men's team around a trio of senior returnees-Don Hosier, Scott Stokes and Doug Schultz. Sophomore, Yarko Folyn and junior, Keith Hawley should also contribute.

Hosier, a hometown product, turned in team bests in four events in 1986-87. He paced the Seahawks in the 50 Freestyle (22:80), 200 Butterfly (1:52:39), 200 Individual Medley (1:57:30) and 400 Individual Medley (4:07:60).

Stokes is the team's best freestyler. The Sterling Heights, Mich., swimmer is the two-time defending CAA champion in the mile and appears primed for his final year. "Scott has been a leader in all phases of the program," said Allen. "He's been a real solid and steady performer. He's the kind of athlete you like to have."

Schulz also developed into a top-flight swimmer last season. He is the club's top hope in the Breast and IM events.

Allen said, "Doug came on last year and improved greatly. I look for a big year from him. We will depend on him for leadership and to guide the new people."

Seven freshmen are expected to give Allen the best women's team in recent years. The team's strengths will be the Breaststroke, Butterfly, Sprint Freestyle and Diving events.

"Our women will be the most improved," said Allen. "We've got some quality individuals. This could be the best women's team since the program was started here at UNCW."

Junior, Marti Mucci and sophomore, Laura Spanjer are the headlines on the young club. Mucci will compete in the freestyle and butterfly events while Spanjer's specialties are the butterfly and backstroke.

"Marti had a great first year with us. She was the first woman to qualify for the Eastern Championships. Her time drops were sensational and I look for her to continue in the same direction."

Spanjer, meanwhile, had the team's best time in the 100 Butterfly with a 6:07 clocking in the CAA meet.

The women's team will also get points from returning diver Mary Beth Mills.

"I think we could give some teams some trouble," Allen added. "Our women should move up in the standings provided the young swimmers come along."

Ten regular season meets and three post-season events are on the 1987-88 schedule. The CAA Championships will be staged at the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, MD, in February.

Spikers third at JMU Inv.

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Harrisonburg, VA. - The UNC Wilmington Lady Seahawk volleyball squad placed third in the James Madison Invitational Volleyball Tournament this weekend. James Madison won the tournament.

The Lady Dukes of JMU defeated UNCW Saturday, 15-3, 15-2, 15-12, before the Lady Seahawks came back to take the day's second match over state-rival Appalachian State University, 15-11, 15-9, 15-13.

In Sunday's action, Wright State defeated the Lady Seahawks 15-11, 15-4, 15-7 prior to UNCW winning the third-place match over Loyola by scores of 15-6, 15-7, 15-7.

The 2-2 tournament record improved the Lady Seahawk's record to 22-9 overall, while UNCW remains 3-2 in the Colonial Athletic Association since the JMU match did not count in the league standings.

Sophomore hitter Yvonne Holan was named to the All-Tournament team, the second such honor she has received in the last two weeks. Holan was an All-Tournament selection in the UNCW Invitational two weekends ago.

The Lady Seahawks play host to St. Andrews College Thursday in their last home match of the 1987 season. UNCW defeated the Laurinburg, N.C.-based team in three straight games last Thursday for their 20th win.

UNCW will close their season November 13-14 at the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament at Minges Coliseum on the campus of East Carolina University in Greenville, N.C.

Lady Linksters 9th at Tiger/Tide

From staff reports

South Florida captured the 1987 Tiger/Tide Ladies Invitational Collegiate Golf Tournament in Dothan, Ala. this weekend. USF finished two strokes ahead of runner-up Florida State, with a three-day total of 937.

UNC Wilmington, behind Paige Cribb's 12th-place finish, finished tied for ninth with Mississippi at 987 in the 16-school event. Sandy Chester (246 total), Laura Covington (252), Nina Van Drumpt (259) and Christina Jaskolski (263) were the other UNCW finishers.

The Tiger/Tide Tournament, hosted by the University of Alabama and Auburn University, was the last stop on the fall schedule for Head coach Lea Dudley's Lady Swingers before they hit the links again in the spring.

Booters win their season finale

From staff reports

The UNC Wilmington soccer team closed their 1987 season on a high note, defeating Francis Marion, 2-1, in college action last Tuesday.

Senior Chris Conway, playing in his last game as a Seahawk, scored the first UNCW goal, before Tim Langmeyer gave the Seahawk booters a 2-0 advantage with his second score of the year. Both goals came unassisted.

The win improved UNCW's record to 7-8-1 overall. The Seahawks finished fifth with a record of 2-4-1.

Denis Hamlett, a freshman, led UNCW in scoring with seven goals. Junior striker David Cresswell was the second most productive Seahawk scorer with four goals and an assist.

Senior Donnie Lewis also closed out his UNCW career with a superb 1.5 goals allowed average and four shutouts.

Other UNCW seniors are Rob Lill (1 goal and 3 assists) and Steve Alnutt, a 12 game starter.

THE STUDENT NEWSPAPER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AT WILMINGTON

November 11, 1987

New dorm, more parking discussed here

By Susie Witkege
Staff Writer

The Student Affairs Committee of the UNCW Board of Trustees met November 4 to discuss plans for new residence halls, residence hall recreation extension plans, UNCW commuter students, and the Chancellor's AIDS Advisory Committee.

The new residence plans include a four-hundred student capacity apartment complex near Hall '85. There are also plans to expand the Residence Life Activity Center. This expansion includes a second floor equipped with three sectioned meeting rooms, a kitchen and a storage room. In order to accommodate these facilities, Parking Lot S will be expanded.

Seventy-five percent of UNCW students are commuters, and twenty-five percent of those students are non-traditional students.

The committee discussed what programs and services should be provided for these students.

Saturday classes were discussed as an option that would attract many commuters and non-traditional students who work during the week and are unable to attend weekly classes. They also discussed the option of having a common meeting place for studying and conversing on campus for non-traditional students.

Educational programs on AIDS are being put together by Chancellor William Wagoner's AIDS Advisory Committee. The committee, formed in the spring of '86, is composed of staff, students and faculty. Last year the main objective of the committee was to explore the definition of AIDS. Their main concern now is to educate the community of the prevention of the disease and what to do if a student, faculty member, employee or staff member is known to have contracted the disease.

The committee has put together an Institutional Policy which is currently on Chancellor Wagoner's desk to be approved. This policy states where the University now stands on the issue and what they would like to do in the future.

The committee is discussing whether or not students should be excluded from the campus if they have AIDS, and how might it be dealt with in confidence if they do remain on campus. The committee is also discussing what programs and services should be available to these students and also the precautions that should be used dealing with body fluids and secretions in work and school settings on campus.

The Chancellor's Committee has recommended that in dealing with an AIDS victim on campus, any person who is infected with AIDS or AIDS related virus should not be excluded from University enrollment, employment or activities unless they are medically advised not to for the welfare of the individual or the University community.

Health fair well attended

On November 4, UNCW learned more about health problems from Health Fair '87. The event was sponsored by the Health and Wellness Center along with the office of Health Promotion.

This event has been held in the past, but this year seemed to draw a great interest with added events and exhibits. Deborah Haywood of the Health Promotion office played a big part in organizing the fair. She was very pleased with the student response to this year's celebration. Ms. Haywood greatly appreciated the facilities encouragement of students to attend and get involved. She also commented on how satisfied she was with the music provided by WLOZ.

The physical dimension section was very popular. People enjoyed taste testing the various foods prepared. There was a continual line for the cholesterol check, which may be offered on different occasions this year.

Dr. McDaniel, a dentist from the New Hanover County Health Dept, did some screening of students, and reported being concerned with the number who use smokeless tobacco. Anyone using smokeless tobacco should be concerned with health problems it may cause.

Another popular exhibit was Sally Hart's hand and shoulder massages, and Ed Pickett drew a large crowd with his yoga demonstrations.

The Spiritual Area was very successful with just as successful drawings. Students were given a piece of cloth and asked to draw what was meaningful in their lives within a circle. Ms. Haywood commented, "It seemed to be lots of fun for people because many sat for 30 minutes or longer working on the drawings."

Ms. Haywood felt the social environmental section was overall the most popular. She commented, "the students liked talking about matters relating to sexual health." The demonstrations and exhibits in this area were very informative and gave students a chance to learn about important health concerns.

This year's Health fair was very well-planned, interesting, and informative. Hopefully, next year's will be just as successful, with even more new exhibits.

Exec. sessions anger some

By David King
Staff Writer

An Executive session of the Senate had many members outraged at Monday night's Student Government meeting.

A total of 10 senate members, almost one-third of the senate, were not allowed to enter after an immediate call for a secret Executive session occurred.

The late senators were not allowed entrance until the Executive session was over. This left 10 members outside and uninformed: Wally Newman, Brian Holler, Fran Slater, Doug Earls, Debbie Faber, Kris Solomon, Roger Smith, Gina Mathis, Sibyl King and Phyllis Bowie.

Fran Slater, sophomore class senator, felt the senate meeting was purposely called inordinately early to keep certain senators out of the session.

The Senate meeting was called to order at approximately 6 p.m., three to five minutes earlier than normal. Altogether, 30 minutes were spent in Executive session.

Upon admittance to the regular meeting, the 10 members expressed their anger at being excluded, and debated calling an additional executive session to obtain a synopsis of the first session.

The body voted to return to executive session and spent an additional 35 minutes there before reconvening. The two sessions combined took more than an hour.

During the Vice President's report, Karla Austin expressed her disappointment with the whole issue, and urged members to meet promptly at 6 p.m.

Later in the meeting Chief Justice Geoffrey Moore stated that many members are ignorant regarding constitutional matters. Moore suggested that members who did not know exactly what an executive session consists of to find out.

Senator Jeff Silverman concluded the meeting by expressing that members are equally unfamiliar with parliamentary procedure, stating that "Senators were encouraged to take initiative to learn about these instead of taking anyone's word for it."

Spring admissions closed; School is overflowing

By Barry Bryan
Staff writer

There were 6549 students enrolled this year at UNCW, an increase of over 500 from last year. This increase was due to more incoming freshmen than the University was prepared for.

Assistant Vice Chancellor David Miller explains the reason: Only a certain percentage of those accepted are expected to enroll. This past year, that didn't hold true and actual enrollment exceeded the percentage.

The University went well over budget trying to accommodate the unanticipated students. For example, more freshman composition classes had to be created in the English Department, requiring more professors. Part-time people possessing the credentials to teach were hired until new professors could be found.

In addition, the efficiency of the college is affected by such an unexpectedly large number of people. Larger and later class have to be formed, which limits the teaching methods of professors and affects the students' ease of learning.

To help ease the situation, the University will accept no new students for Spring semester. The minimum SAT score for acceptance to the college will also be raised.

Living conditions are another factor to be considered. Dorm rooms had to house 3 or 4 people in some cases due to the abundance of students and it is becoming increasingly difficult to get any kind of on-campus housing.

Will this continue? According to Mr. Charles Maimone, Dean of Residence Life, it could be even more severe next year. The waiting list for rooms is always long and incoming freshmen will have claimed all their assigned rooms by the end of this year.

To ease the strain, new buildings will be built to house 400 students. Construction begins in January and will finish in time for housing students in the fall of 1989.

Campus security has also suffered from the increased number of students. Keeping track of such a large campus population is difficult for security. In particular, knowing who is and isn't a student creates problems. Night

Condom machines set up as STD cases multiply

By Carla Garrison,
Staff Writer

It's well into the 80's and some people have come to call this the age of AIDS. Others say free-wheeling sex went out with the 60's; obviously, it has not. Sexually transmitted diseases like chlamydia, gonorrhea, genital warts, and herpes are still flourishing.

In 1985 chlamydia was named the most common venereal disease in the U.S. The Centers for Disease Control reported that up to 10% of all college students are afflicted with disease, and 3 to 10 million people are infected each year. Last year 78 cases of chlamydia and 14 cases of gonorrhea were treated by the Student Health and Wellness Center. That number does not consider those who sought help elsewhere or went untreated. Chlamydia, similar to gonorrhea, has very mild symptoms, but if left untreated can cause serious problems for women, in particular.

Herpes is another major disease, yet only 71 cases of this were treated here on campus last year. Unlike chlamydia, lice and warts, herpes is a lifetime thing, never going away completely. It can be controlled and treated, but certain foods or stress can cause flare ups at any time. The risk of contraction for the unborn children of women infected with herpes presents another problem.

These serious diseases can cause major health complications in addition to the pain of social stigma. People are extremely uninformed about social diseases and therefore greatly jeopardize themselves and their partners.

There are problems involved in raising public response:

1) Sexual activity has increased over the years and there has been little reduction even after the public was made aware AIDS.

2) Often, people are unaware of having contracted a disease and do not have them treated.

3) Those who do find out they are infected do not inform partners.

4) Some symptoms can go unnoticed and therefore spread on throughout the body of the carrier as well as to any partners.

People easily disregard the threat of social disease as if it does not really exist. Another misconception is believing that every partner is going to divulge his or her sexual past. It is now known that in having sex with someone, you are essentially having sexual contact with all their present and past sexual partners.

Announcements and events

The National Undersea Research Program of UNC-Wilmington will demonstrate their new submersible camera and vehicle, the Super Phantom, in the Shark tank at the North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher on Saturday, November 21, 1987, from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. The Super Phantom was manufactured by Deep Ocean Engineering, owned by Sylvia Earle and her husband, Graham Hawkes. Lance Horn and Ken Johns of the NURP will demonstrate the versatility of the equipment. The Super Phantom has already been involved in ocean research in Bermuda, the De Soto Canyon of the Gulf of Mexico, the Grand Cayman Islands, and during Marine Expo '87. The demonstration is free and open to

The second annual Seahawk Basketball Banquet will be held Thursday, November 12, at 7:30 p.m., at the Hilton. Admission is $8. For tickets or information call 3232.

The student affairs division, support staff development committee will sponsor a workshop on the early detection of breast cancer November 13 at 11 a.m. in UU-100. Dr. Carol Pilgrim, assistant professor of psychology, will be the speaker.

The number of premature deaths due to smoking in the U.S. is the equivalent of 920 fully loaded 747 jumbo jets crashing every year—350,000 deaths each year. (The Wellness Diary)

The North Carolina Symphony will conduct a concert Thursday, November 12, at 8 p.m., in Kenan Auditorium. General admission is $12. For tickets call Doug Swink at 3442.

Mike Pressley, student worker in the hardware support facility of the office of information systems, has been hired to work fulltime as an electronics technician II.

An "Introductory Fish Printing Workshop" will be held at 2:00 p.m. on Tuesday, November 17, 1987, at the North Carolina Aquarium at Fort Fisher. Registration is required, call 458-8257.

Friday, November 6th, The American Marketing Association (AMA) held a cookout at Hugh Macrae Park welcoming this semester's new members. The AMA is looking forward to having these new members and feels that this will be one of the most productive years ever.

With increasing membership and participation, the AMA is on its way to becoming a leading group on campus. The AMA is run and lead by students. If you feel that you are a leader, seek more information on this organization

WILMINGTON—In recognition of Geography Awareness Week, November 15-21, The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will join local schools in activities that promote the importance of improving geographic skills. The week, declared by a Joint Resolution of the U.S. Congress and signed by President Reagan, recognizes the importance of increased geographic instruction in the nation's schools.

Some of the events include a t-shirt contest in which students from local schools will create designs using the Geographic Awareness theme. The winner of the contest will receive an atlas from National Geographic and will have his or her design used for Geography Awareness t-shirts. Other events include a UNCW Geography club world dinner, featuring dishes from different lands, and a recognition from the Governor for the North Carolina teachers who attended National Geographic workshops this past summer.

"We have many professionals and community leaders who are trying to promote geography in Wilmington as well as throughout the state," said Dr. Frank Ainsley, associate professor of Earth Sciences at UNCW. "The main purpose of the week is to try and make students as well as others more aware of geography education."

The Department of City and Regional Planning at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will sponsor a career forum focusing on joint degrees programs Friday, Nov. 13.

The free, public program is open to both graduate and undergraduate students from colleges and universities statewide.

At 12:30 p.m., an informational session will examine opportunities for graduate students with combined master's degrees in planning and business administration in 17 Carroll Hall.

Nancy Stroud, a partner with the Boca Raton, Fla., firm of Burke, Bosselman and Weaver, will speak at 3 p.m. on combining a master's degree in planning and a law degree. She will be in 1 Van Hecke-Wittach Hall, home of the School of Law at UNC.

A student-faculty reception will end the day's events at 4:30 p.m. in the Dialectic and Philanthropic Society Lounge in New East.

For more information, call (919) 962-3983 or 966-1731.

and consider joining! Meetings are held every other week from 6-7 p.m. in Bear Hall. There are weekly speakers who discuss topics such as resume writing and entrepreneurship. Remember, joining the American Marketing Association does more than just put another line on your resume, it gives you valuable experience. The AMA needs leaders to remain successful and you may be the next one. Contact Dr. Anderson in the Marketing Department for more information, 395-3814.

The Museum of World Cultures at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will hold a benefit auction featuring antiques and collectibles from around the world beginning at 7:30 p.m., Saturday, Nov. 14, in the Ramada Inn on Market Street. Articles for sale may be previewed that day between 2 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

Auctioneer will be James Kennedy of Kennedy Antiques at Bright Leaf Square in Durham.

Approximately 200 items will be auctioned that evening, including a Russian icon, Japanese prints, cut glass perfume and antique bottles, a handwoven Ecuadorian Indian sweater, and old jewelry.

Those shopping early for Christmas might be interested in the German nutcracker, the model ship or some of the dolls, as well as old and new piano rolls.

Chairing the event for the Museum of World Cultures is Zida Kibler of Shri Lote, member of the board of directors of the museum. This is the second auction held to benefit the museum, and proceeds will go toward purchasing additional display cases and adding more artifacts to the collection.

All items on sale are being donated to the Museum of World Cultures. Patrons may purchase tickets for a drawing for a door prize.

Refreshments will be available. Admission to the auction is free. UNCW Ambassadors will be assisting during the evening.

On the night before "The Night Before Christmas", the Community Arts Center will be transformed into a cozy sitting room to present its first annual storytelling festival, "A CHRISTMAS TELLING".

The entire family is invited to celebrate the spirit of Love, Joy and Peace at the fireplace as storytellers, dancers and carolers bring alive the familiar (and not-so-familiar) folktales and songs heard around the world during this special time of year.

So plan to enjoy this wonderful family-oriented Christmas program and share the spirit of the holiday season with your friends.

For more information contact Lloyd Wilson (762-2881) or John Golden (395-2014) or the Community Arts Center (341-7860).

Art Quest Gallery located on Grace Street will have a miniature and small works display of paintings, drawings and photographs on exhibit and for sale throughout November and December.

UNCW's Campus Ministry will be sponsoring events in recognition of World Hunger Week from November 16-20. Two main events are planned: A Hunger Walk on Wednesday, Nov. 18 and a Miss-A-Meal project for Thursday, Nov. 19.

Walkers for the Hunger Walk will meet at the postal entrance of the University Union and make two loops on the roads around the campus to complete the five-mile walk.

Students will be signed up for the Miss-A-Meal in the cafeteria during lunch and dinner on Tuesday, and lunch on Wednesday to skip lunch on Thursday.

The money raised from the events will be sent to CROP and Oxfam, two world-wide hunger relief organizations. Anyone wishing to participate should contact Bob Haywood at 799-1160 or Father Al Dash at 799-7167.

Dean Kaylor presents certificate

The CEO of Remington, Mr. Victor Kiam, was the first Keynote Address Speaker for the Cameron School of Business Administration's Business Week. Remington Apparel has been extremely helpful and cooperative in briefing Production Management Majors on the "real world" experiences and examples of production management opportunities and problems in the highly competitive apparel industry.

The certificate was awarded for the many plant tours afforded UNCW's business students over the past decade. Shown below are students of Dr. Lee M. Sherman's Production Management class (BUS 357) observing production activities in an industrial environment.

Students are exposed to examples of both labor intensive and capital intensive types of industries. Other tours this semester included Siemens ITE and General Electric's Aircraft Parts Business Group.

Bonnie Howard recognized for updating registration

Bonnie Howard, assistant to the Registrar and Computer Systems Coordinator at UNCW, has been recognized as the University's nominee for the Governor's Award for Excellence. She was honored with a plaque from Chancellor William Wagoner on September 16.

Howard began her duties in the spring of 1984 and has been commended for her significant work in converting the manual registration system to the present computerized system.

The conversion challenged her expertise in working with people, her ability to interpret computer applications and required her to work overtime, at night, and on weekends. Her work also required endless training sessions with Information Associates computer software personnel, volumes of reading and training office staff and other university personnel.

As a result of Howard's hard work, the first UNCW students were registered on the new system in the summer of 1985. Howard has also been involved as a member of the UNCW computerized Student Information Project team, served as moderator on a panel for the public institutions attending the Student Users Conference in New Orleans, and was appointed to a two year term on the Student Records Advisor Board of Information Associates Student Information System Users.

Bonnie Howard was recently recognized for her contribution to updating the registration process. She is shown here with Chancellor William Wagoner. (UNCW News)

Level of business activity increases in N. Carolina

The level of business activity in North Carolina increased 0.1 percent in September, according to the First Wachovia Business Index.

Over the past year, the Index has gained 4.4 percent.

The rise in the Index for the month was due primarily to a drop of 1.2 percent in initial claims for unemployment insurance as well as gains in nonagricultural and manufacturing employment.

Residential building permits declined, while the average manufacturing workweek remained unchanged.

"The basic momentum of the recent past should keep the state's economy growing on balance in coming months, despite the sharp correction in the stock market," said John G. Medlin Jr., chief executive officer of First Wachovia.

Nonagricultural employment in North Carolina rose 0.5 percent in September. For the nation as a whole, it was up 0.1 percent. Over the past 12 months, nonagricultural employment in the state has grown 3.7 percent, while nationally it has increased 2.4 percent.

Manufacturing employment in the state rose 0.4 percent for the month. Higher employment was reported in the furniture, lumber, textile, apparel, food processing, chemical and electrical and non-electrical machinery sectors.

Employment in the nonmanufacturing sector registered a gain of 0.5 percent. Employment was higher in trade and services but was lower in the government and construction sectors.

The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for North Carolina was 4.0 percent in September, down 0.3 percentage point from August. The national rate was 5.9 percent, 0.1 percentage point lower than August.

The First Wachovia North Carolina Business Index measures the level of economic activity in North Carolina on a monthly basis. Using 1976 as a base of 100, it reflects indicators of employment, industrial production and construction activity in the state's economy. Data are adjusted to smooth the effects of historical seasonal factors and certain statistical aberrations.

Lindquist Receives Fulbright Grant

The Seahawk

November 11, 1987

(UNCW NEWS)—Dr. David G. Lindquist, professor of biology at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, has been awarded a Fulbright grant to Austria in 1988, the Board of Foreign Scholarships and the United States Information Agency (USIA) announced recently.

The purpose of the four-month summer study, to be carried out between May 1 and Aug. 30, is to collaborate with two Austrian researchers at the Zoological Institute, University of Salzburg. The project involves an investigation of blennies, a group of small reef fishes located in the Adriatic Sea near the Yugoslavian town of Rovinj.

A two to three week study will be carried out at the field site using standard skin and scuba diving observations of the animals in their natural habitat. The remainder of the study will be conducted at the Zoological Institute in Salzburg.

The laboratory work will involve a detailed examination of the diets and the structure and function of the jaws and teeth of fish specimens returned from the Adriatic. The overall goal of the research is to demonstrate that the diets in each species reflect the individual size, the sex and the details of the jaw and tooth structure.

The Fulbright award permits Lindquist to continue work he had previously done in Austria in 1985. Lindquist worked in 1985 with the same two Austrian scientists with whom he will collaborate in 1988. The 1985 trip was partially funded by a UNCW Faculty Research and Development Fund award.

Lindquist's grant marks the fifth Fulbright Scholarship to be awarded to members of the UNCW Biological Sciences Department in the last eight years. M. Carlotu Baca, director of the Office of Academic and University Liaison with the Fulbright Scholar Program, called that number of Fulbright awards to a department of 26 faculty members a "quite impressive" achievement.

"This indicates to me that the department recognizes the value of this kind of experience, and is willing to let people go abroad and take advantage of the opportunities," she said. "It is also indicative of an internationally savvy faculty in the department."

Other Fulbright Scholars in the UNCW biology department include Professor Charles M. Fugler, who has twice held Fulbrights, the first in 1981-82 to do research in Bolivia, and the second from October 1985-August 1986 to work in Yaounde, Cameroon. Professor Robert Y. George spent September through December 1984 at the University of India of Madras conducting Fulbright sponsored research. Professor Donald F. Kapraun spent the summer of 1980 investigating benthic marine algae in Oslo, Norway, on a Fulbright award.

The UNCW history department also has two Fulbright recipients, Dr. William H. Schneider, associate professor of history, who conducted research in France, the United Kingdom and West Germany during the summer of 1987, and Dr. Carole Fink, who went to Israel in 1982 through a Fulbright Seminar Award.

Lindquist is one of approximately 1,000 U.S. faculty researchers being sent abroad for the 1987-88 academic year under the Fulbright exchange program. Established in 1946 under Congressional legislation introduced by former Sen. J. William Fulbright of Arkansas, the program is designed "to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and the people of other countries."

Approximately 7,000 grants are awarded each year to U.S. students, teachers, and scholars enabling them to study, teach and conduct research abroad. The grants are also awarded to foreign nationals wishing to engage in similar activities within the United States. Individuals are selected on the basis of academic and professional qualifications plus their ability and willingness to share ideas and experiences with people of diverse cultures.

More than 155,000 "Fulbrighters," over $4,000 from the U.S. and 101,000 from abroad, have participated in the program since it began 40 years ago. The program is administered by the U.S. Information Agency under policy guidelines established by the presidentially-appointed Board of Foreign Scholarships and in cooperation with a number of private organizations. Scholarships are awarded through open competition, with final selections made by the Board of Foreign Scholarships. Twenty-seven foreign governments share in the funding of these exchanges.

The U.S. Information Agency is an independent agency within the executive branch whose mission is to inform other nations about American society and to provide opportunities for Americans to learn about the rest of the world.

Loan defaults

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS) —

Students who go to colleges where the student loan default rate is high may be cut off from Guaranteed Student Loans in the future, if a bill introduced in Congress last week becomes law.

The Reagan administration introduced a bill that would drop colleges that don't pursue defaulters hard enough from the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program.

Efforts ranging from ticketing defaulters' cars to withholding income tax refunds have not helped lower the number of defaulters from certain campuses, explained William Kristol of the U.S. Dept. of Education.

"It really is a disgrace, schools with 50, 60 or 70 percent default rates," he said.

The department's figures show that about 3,000 of the 8,000 schools participating in the program have a default rate of more than 20 percent.

More than half the students in college today, of course, get some kind of financial aid, and the GSL program is the most pervasive kind.

Moreover, without GSL funds, many schools—particularly private trade or vocational institutions—would have to close, as did the 13 campus Adelphi Institutes when its GSL funding was suspended earlier this fall.

The trade school will announce recommendations for lowering the default rates by their students soon, Christopher Davis of the National Association of Trade and Technical Schools said in response to the bill's introduction Oct. 20.

"The concern is that the students who would be hurt the most are the ones who have the least access to education," said a House Education Committee staff member.

The schools with the highest default rates besides the private trade schools are community colleges and predominantly black institutions.

Condom Machine

Surgeon General Koop and other health officials report that aside from abstinence, the condom is the safest bet. For some reason people think condoms are "uncool." Men often seem to think using a condom somehow threatens their virility. Women have aversions to them, also.

So maybe it is time to consider saving sex for a meaningful relationship. Take time and get to know a potential partner well enough to discuss the facts and then still take precautions. Do not feel safe in assuming that no one else is sharing your partner at the present time.

Sex is a serious subject and was meant to be shared by people who truly care for each other. Consider whether a few seconds of pleasure is worth the pain and embarrassment of dealing with chlamydia or much worse for a lifetime.

If you are sexually active, take time to learn about STDs, your body and the warning signs, and pick partners carefully. The student Health and Wellness Center is committed to educating students about their bodies and how to take care of them. Information in the form of films and pamphlets are always available. Each room at the center contains a folder with material on health matters from sprains to common colds. They have even placed condom machines in the bathrooms at the health center.

In this day and age, there is no excuse for ignorance in health related matters. Please get informed!

Admissions

receptionists have difficulties trying to keep watch on people entering and leaving a building, and stricter rules may be required to keep order.

A more positive aspect of the overcrowding is that it shows UNCW must be gaining popularity. Many feel that with the new academic admissions standards, UNCW will ranking beside the state's best universities in applications within the next few years, and the pressure will be on the University to accept the caliber of student who will be applying.

However, the popularity must be dealt with to be enjoyed. This must happen soon, because next year enrollment is expected to be roughly 6700 students.

Funeral, memorial services held for softball player

By Jefferson Weaver,
Editor in Chief

Memorial services were held at St. Matthew Lutheran Church Friday for Lisa Kay Primovic, 19, the UNCW student who was killed Nov. 2 in an auto accident near Delway, N.C., 14 miles from Clinton on Highway 421.

Primovic was the star pitcher for the Seahawks softball team, and Coach Maggie St. Ledger expressed grief at the loss of the hardworking sophomore who would have turned 20 this past Monday.

Primovic was buried Wednesday in her hometown of Powhatan, Va. outside of Richmond.

SPEAK UP AND SPEAK OUT!

The UNCW Speech and Debate (Forensics) Team is seeking members for the 1987-1988 season. The team, currently ranked 11th in the nation and 1st in North and South Carolina, participates in intercollegiate competition from schools across the country. Categories of competition include:

- **PUBLIC SPEAKING
- **ORAL INTERPRETATION/ACTING
- **DEBATE

The team travels throughout the country, from Virginia to Arizona. The activity is beneficial to any student, regardless of major, who realizes the importance of developing solid communication skills. Come and be a part of a tradition that "speaks well" of our campus.

Anyone interested in joining the squad should contact:

Frank Trimble, Director of Speech and Debate in Kenan Hall room 205 or call him at 395-3710

A Veteran's Day tribute for a special kind of hero

Once again, it's time for a holiday that most everyone forgets about in the academic community — Veteran's Day. Most of us will go to class, go home, do homework or head out for that middle of the week night on the town, and forget about the men and women who made it possible for us to do all of those things.

One of those individuals died two years ago on the Sunday before Veteran's Day. His name was Jimmy, and he was an institution in our little hometown.

I first met Jimmy when I was about seven or eight. He would shuffle up the street every day, rain or shine, to the downtown barbershop (also a thing of the past) where the old men would gather to talk about politics and fishing.

From that time until he died, Jimmy was always "86 goin' on 87". The number never fluctuated the whole time I knew him.

Jimmy was a veteran of the trenches of World War I. While on the front lines, he and his friends spotted a dirty fog moving across no man's land towards them.

It was mustard gas.

As if that weren't enough, while a coughing Jimmy and his platoon were being evacuated from the front, their ambulance train came under heavy artillery fire. The combination of destroyed lungs and the terror of the heavy barrage chased the then-young man out of his mind and back to the United States.

Jimmy was perfectly harmless; he had a dozen or more cats that sat on the front porch of his brother's home in Erwin, and the cats would sometimes become his longest friends from the war, the people he had slept with in a freezing cold ditch half full of water, the people he had eaten, drank, and liberated a French Brothel with. The only people he could remember.

The people who greeted Jimmy on the streets were rarely acknowledged with more than a faint glimmer of recognition in the yellowed and constantly bloodshot eyes. More often than not, he wouldn't see them, and he would continue shuffling along, unshaved, unattended, and dressed in the same untidy brogues and three coats — an overcoat and two dress jackets — that he always wore.

Jimmy wasn't capable of hurting anybody, and that was why so many folks got boiling mad the time he was knocked down in the barbershop.

Every town has a man — if you can call him that — who is not just a practicing alcoholic but is also a plain old mean drunk. This fellow, who shall remain nameless, was just that — a mean drunk — and more.

The auto accident which resulted in Jimmy was muttering as usual, oblivious to the world. The old men in the barbershop always spoke to him as he came, in but then went on about their business, knowing that Jimmy never really even saw them.

The drunk, however, was a different story.

The drunk, walking with the aid of two tubular steel crutches, told Jimmy to shut up. When Jimmy continued muttering to himself, the drunk began cursing and yelling at Jimmy to shut up.

Jimmy continued babbling, and got up to wander home.

The drunk struck Jimmy across the middle of the back with one of the crutches, knocking the poor old man to the floor. Old men in no better shape to fight than Jimmy jumped up to defend the harmless old guy.

The drunk hobbled out, apparently secure in his masculinity.

The old men helped Jimmy to his feet, and he wandered on home, talking of his buddies, the war, and all of their adventures. He seemed not to have noticed that he had been hit.

A few weeks after that, Jimmy was found on his front porch with his cats gathered around.

He was in his rocking chair, his frail, bony backside pushing through the already strained wicker seat. His shoelaces were untied, and a kitten was playfully batting them back and forth.

His elbows were on his knees, his old bentwood cane supporting his chin, just like always. The cancer that had slowly begun to destroy the old face was still there. His gnarled old hands, still bearing the scars from burns he received somewhere in his short military career, were wrapped around the hilt of the cane.

Someone said he was smiling. He was dead.

The funeral wasn't exactly a great media event; probably no more than twenty people, mostly family and the old men from the barbershop, attended the service.

It was held at one of the churches he always used to shuffle past on his way up town.

You're probably saying, sure, he was in World War I. So were a lot of people. Why give some special tribute to him? He was only an old man.

He may have been insane; he didn't bathe very often, and he was just another doddering old man in a town with its fair share of doddering old men.

Jimmy is gone now; his tombstone isn't a grand and glorious monument; most people have forgotten the little old man who talked to himself all the time and never took a bath.

Some of us miss Jimmy — the kids who rode their bikes past his house, kids who waved or called to him in exchange for a sideways glance and a smile.

Kids who didn't mind being mistaken for someone who died seventy years ago.

Hopefully, Jimmy is now with those friends whose ghosts he seemed to see on his front porch. They are far away, somewhere they can walk without canes or crutches, somewhere that there's no mustard gas, or artillery fire, or cruel drunks.

Somewhere with a lot of very friendly cats that appreciate attention.

Jimmy would like that.

The Moral is: It's only wrong if you admit it

Once again, the hallowed halls of Washington are ringing with the search for a new supreme court justice nominee.

Once again, that group of folks who decide that no matter who President Reagan does, he's wrong, have chased another candidate away simply because and what is he was nominated by Reagan, even more ludicrous is the fact that these holier than thou's are screaming because Doug Ginsberg actually smoked marijuana when he was in college, and again a few years after graduation.

These are the same politicians that are probably hiding a couple of DWI charges amongst the other skeletons in their closets. More than one of those pointing the pure and sinless finger have probably awakened feeling like their teeth needed a shave after this state function or that.

And a surprising number of those paragons of virtue have probably driven too fast, cheated on their wives/husbands, used their power to 'fix' a traffic violation, cheated on their taxes, snorted cocaine and committed other various and sundry offenses that their voters would not take lightly. God only knows how many have smoked pot on a more than 'recreational' basis.

An informal poll done by a TV network this weekend showed that sixty percent - sixty percent, mind you - didn't see why those isolated acts of 'reckless abandon' affected the nominee's candidacy. A full twenty percent of those polled have probably committed the same offense.

The senators and media chase away a man because he smoked dope years ago. He never lied about it - when he was asked, he admitted to having smoked the weed.

This is the same element senate which chooses to look the other way when one of their colleagues makes a few out of line and out of place comments to a female page. An element that contains, at present, a gentleman who admitted to plagiarizing speeches from here and there.

In our University, a plageriser is reprimanded, punished or even expelled - someone charged with smoking marijuana one time is given a second chance, or at most, sentenced to some volunteer work.

But yet, a senator of the United States who admitted his theft of words is slapped on the hand and set back onto a committee to judge whether or not a man should be a supreme court justice or not.

Judge Ginsberg, in all fairness, was and is underqualified for the job of Supreme Court Justice - unless you consider the theory that an inexperienced - mind can be the most objective, having not been exposed to the politics and power plays as much as a more seasoned veteran.

Perhaps not having made a multitude of earth shaking decisions would be a point in favor of a freshman justice.

But like a lot of good men who have done nothing worse than anyone else - he was found out.

And committing a crime isn't anywhere near as bad as getting caught - or admitting the crime. — JW

Student writer comments on 'Politization'

To the editor;

In recent weeks there has been a great deal of furor in the media over the "politization" of the nomination of Judge Robert Bork to the Supreme Court. It would be naive I feel to cast aside previous nominations and the confirmation or denials as purely the carrying out of the Constitution. Above anyone else President Reagan should be aware that he himself has used the Supreme Court as a political tool.

In his first successful Presidential bid in 1980, one of Reagan's promises to the voters was to make his first appointment a woman, (a promise he kept with the appointment of Sandra O'Connor). The fact that he even brought the matter up in a Presidential race was in and of itself a politization of the Court. To think America would not consider this promise in making their decision would render it's mere mention a mammoth waste of time and an insult to the integrity of the voter.

The second opportunity for Reagan to fill a vacancy came about previous to the off-year elections of 1986. Amidst a steady diet of increasing public disenchantment with "Reaganomics," the White House feared losing the majority in the Senate they had enjoyed the first six years. The times called for a drastic move to gain the favor of the various ethnic and minority groups in the country. Reagan was convinced not to nominate Judge Bork, but instead to name Judge Antonin Scalia. It would not be fair to ignore the tremendous ability of Scalia, he is truly a fine choice for the Court under any conditions. However it is also a tremendous insult to the integrity of the Italian-Americans to presume their willingness to support a party, one that has ignored them so long, simply because one of their own was named to the Court; (I have personal experience in this area as my mother is of Italian descent).

I cannot nor will I even attempt to justify all the behavior undertaken by the many organizations opposing Judge Bork's confirmation. I will however point to the tremendous doubt that existed in the minds of the various senators. Our own Terry Sanford summed it up best stating Judge Bork's ideological swings from a socialist to a conservative. Not to be outdone by his own words, Judge Bork in his testimony during the Judiciary Committee Hearings swung his views back toward center. It was also Judge Bork who stated that no one truly understands the Ninth Amendment, (The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people). Granted that may be true, but the question requested his interpretation.

Before long Reagan will put before the Senate another candidate to fill retired Justice Powell's seat. Given the "cry-baby" attitude and confrontation politics he and his "knee-jerk special interest groups" have aimed at the Democrats in the Senate - not to mention the six Republicans who have also voted against Bork - it becomes increasingly unlikely Reagan will be able to fill this vacancy. It has been the tradition of the Senate to reserve such matters in an election year for the incoming president.

Reagan's White House Chief of Staff Howard Baker warned the President that he needed to work harder to get Bork through. Once it became apparent Reagan was not going to do so and the nomination would fall, Baker, himself a prominent senator from Tennessee for many years, warned the President to avoid infuriating the Democrats, again the President failed to heed the responsibility for the blunders of his administration, silencing his advisors as at fault. Given all that we have endured from this President and the problems his successor must now straighten-out I feel it is time we take one more look at the man who once put Bonzo to bed, and is now attempting to do the same to our future.

Biology student chastizes Seahawk coverage

Dear Editor,

I'm a little upset. Actually, I'm very upset. A few weeks ago something very important took place on the campus of U.N.C.W. It was the three day (Sept. 30-Oct. 2) Coastal Oceanography Symposium held in our Student Union. It was sponsored by U.N.C.W., Duke-U.N.C. Oceanography Consortium, North Carolina Biotechnology Center, National Undersea Research Program, North Carolina Department of Natural Resources, and U.N.C. Coordinating Committee for Marine Programs.

In attendance were Chancellor William H. Wagoner, Dean Daniel Plyler, Dr. Rita Colwell (Univ. of Maryland), Hon. Thomas Rhodes (Dept. of Natural Resources), Hon. Charlie Rose (U.S. Congress), just to mention a few, and no less than 100 other distinguished speakers and students from North Carolina and around the country.

I am a senior marine biology major, three months from graduating, and I can honestly say that Sept. 30-Oct. 2 were the most information packed and educating

Now, what am I upset about? Maybe you guessed it. Where was the Seahawk coverage? In the days following the symposium I checked the news stands for the new Seahawk to see how you covered the event. Well, out came the Seahawk and what did I find? I found two full pages of cartoons, a one-half page photo of Tom Wopat (?), one half page of horoscopes, and the usual front page headline story on the R.O.T.C. (in case you missed it, they had a nice trip to Washington D.C.). But did I find even a paragraph on the symposium? No, I didn't.

I think that is a pretty sad state. "The Student Newspaper of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington" (as you proudly call yourself) could overlook what was probably the most important coastal oceanography symposium in the United States so far this year! I am very proud to be graduating from here and, with respect to my pending degree, I take your ineptness as a personal insult.

Mr. Editor and Staff, I am challenging you to get your heads out of the sand. How about some equal space for some equality, if not none, important stories.

Ginsberg and others

The Gary Hart and Joe Biden fiascos, the assassination of Robert Bork's nomination and the regrettable revelations leading to the withdrawal of the nomination to the Supreme Court of Douglas Ginsberg are bad news for all Americans.

Maybe that is a surprising statement coming from me, but if you read on I think you will understand.

I am, of course, duly thankful that the threat of a Gary Hart or Joe Biden in the White House no longer exists.

Biden is such a ridiculous figure he was hardly ever a real threat but Hart, who is no better or worse than the rest of the socialist-inclined Democratic hopefuls, was more of a danger, because he might have gotten elected.

Ginsberg would, I believe would have been an excellent justice, but there is merit in the contention that a Supreme Court justice ought to be free from any such questionable experiences. It's too bad that is such a new idea.

Bork was subject to more untruths and distortions—and this can be substantiated—than any American in the public eye since in the 1964 television commercials implying that Barry Goldwater wanted to abolish Social Security and get the country into a major war.

But the sad thing about the pull-outs of Hart, Biden and Ginsberg and rejection of Bork are that they are due to the wrong reasons.

Political motivations and concern over these men's private lives almost eliminated any serious considerations of qualifications.

Qualifications for the judicial branch of government differ drastically from those for an elected legislator or a president.

Whether the senatorial, congressional, or presidential candidate believes in a strong defense, their strong labor policies and his or her stand on social, economic and foreign issues are proper subjects for questions.

But a nominee for a judgeship can't answer such questions, because presumably, and hopefully, his action will be based on evidence presented in court, which may or may not agree with his personal beliefs.

Sandra Day O'Connor, as fine an associate justice (so far) as ever sat on the U.S. Supreme Court, had a much more liberal record as a legislator than as a justice. This proof that she is interpreting the law, as opposed to the Warren Court policy of rewriting it.

As I said, it is obvious that some aspects of a candidate's private life can not be ignored, but any election or appointment should be based primarily on qualifications for the particular seat.—LIT

The Other Side

with Rick Cairns, columnist

Public record could use some explanation

Remember my column which basically said that Riverfest sucked? Well, some people complained that I was too negative. To prove that I'm not always negative, I've got a few positive things to say.

The first annual chili cook-off was great. All the ingredients for fun were there. Beer was everywhere, but we couldn't buy any there; I was dumb enough to assume that beer would be sold at an event sponsored by Bud Light. They sold chips instead. What's this world coming to? We could bring our own beer though, which was even better because we didn't have to drink Bud Light. Good weather, good music, good chili, thousands of people and many hippies—what more could you ask for? Nobody was selling stupid balloons. It seems that when balloons are being sold, I am not having a good time. I've got five things to say to you people who think that I'm always negative—na na na na na.

Enough of my critiquing festivals; let's get down to business. This weeks business is public records. You know, the ones you see in the Star News.

They're great fun, and a great idea. Print the names of every poor slob who gets caught doing a naughty, and we can all laugh at them.

I am appalled at the number of criminals in this city. I'm afraid to let my daughter out of the house. Crimes are being committed that I've never even heard of. I see that some loser was busted for non-support. Since when can you get busted for not wearing a jock strap? Can women without bras get busted? (No pun intended.) What about people who are caught with improper equipment? I don't even want to know what that means. It sounds too embarrassing.

Are you aware of all the thoughtless scum out there who don't wear seatbelts? All they get is a lousy slap on the wrist. We need a Barney Fife to lecture these offenders on how they are endangering no one but themselves, so buckle up Buster. I won't even talk about the slugs who are caught without insurance. Boy, that really makes my blood boil!

One jerk was busted for not only a gill net violation, but he had the gall to have his crab pots in a non-designated area. His crab pots are his own business, but keep them away from me. I know how hard they are to get rid of.

My grandpa hit the jackpot. He finally made it into the paper. Twenty MPH over the speed limit and DWI. Way to go Gramps. I guess that I won't visit him for a while; he hates when that happens.

Some horny bastard got a red light violation. Doesn't he realize how risky that is these days? Some sucker got nailed for operating a motor vehicle without financial responsibility. You can't drive unless you're in debt now! How about the fool who got it for improper backing? He must have been backing Charlie Rose. That is a crime. Some woman caught it for lane change. That's all it says—lane change??? Simple possession Passing beyond the line of scrimmage? Passing gas? They need to be more specific. A crime against nature! Now is that an offense or what? Does this get you thinking? Your imagination can have a field day of marijuana; that sounds like nothing compared to the crab pot incident. The cops arrested a guy for shooting within the city limits. They never bust DEG when they are shooting, but let Joe Average Citizen do it and they're on him like ugly on an ape.

"I don't even know what that means. It sounds too embarrassing."

One of my favorites is drunk and disorderly. They go so well together. I once had a friend busted for—get this, being drunk in a bar! Now where else should one be when he is drunk? That's like being busted for being middle class in Sears. I see that some putz was following too closely. To be caught, he must have been on a cop car's ass—real smart. I hear that some of them have bumper stickers which say: I brake for buttheads who tailgate, and I bust 'em.

I don't think that newspapers do enough to humiliate these people. How about...the pictures, and place of employment listed with previous offenses. I'd like to know if they were strip searched also. I do have an enquiring mind y'know.

A poor soul was nailed for illegal passing. This got me thinking—illegal passing of what? Passing a joint? Passing a bottle of Wild Turkey? Passing out?

with this one. When I first heard of this as a kid, I figured that it meant someone ran over a patch of daisies or something of that nature. A few years later I thought that it must be worse than that. Someone probably went into the woods and shot a deer. As I grew older I was informed that blowing a deer's brains all over the woods was not a crime—it's a sport, and guys get congratulated for it. Now if someone went into those same woods and made love to a deer (hey, some guys will do anything for a buck) there's a chance that the next time he makes love will be in the State Pen with a big of homeboy named Bubba who has teeth which resemble California raisins! Frightening, huh? Who exactly is this crime against? I would think the deer. I am sure that it would rather be laid than dead.

If you see my name in the public records, remember, whatever I did, I did it on purpose to get in the paper. I just hope it doesn't involve red light violations and crabs. I'll settle for some simple possession of marijuana.

Have some sympathy for newly detached

Someone needs to warn the multitudes about the major epidemic of post-summer depression/emotional upheaval that seems to be sweeping the planet.

Just think about it. How many friends do you have who are either on-the-rocks with their sweethearts or have broken up? In an informal poll I took one day last week (when I was depressed), nine out of ten people I talked with had friends who were falling apart—and five were falling apart themselves!

Now, who really knows what's in the air, (although I ought to warn you, gentlemen, the girls are blaming you) but a lot of people seem to have caught the "I need some time to think" bug. I consulted the resident astrologer and she confirmed an unusual heavenly alignment—that could have something to do with the situation.

Any way, the afflicted exist in mass right now, and someone you know is likely to be one of them, so have a tender heart for anyone who needs to be listened to. It can be trying, but consider this a prime time to develop friendships.

And try hard to be sympathetic....I have found that if one is not sympathetic, one can count on whatever the current crisis is happening to them also. (Sort of the same principle as "never say never"—because then it will happen).

For instance, my roomie started having BIG problems with her boyfriend—I guess he caught the bug, too—and for a long time, I was less than sympathetic. I could kick myself now because if I'd listened a little more carefully I might have been able to stave off the breakdown in my own long-distance relationship.

Although my roomie basically had to get out a basket to pick up the pieces, we are both doing much better now. And it has made us listen. Now, I'm trying to keep my ears open for other people's heartbreak stories.

So just be careful, people...this is apparently a pretty serious epidemic. But like most diseases it can be prevented—just use mature judgement (and a little bit of caring.)

Public Safety Notes...

The opportunities of law enforcement shouldn't be overlooked

Two new staff members have joined the Department of Public Safety as Police Officers during the month of November. Officer Charles Willis comes to UNC-Wilmington from the New Hanover County Sheriff's Department, where he served in the Detective Division, and Officer Richard Slater comes to us from the Town of Holly Ridge. Officer Slater had previously served as Chief of Police at Topsail Beach, N.C.

The vacancy was created by the resignation of Officer Scott Register, who left the University to go to the North Carolina State Highway Patrol. Officer Register was with the Campus Police for over four years where he was a student, a member of ROTC and participated in other activities.

Many Criminal Justice students fail to realize the career potentials with the Campus Police Departments, not only here at UNC-Wilmington but at other public and private campuses across the country.

It used to be that people who went to work for University Police Departments were often retired and wanted a job as a Night Watchman. Now we find young, energetic officers and those looking for a career change, seeking the positions as they come available. In the UNC system, the salaries for Police Officers are very competitive with most of the host cities. There are a few notable exceptions. The Charlotte Police Department, the highest paid in the State, competes vigorously with the UNC-Charlotte campus for the best qualified applicants. While on the other hand, campuses such as Pembroke State and Elizabeth City State Universities, offer candidates a higher starting salary than their municipal and county counterparts, in those particular areas. Many private Universities also offer attractive salaries and benefit programs to their Campus Police Officers.

Why do these fine young men and women choose to be Campus Police Officers? It is a question that I faced in 1976 when I left the Sheriff's Department and transferred to the UNC-Charlotte Campus Police. For me, it was a matter of economics, wanting to complete my degree and holding down a job as well. I found that I really enjoyed the environment and do not foresee myself leaving the campus environment ever again.

Motivations differ but, the officers that I have asked, like it because of the pace of the work, the variety of the people and the opportunity to deal with students.

While each campus has its share of problems in crime, there are opportunities for Campus Police officers to be educators. There are opportunities to help, to serve and to make sure that people get their lives off in the right direction, as they are away from home for the first time. Many officers like it for the wide variety of discretionary enforcement options that the Campus Police officer has over the municipal or county officer. A City Policeman or Deputy Sheriff actually has only two options, either arrest or not to arrest. On all campuses, the Campus Police have the arrest or not to arrest options, as well as, opportunities to refer offenders for minor crimes and rule violations to the appropriate Campus Judicial Officials to have the case handled there. The officers realize that young students will make mistakes and while the mistakes sometimes are technical violations of the law, there was no intent to break the spirit of the law. The Campus Judicial System certainly offers the opportunity to get someone's attention and give them the opportunity to get their act together without a lasting criminal record.

No single Police Officer can change the world but, I feel that police Officers working on college campuses have the opportunity to help direct young lives in a positive fashion much more often than do City Policemen or Deputy Sheriffs. We have the time to get involved with situations and we hopefully employ caring officers who will take the time to see the situation through to the end in the hopes that decisions are made that are the best for the University and the people involved in any given situation.

If you are at all interested in a career in Campus Law Enforcement, give me a call. We have employment opportunities available now, in the student security ranks as well as a fairly good working knowledge of the types of positions available on the various campuses across the State. You may find it an interesting career opportunity.

Dealing with mortality on a daily basis

Once more we are forced to deal with the death of a member of the University community. Lisa Primovic was a very special young lady, and most of what needs to be said or done was taken care of last week.

What we are left with, once again, is a stark reminder of how fragile life is, and how quickly our world can be turned upside down. It is usually only after midlife that persons become emotionally aware of the reality of their own death. But the death of such a vital young woman has a way of breaking through a natural tendency to avoid thinking about or dealing with death and confronts us with our mortality.

The simple reality is that we have no guarantees about the length of days, and tragedies like this happen every day to people near and far in an incredible variety of ways. What are we supposed to do with such a fact? How do we live with the fact that a vast array of factors may alter, interrupt or even nullify our plans for our future?

First of all, I believe that we need to see our life more as a gift and become more intentional about deciding what is important in our lives and focusing our attention on those values. We may be preparing for our future, but we need to prepare in such a way that generates a sense of well-being in our present lives.

Secondly, a fundamental value by which I manage my life is the value of using each day well. I want each day to be meaningful and have some value. It doesn't always happen that way, but the desire is there to be able to climb in bed at night and feel satisfaction with at least part of the day's activities.

There is simply no greater gift than each day that comes our way. When there are days when things did not go our way, even if we are in a period where we don't know what we want to do with our lives, we can use our daily energy in such a way that can leave us satisfied with how we are dealing with the issues that dominate our attention.

Thirdly, being reminded of our mortality provides another opportunity to explore our faith or the lack of it in terms of our belief in and relationship to the Giver of all life. It makes a great difference to me to know in my heart that death marks only a transformation and not an end.

Reflecting on such issues triggered by the loss of someone we know or care about is not morbid. The more we intentionally deal with our own mortality, the richer our life can become.

Delbert McClinton brings Roadhouse Tonk through town this weekend

"I came in from school one day and this friend of my brother's was leanin' up against the wall playin' guitar and singing 'Cold, Cold Heart.' That was the first time I ever really heard music played live and I knew right then I wanted to do it too."

Born in Lubbock, Texas, Delbert McClinton began pursuing his dream right away. He went out and bought himself a $3.50 F-hole Kay guitar and learned "Folsom Prison Blues" and "Crazy Arms," the latter of which he performed for his first public appearance—the Big "V" Jamboree at the Village Theatre in Lubbock (Texas) in 1957.

Perhaps no one but McClinton himself suspected that first public performance would be the start of a legendary honky tonk career that remains best symbolized by McClinton's sizzling roadhouse live shows.

It wasn't long after that first encounter with live music that McClinton heard Jimmy Reed tear up a blues harp on "Honest I Do." He soon mastered the harmonica, and it became a staple of his music.

Even in those early days, McClinton was brewing up his own blend of seething rhythm 'n' blues, seasoned with the country classics he'd listened to as a kid over allnight airwaves and the influence of sharing stages with such blues greats as Sonny Boy Williamson, Jimmy Reed, Buster Brown, Joe Tex, Big Joe Turner and Howlin' Wolf. Delbert and his band the Straightjackets, backed all these notables during their stint as house-band at Jack's Place in Fort Worth.

In 1962, McClinton supplied the harp parts for Bruce Channel's hit, "Hey! Baby." It got him included on Channel's European tour. That's when he turned the Beatles (then an unknown group who opened some of Channel's shows), and more specifically John Lennon, on to the rock 'n' roll harmonica licks later heard on the band's hit, "Love Me Do."

Delbert McClinton

"If it wasn't for a few people, the flame of this particular music might have died. I like to think I'm helping keep it alive," McClinton says.

Through the remainder of the '60s and '70s, McClinton recorded regularly—both on his own and with groups—for such labels as United Artists, London, ABC and Capricorn. Though there were no major hits, he drew accolades from fellow musicians and critics. That and McClinton's loyalty to his material sustained him. "If it wasn't for a few people, the flame of this particular music might've died. I like to think I'm helping keep it alive," he says.

In 1981, McClinton scored a major pop single hit—"Giving It Up For Your Love"—which reached the top ten.

Recently, Alligator Records has re-released much of McClinton's best work through a one-record compilation entitled Honky Tonk! (I Done Me Some). McClinton himself selected the songs for the album from two of his earlier releases, Victim of Life's Circumstances and Genuine Cowhide, both originally released in 1974-76. With self-penned classics like "Two More Bottles of Wine," "Lessons In The Pain Of Love" and "Do It," the work re-establishes McClinton as one of the great American song stylists/writers who can, as Chicago Sun-Times pop critic Don McLeese says, "rock the house with the best of them!"

Dell Suggs in concert

Del Suggs

The University Program Board Coffeehouse Committee will present Dell Suggs in concert on Wednesday evening. One of Florida's premier performers, Suggs, a popular singer and songwriter, brings his guitar to Wilmington. He plays before standing-room-only crowds throughout the Southeast, performing what he calls "Saltwater Music." This is one show you don't want to miss.

Drawing on his north Florida roots and guitar-driven upbringing, Suggs has become one of the most popular performers on the college circuit. His new album, Wooden Boat, has just been released on Key Porpoise Records and it contains his most popular new material. His last album, Saltwater Music, has been compared to the best works of James Taylor, Jimmy Buffet and Paul Simon by the critics. It has received extensive national airplay after being endorsed by the National Federation of Community Broadcasters in Washington, DC. The album has sold thousands across America, and as far away as Japan and New Zealand. Suggs is also a featured artist on the double album Steve Meisburg and Friends: In Concert.

Last year the television special "Del Suggs: With My Friends, For My Friends" was broadcast over satellite to PBS affiliates around the country. Originally broadcast live over WFSU-TV, the show was a 90-minute concert hosted by Suggs and featuring his music. The instant popularity of the program resulted in a local rebroadcast only two weeks later, and led to satellite distribution across the country.

Suggs tours exclusively on the college circuit, and performs in concert at over 75 schools a year. He has shared the stage with such notables as Garrison Keillor (of Prairie Home Companion), The Nitky Gritty Dirt Band, Mac McAnally, Tim Weisberg, Gamble Rogers, Steve Meisburg, Jerry Clower, Pierce Pettis, and many others. Suggs has been recognized by and awarded endorsement agreements with Ovation Guitars and Peavey Electronics. These fine companies provide him with outstanding guitars and sound equipment for tour support.

The concert will take place at 8 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 18, in the University Union Room 100 on the campus of UNCW. The performance is free of charge and refreshments will be served.

Max Weinberg brings The E Street Beat to campus on Wednesday

Max Weinberg

Max Weinberg will visit campus

The Concert Committee of the University Program Board and radio station WHSL will present Max Weinberg: The Big Beat From E Street, a multi-media lecture extravaganza, at 8 pm on Wednesday, November 11th. The show, which was originally scheduled for October 15th, will be held in Kenan Auditorium. Admission will be $2 with UNCW ID and $5 for the general public.

Bruce Springsteen calls him the Mighty Max. Robert Palmer, noted music critic for the New York Times, says he's "the rhythmic backbone of the E Street Band." Modern Drummer magazine crowned him "King of the Big Beat." His famous snare drum sound helped re-define rock drumming. Yet Max Weinberg, one of contemporary music's most respected drummers, is more than just the keeper of the beat in what many consider the world's best rock 'n' roll band.

He's also the author of the critically acclaimed book The Big Beat (Conversations with Rock's Great Drummers). Contemporary Books, 1984. In it, Weinberg depicted the growth of rock drumming from its very beginning by interviewing such legends as Ringo Starr, Rolling Stone Charlie Watts, and Elvis Presley's original drummer, D.J. Fontana. As reviewers accurately pointed out, it was the first time the story of rock 'n' roll was told from a drummer's perspective. Because of this, The Big Beat earned a permanent place on the rock history bookshelf.

Now Weinberg is entering yet another phase in his career, namely that of public speaker. "The message I got from rock 'n' roll was: Believe in yourself and anything is possible. This is my story," says Weinberg. "Stepping out from behind the drums to tell this story is a natural extension of my performing with Bruce and the rest of the E Street Band."

Although you'd never know it from his achievements and reputation, there was a time in his life—during the recording of Bruce Springsteen's classic double album The River—when Weinberg nearly lost everything he had accomplished in rock 'n' roll up to that point.

As he likes to say, Weinberg then "re-invented" himself as a drummer. The results can be heard on one of rock's biggest selling records ever, Born in the U.S.A. But there's more to the story. In 1983 while recording Born in the U.S.A., Weinberg found it more and more difficult to play the drums without severe pain in his hands. After years of physically demanding performances, he had suffered injury so bad that doctors told him he'd eventually get to the point where he wouldn't even be able to pick up a drumstick again; let alone remain in the E Street Band. They told him to find a new profession.

Numerous operations and countless hours of practice and rehabilitation later—coupled with an inner drive and determination to overcome this near-crippling injury to the tendons in his hands—Weinberg beat the odds. In fact, Weinberg has never played better. Tell Bruce Springsteen how powerful his song "Born in the U.S.A." is and he'll probably tell you as he did Musician magazine, "That's Max. Max was the best thing on that song."

It's topics such as motivation, goal setting, overcoming obstacles and ultimately achieving success—spiced with stories and anecdotes pertaining to the twelve years Weinberg has spent playing behind his mentor and longtime friend, Bruce Springsteen—which will be the heart of Weinberg's presentation. A skilled, articulate speaker and the antithesis of the typical rock drummer, Weinberg has something meaningful and entertaining to say to college students—be they aspiring rock drummers or future corporate executives.

"It doesn't matter what your goals are," says Weinberg. "It's just important to have them and work towards them, all the while remembering, as Bruce says, to guard against losing the best part of

Camelot opens Wednesday

By Heidi Berge

Stone castles, Kings, and star-crossed lovers will take the stage when the Opera House Theater Company opens its season Wednesday night with the enchanting Lerner and Loewe musical, CAMELOT.

Based on T.H. White's The Once and Future King, CAMELOT recounts the mythical legend of King Arthur and The Knights of the Round Table. There is some proof that these mythical characters may have actually existed in England between the 9th and 11th centuries. Legends have been preserved and passed down that focus on the Round Table, others focus on the search for the Holy Grail. The musical CAMELOT focuses on the love triangle that developed between King Arthur, his Queen Guinevere, and Lancelot, Arthur's prize knight.

CAMELOT seems such and Eden-paradise before whirlwinds of fate stir up this triangle. King Arthur decrees law and it becomes reality. Even natural laws obey him with a little help from Merlin the Magician.

The trouble comes in when Merlin is seduced away from Camelot by Nimue, his long-time ethereal mistress. Arthur, left alone and without Merlin's power of foresight, makes what seem to him to be excellent decisions, but are precisely the ones that are CAMELOT's demise.

The sets, costumes, and songs such as "I Wonder What the King is Doing Tonight", "Camelot", and "If Ever I Would Leave You" are sure to transport the audience back in time to a medieval fantasy worth experiencing. While on Broadway in 1960, the musical grossed over 3.5 million in box office sales.

I stopped by Opera House's dress rehearsal Saturday to see how CAMELOT would be translated to Thalian Hall. Just as I suspected, Director Lou Crisoleo has captured the romantic, medieval mood. Jim Martz's dark castle set is enhanced by colorful banners and crests, while Cindy Miles' costumes are varied and ornate.

Some familiar Opera House faces will be seen in the cast. King Arthur is played by Frederick DeJaco who just starred as Emile in South Pacific, the Company's last production. Cindy Colucci plays the fickle Queen Guinevere, and Robin Dale Robertson plays a virile Lancelot. Michael Titterton, last seen in "My Fair Lady", another Lerner and Loewe hit, will appear as Merlin the Magician; and Ann Smith will play his mistress Nimue. Steve Cooper will play Mordred, Arthur's illegitimate son.

Other Knights, Pages, and Ladies of the Court include: Bob Amath, Peter Boyle, Megan Boyle, Susan Carter, Wes Carter, Marc Francis, Michael Harle, Annette

Scene from Camelot

Horton, Penny Hayes, Will King, Amy Lillev, Diandra Mandy, David Parker, Tony Pender, Jack Pennycook, Beverly Skinner, Rhessa Stone, Bruce Stow, Matt Titterton, and Becky Wyatt.

Opera House will open CAMELOT with a Gala Preview Performance on November 11 at 7:30 p.m. to be followed by a cocktail buffet at Justine's Restaurant. Tickets for this event are $50 per person. From Nov. 12-15 and Nov. 18-22, tickets are $10 and $12. Student discount tickets are $6 and $8. Performances start at 8:00 p.m. Reservations for this enchanting evening can be made by calling the Thalian Hall Box Office at 763-3398.

Movie Update

by Anita Bradshaw

Baby Boom with Diane Keaton and introducing Kristina and Elizabeth Kennedy is a delightful comedy and a sure winner at the box office. Keaton portrays a woman of the eighties, supposedly caught up in her job to take time to have a family. A distant relative dies and bequeaths his now orphaned daughter to Keaton. Her portrayal of someone not knowing how to cope with this "bundle of joy" is magnificent. Drop what you're doing and go see this one. I give it a six. Independence Mall-FC.

Fatal Beauty starring Whoopi Goldberg and the ever lucid Sam Elliott is not necessarily fatal to them, but it's not a beauty either. Goldberg is a cop with a gun that will outmatch Dirty Harry any day. She doesn't mind aiming to kill. This film just doesn't have the dialogue to let her show her acting skills at work. The plot is about some "stuff" that hit the street strong enough to "kill" an elephant in 5-10 seconds. Whoopi is out to find and destroy the culprits. There's some action, but not enough to hold your attention. I'll let it slip in with a three. College Road Cinemas-R.

Private Investigations is not worth the trouble of investigating. If you read the review of "Body

Heat in the Seahawk, this movie is even more than that (if you didn't read it you should have). The story is about a young man that accidentally comes across a tape that he shouldn't. The tape contains a code. The code is a time, place and date for a meeting. This same young man also happens to be the son of a journalist that is after some information that implicates some crooked cops on the local police force. Sound complicated? Believe me, it's not. (Say the last of those two phrases fast and you've summed up the movie). I give this flick, and grudgingly, a two. New Centre-R.

In the Mood is the recounted story of a fifty-seven year old of his days of fidelity. His vision has become a bit cloudy over the years and he makes it hard to make this story even par true. He claims to have been possessed by a charm so irresistibly to older women that it was a bad omen that followed him everywhere he went. The film has its moments of humor though. And in the end reality once again takes hold and the youth finally finds someone his own age that he can love and finally marry. This movie can hold its own with a rating of four. Oleander twin-PG

The Dark Knight Returns: Not Just a Comic Book --And not just for kids

By Scott Urban

I confess: I still read comic books.

I don't feel so funny admitting that these days as I might have, had I been my current age, about a decade ago. Part of that's because, as an entire generation of comic book buyers and readers has grown up, so too has the comic book industry. Nowadays, comic books are big business, with more older adolescents and adults buying them than children. They are sickly produced, far more realistic, and deal with "mature" plot-lines and themes (as well as being far more expensive than in my youth).

The biggest splash to hit the comics scene in the past couple years is THE DARK KNIGHT RETURNS by Frank Miller (Warner Books, $12.95; available at WALDEN BOOKS on Oleander Drive in Wilmington). Originally a four-issue "mini-series," the story has been collected in one volume. How big a splash did its appearance make? Consider this: the hard-cover, limited edition DARK KNIGHT, with an original illustration by Miller, now commands $500 and up. "The Dark Knight," of course, refers to the Batman, but this is an altogether different conceptualization of the Batman than ever before. The comic book Batman never was the campy, comedy-oriented superhero you might have seen on TV, but Miller takes him into territory no comic book character entered prior to this.

Set in Gotham City in a dismal future, the story opens ten years after the Batman's last appearance. Due to intense public pressure, all of the "Golden Age" heroes, except Superman, have been forced out of action. Bruce Wayne, Batman's alter ego, passively watches the escalating street violence, reminiscing about old glories. Eventually, the specter of the Batman takes hold of him - in Miller's interpretation, Wayne almost becomes possessed by an avenging spirit. He dons the dark blue and gray cowl and cape and undertakes a one-man crusade against crime. During the course of his new adventures, he makes some new enemies, faces some of his oldest foes - Two-Face and the Joker, and even squares off against Superman himself.

If it sounds like standard comic book fare, think again. It has the same comic framework, but delves into some disturbing issues. Bruce Wayne, well past his middle-aged years, must increasingly rely on arms and prostheses to win his battles, rather than his natural agility and prowess. He has to grapple with the question of whether to kill an enemy and thereby violate his own personal code, or let that enemy live, and possibly kill again. On a broader scope, Miller examines the societal problem of the vigilantes, and the media's representation of news events and news makers.

As good as it is, the book has problems. The Batman takes more "lickin'" than he should be able to take and keep on tickin'. I had some problems with the way he allows a young girl to remain by his side, becoming the new Robin, exposing her to danger time and again. I would have enjoyed even more characterization of Wayne, Commissioner Gordon, and the rest. Still, THE DARK KNIGHT RETURNS is an intriguing example of what comics can become with freedom of expression and an accepting public.

If long-length comic books (or "graphic novels," as they're now called) sound interesting to you, you might want to try out some others. RONIN is on the bookshelves right now, and is also written and drawn by Frank Miller. THE ROOTS OF THE SWAMP THING is also available. Written by Alan Moore (who also contributed the introduction to DARK KNIGHT), SWAMP THING provides an unlikely but welcome platform to show how comic book scripting can achieve near-poetic scope.

Gilmore master class slated for Nov. 22

A second master class of the semester by John Gilmore is to be held on November 22, Sunday from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. in King Hall on the campus of UNCW. Mr. Gilmore is the 1987-88 University Foundation Visiting Distinguished Professor. University students, faculty, community members, and their companions are invited to attend and participate in this free session.

"Music from Bach to Bernstein is acceptable," Gilmore said as encouragement to singers sometimes intimidated by the demands of the Classical art song or opera aria. By now, Gilmore's reputation as an easy going, informal music educator is well-known and appreciated by the amateur and professional alike. "A good idea," said Gilmore, "would be to bring your own accompanist, but we will have one available as well." This master class is strictly audience participation.

CATCH THE LATEST SPORTS, CAMPUS NEWS, AND YOUR FAVORITE COMICS IN THE SEAHAWK EACH TUESDAY NIGHT!

The Special Events committee of the University Program Board will present the Royal Lichtenstein 1-4 Ring Sidewalk Circus performance from 12-1 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 12, on the grounds of the University Union.

SHORTS

North Carolina Writer's Network Conference this weekend

Heidi Berge, Assistant Entertainment Editor

The North Carolina Writer's Network will hold its Fall Conference at the Sheraton Wrightsville Beach, November 13-15.

The conference, which is open to anyone, includes a full day of workshops in various kinds of writing, including poetry, fiction, science fiction, non-fiction, children's picture book, and romance. Each workshop will be taught by a noted writer in the field.

Some of the noted writers include Madeleine Costigan, assistant fiction editor of McCall's magazine; literary agent, Jean Naggar; Michael Byrd, copy editor and assistant news editor for the Charlotte Observer; Jo Ann Algermissen who has published more than 30 romance novels; Anne Russell, writer of two non-fiction books; and Phil Hines, 1985 winner of a playwrighting fellowship from the NC Arts Council.

Students may register for the Saturday workshops by showing a Student I.D. and a fee of $20 covering only the Saturday workshop starting at 8:30 Saturday morning.

Other conference activities can be attended separately for a fee of $10 each. These include the Saturday luncheon with speaker, Linton Weeks, editor of Southern Magazine; and Sunday's panel discussion: The Writer's Expectations: Fantasy vs. Reality.

Students are also invited to attend a performance of three prizewinning one-act plays Friday or Saturday night at Jake's at Jacob's Run for the discounted ticket price of $3. Tickets must be purchased through the Jacob's Run Box Office at 762-5253. Performances are at 8:30 p.m. both nights.

Although students may register at the door Saturday morning, workshops are filling up. In order to make reservations for your choice, call Maggie Maxwell at 343-8771; or see Charles Fort in the English Department for a brochure and pre-registration form.

Your Horoscopes for this week

By Joyce Jillson

For Wednesday, November 11, 1987

MOON is in Leo and Mars opposes Jupiter. You're full of confidence and eager to test your powers. But taking a big gamble today could put your finances in the red; practice a little restraint and save yourself from a major economic headache. People will be in a slap-happy mood. You will, too, if you let yourself go.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Stay positive, but try to keep your enthusiasms in line; safeguard your financial security. Sports activities are a good outlet for your energies. A good mood prevails.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll have to deal with people's egos. Expand your possibilities for making money, but stay on the conservative side. You're feeling sexier than usual.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Your social life is going full blast; you have many prospective suitors to choose from. Having a sense of humor will get you through any ordeal. Research projects develop.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You're attracted to people with whom you have a strong mental rapport. Creative writing is easier to accomplish. Be a bit of an actor or actress around your friends.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You'll thrive over the next two days - the moon is in your sign. Love affairs are as satisfying as you could hope for. A promotion at work is likely; go for it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Concentrate on the broader picture rather than piddling details. You're in the mood for romance, and others are willing to oblige. Creativity is increased.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You're in a sunnier mood; spend your light around. A career in modeling may open up. Keeping expenses in line is likely to take some doing. Your public image counts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You'll radiate more power than usual. Go for an executive position, but only if you feel you're ready. Money may flow through your fingers; pleasure spending is likely.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). If you have a problem, go to the top. Going into a new business may be more costly than you anticipated. Love affairs take up a great deal of your time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Try to rule people through love, not force. Your charisma factor is at 10. Spontaneous gatherings will be a real source of joy. Generosity counts for a lot.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Help others to shine. Put more energy into a relationship without expecting too much in return; unconditional love is what matters. Inspiration runs high.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Too much of a good thing can be grand. Your enthusiasm is well founded for a new project. Make sure your financial generosity goes to a worthy recipient. You're in high spirits.

For Thursday, November 12, 1987

Moon nicely trines Venus in sang-froid Sagittarius. Relationships will thrive on openness and frankness. Expect to be engaged in a philosophical discussion or two. Conversations about foreign cultures will also be fascinating. Small financial gains can be expected. People will be in a warm mood socially.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Long-distance communications are favored, especially with family or friends. Emotional misunderstandings can be overcome. Expand your business in minor ways.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Your extroverted side attracts others. Money connected with a foreign business will do well. Relationships with someone quite older or quite younger are favored.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You'll find greater competence in relationships. You find it easier to see everyone's point of view. Public self-expression should be your goal; don't shrink from the limelight.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Improved work conditions have you in a happy mood; new co-workers lift some of your load. Financial opportunities exist, small though they may be. Buy clothes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You can safely take a gamble, financial or otherwise. Support your child's talent, perhaps by offering him or her special instruction. Investment profits come.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Your ego may seem to be temporarily blocked - a frustrating thing. A secret love affair is complicated but fascinating.

Get some alone time to clarify your emotions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Your sparkling repartee will be endearing to others, as well as your charming manners. Financial improvement is shown, perhaps by traveling. Heartbreaks heal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Money-madness is OK today; make your big killing. Someone may object if you treat him or her merely as a possession. Single Scorpios have a chance to meet someone special.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). With Venus in your sign, you sparkle. Money is easily spent on personal pleasure. Give gifts or offer some token of affection. Your popularity grows.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Now you can resolve your feelings about a former relationship. Behind-the-scenes financial help may come as a vast surprise. Devotion counts more than passion.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). As usually, your friends will be lucky for you. Put your personal stamp on everything you do. You may fall into a chance to earn a little extra money.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The dream of having a loving relationship will not escape you; take heart. You have the ability to put your friends in a party mood. Money may flow like water.

For Friday, November 13, 1987

Things look thumbs up for weekend romance. However, no thinking violet can play. You've got to think well of yourself to make the right impression. Dress your best. If you need clothes, shop, but don't expect to stay within your budget. The business climate tends to be optimistic; look for that big killing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). It will be easy to impress the opposite sex; in fact, you may completely overwhelm them. Tonight's your night. Saturday and Sunday are more romantically low-key, but fine.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Avoid your humdrum Friday night routine. Trips to the theater are perfect while the moon's in Leo. Saturday and Sunday find you in a sensual, earthy mood; you sizzle, too!

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Group activities will bring you the most fun; then you can single someone special out of the pack. Take a trip to a local health spa on Saturday or Sunday.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). It's OK to be as dramatic as you wish; the opposite sex will be dazzled beyond belief. A trip to your favorite restaurant on Saturday is perfect. Try home cooking on Sunday.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You have more than the usual charisma going for you tonight. Saturday may seem more romantically pleasurable, but it needn't be. Be sexy and slinky on Sunday morning.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You should spend more freely tonight to impress your date. Saturday shows off your personality at its suave best. On Sunday, you get to do what you want; choose your activities well.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). The bright lights attract you in the p.m. Narrow down your romantic interests to worthy candidates only. On Saturday and Sunday, be reciprocal in displaying your affections.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Tonight's activities should prove to be merry. Wear a daring outfit, and watch those jaws drop! Saturday and Sunday may find you in a more reflective mood.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Display your usual sharpness of wit tonight. Your sunny disposition will win the hearts of others. Weather permitting, a hike on Saturday or Sunday gets the blood up.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Tonight you may find yourself in a boldly romantic mood - out for conquest. Saturday finds you feeling devoted, eager to please others. Try a foreign restaurant on Sunday.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You'll be eager to fit in with whatever is going on tonight. A trip to the movies or a rock concert is perfect. Saturday and Sunday finds you sure about your romantic feelings.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Romantic dreams can be fulfilled tonight; you'll be optimistic about love. Don't panic about others on Saturday or Sunday; yes, they do love you for who you are.

WEEKEND LOVE FORECAST: This will be one of the better weekends for romance. Get off on the right foot tonight by setting the proper mood. Fix up your apartment just so and buy flowers, or a vintage bottle of wine. Moon in Leo will bring out your sense of style. To render the opposite sex helpless, don't grope; use your ample personal charm instead. Attention: Penny pinchers beware! Don't be afraid to spend. Your generosity, either in money or deed, will make a valuable impression. Singles should by all means go out on the town. You'll feel more confident than usual. Go to a fun place, where the bright lights shine. On Saturday, moon enters matter-of-fact Virgo. Is Virgo a good sign for love? Well, it can be. Although not as nearly as flashy as Leo, Virgo can bring a person of stirling character into your life. With the moon here, you'll be drawn to people who'll notice your distinctive characteristics, your uniqueness as a person. Contrary to the stereotype, moon in Virgo can bring out your deeper passions - those you've never shown before because you were afraid of being criticized - not to mention your earthy side. Of the two days, Saturday looks more romantically promising than Sunday. Save Sunday for cleaning up after the party.

COUPLE OF THE WEEKEND: On Friday, Leo will blend well with Aries, Sagittarius or Aquarius - a wide field to choose from. On Saturday and Sunday, Virgos get their way, mostly with either Scorpios or Pisces. If they look for the good qualities in others, they'll find them. Now that the moon is in Virgo, you regain your sense of reality. But this needn't dampen your spirits. Be honest in your words - and sincere. Tell the truth and you can warm your way into anyone's heart. You may feel a compulsive urge to put everything in order; no sweeping things under the rugs for you.

For Saturday, November 14, 1987

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Putting the small details of your life in order wouldn't hurt. Mutual financial matters can be nicely ironed out. Make needed changes in your diet or exercise regimen.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll operate at peak efficiency - that is, if you're truly in the mood to work. Give people positive suggestions rather than finding fault. Hobbies are satisfying.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Forge ahead with life on your own terms. Analytical skills are increased. You may find a fascinating book that could alter your views about life.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). The small favors you do for others will be vastly appreciated. You find it easier to start a health or exercise program. Settle into your weekend routine.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Organize your finances so you know where everything is. Your love life should be built on a thick strata of reality. It's easy to come up with inventive solutions about anything.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You now get to hold center stage; make the most of your opportunities. Being in the public eye is a distinct possibility. You get your way in relationships.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Having order in your surroundings will give you peace of mind. Details may count more than the larger picture. Take care of a few unfinished projects and then forget them.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You can turn a hobby into a second income. Others will understand you better emotionally. You may find yourself attracted to a Virgo of stirring virtue.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Pay lots of attention to your career goals. Having a routine may be necessary, though you may not like it. The evening hours find you enjoying yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Turn over some of the details to others, if possible. Now is the time to cut down on your business overhead. Relationships will need more time to mature.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You may be thinking of buying a new car. Take care of a few practicalities before diving into pleasure. Investment opportunities exist, but you have to research them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). After an eventful week, you'll do yourself a favor if you get a few extra winks of sleep. Your psychic intuitions will be sharp. Others make demands on your time.

Dear Dr. A:

This letter is hard for me to write but I didn't know who else to turn to. Me and my best friend are from the same home town. We both decided to come to this college and we even tried to room together but that didn't work out. I have known him since Kindergarten and I never thought I would have to deal with this.

My friend has been doing alot of partying since we got down here — in fact, we have been to a lot of parties together. But a few weeks ago he asked me if I would do a little cocaine with him. I was shocked!

He said he has been doing cocaine for over five months and hasn't had any problems with it. He said it was ten times better than beer and you really can't get hooked on it like they say.

I know there is a lot of hype about drugs but I don't really know too much about it. I'm really not sure what to do.

My friend is really trying to get me to try it and he keeps teasing me in front of our other friends. I don't want to stop being friends with him but I don't know what to do.

Sincerely,

J.F.

Dear J.F.:

I strongly believe that anyone who is putting pressure on me to do something I really don't want to do, it's not a true friend. If someone truly cares about me, this person will accept who I am and what I believe in, even though he or she may not agree with me.

I don't mean to say that you need to totally reject your friend, but apparently the two of you have very different ideas about how to have fun.

You could meet others who have more similar values, for example, by joining one of the many campus clubs and organizations, or by becoming active in one of the local churches.

There may be activities other than partying you are still comfortable doing with your hometown friend. Perhaps you could go to the movies together or a concert, or you could study together.

You also asked for more information about cocaine. Cocaine is a stimulant, and as such has really the opposite effect of beer, which is classified as a depressant.

When you use cocaine you are likely to experience a brief but intense adrenaline rush. You may feel extremely strong and energetic during this time, as if you could take on the whole world. After the rush is over, about half an hour later, users are increasingly likely to experience anxiety, restlessness, nausea, headaches, depression, irritability, and difficulties sleeping.

If you have ever had too much coffee, you have an idea of what this feels like. It is not too pleasant at all. Many people decide that the best cure for this feeling is more cocaine.

This way, the drug becomes extremely addictive, psychologically, even though some experts claim that it is not physically addictive.

There are a number of other risks associated with cocaine use: First of all, blood pressure rises during use of the drug which can result in fatal heart attacks.

Secondly, cocaine acts as an appetite suppressant, while interfering with regular sleeping patterns, which is a combination that often results in severe health problems.

Thirdly, cocaine can bring on paranoid feelings in users to the point where they actually attack others. I have seen this happen, it is not a pretty sight.

In conclusion, I would encourage you to think carefully about whether or not you really want to submit yourself to any of this just in order to please someone else. By the way, you can get more information and further help at the Alternatives Center in the Student Union.

All the best,

Dr. A

'There was a loud crash—and then everything was silent'

On Oct. 22, Professor Steven Sher's Fiction Writing class (Eng. 207) set a table up downstairs in the Union and invited the student body to create a story. Each passerby could contribute two or three lines, (hopefully after reading the preceding lines); this is the story which resulted.

There was a loud crash, then everything was silent. After several minutes of deafening silence, a low tapping began slowly then progressively became louder and faster. Was it the shutters or the old house or was it something unseen and hidden from view? The young girl rose from her bed, went silently to the door, and looked it. Yet she sensed something from beyond the door, then she heard a creak.

Curious, she opened the door. She saw nothing at first - but the silence persisted. Beads of sweat broke out on her upper lip. She got nervous. She screamed as she saw a shadow in the hallway move, but then became calm when she realized it was only the wind in the trees.

The calm fled as she sensed a shape slip into the room behind her. The scream seemed to bubble up past her lips as her panic mounted higher and higher against her will. She was all alone her husband had left for the weekend. "Eggs are the only thing I can make besides a baby," she remembered him saying.

She ran to the phone but found it disconnected. She then ran to the window to see if the wire was cut. But when she leaned outside the window she began to fall outside the window.

Her life passed before her eyes as she soared towards the ground. She was falling quick, until her foot which was caught on the curtain string, broke her fall. She was dangling in the night.

That's when she remembered her nightmare in which she was being attacked by a Great White Shark. This entered her mind through the feeling of the string on her ankle which was the same feeling of flesh being ripped from her leg. "Oh God," she thought frantically, "Am I going to die tonight?"

Then all of sudden she awoke realizing that it was only a dream. But was that sound of horror coming from the door still a dream or reality? She rationalized "of course, it's just a nightmare." She rose from her bed, beads of perspiration beaded on her forehead, and walked slowly, quietly to the bedroom door.

"Her calm fled as she sensed a shape slip into the room behind her...."

As she opened it, a long, aging creak emerged from the door. She caught a glimpse of a shadowy figure. But was it just her vivid imagination or some predator? She quickly closed the door in fear. "Okay Jill, get a grip. You'll be jumping at your own shadow if you're not careful."

She locked the door, and went into the living room and flicked on the TV. Tony was here? She could not think straight. Tony had been on her mind for weeks, even though she tried to deny it. She could only remember his last words as they dragged him to jail, "I'll be back for you Jill and you're going to regret what you've done to me!"

She heard the back door creak open; she turned and there he was! "I told you, I would be back." Tony entered the room. "Honey, I'm home!" he yelled. She felt her head pounding as her heart raced. "Am I dreaming now, or is this really happening to me?", she wondered. So they both sat on the bed - demolished 4 hamburgers and then had all the strength that they needed to do what comes naturally!

Then they both ventured toward their 22' Boston Whaler with twin 200 hp Yamahas and headed off shore for some adventurous fishing. They landed 150 King Mackerel along with 75 Spanish Mackerel. They gained $525.00 on this trip and used this money for ... well you know what you can do with $525.00 in this country World" when we move to "Santa Barbara" among the "Bold and the Beautiful". After all this we'll still be "Young and the Restless" and have "One Life to Live" all the "Days of Our Lives".

Meanwhile, in a faraway travelling caravan, a lone Gypsy woman searches for the father of her only child. Her child's name is Adrian, and he is as dark as the Mediterranean night, and, to her, as precious and bright as the shining sun. It had been many years since she had seen the man who had given her this precious child. One day, she swore, she would find him.

This lone Gypsy woman was named Maria. The traveling caravan stopped in Rio. Meanwhile, Jill has moved to Santa Barbara to start her new life with Dr. Jones. Tony is still galavanting around Rio with Juanita La Flore.

(which isn't much because of the recent stock market crash).

Anyway, Tony decides to run off to Rio with the haul ($525 big Bucks). But before he leaves he drops by Kroger's to pick up a bit of D-Con Rat Killer to finish off poor Jill. The idea is to kill Jill and "chill out" in Rio with another babe, Juanita La Flore.

Tony is sterile, but he doesn't know yet because he has been in jail. Jill knows, but she won't tell Tony. Tony wants the money for himself. Little does he know, Jill has plans of her own.

So...Jill is recovering in General Hospital from the rat poison given to her by Tony. She falls in love with Dr. Jones and they are planning to follow Tony to Rio and "pay him back".

Dr. Jones quits his job and tells Jill now you'll have "All My Children", and we'll "Search For Tomorrow" in the "Guiding Light" for as long "As The World Turns." It will be like being in "Another

Juanita has to meet her cousin whom she hasn't seen in 7 years. Tony has agreed to go with Juanita to a local restaurant to meet this cousin. They arrive together and Maria, who is Juanita's cousin, is waiting for them.

Juanita starts to introduce the two, but then there is a loud crash, then everything is silent. Tony and Maria have already been introduced before! They just stare at each other, speechless. Juanita doesn't know what's wrong.

She asks, "Tony, is something wrong?" Maria says, "It's you!" Juanita asks, "Tony, is something wrong?" Maria says, "It's you!" Juanita asks, "What are you talking about?"

Maria starts a scene in the restaurant, revealing that Tony is Adrian's father. Tony realizes that he is really in love with Maria and kisses Juanita. Tony and Maria leave together, hand in hand, to start a new life together with their son, who is 7 years old. (He still doesn't know that this'll be his only child because he's still sterile!!)

Ten peaceful years passed by. Maria and Tony never imagined that the string of brutal knife murders could involve their little family. Then, one day as Maria was cleaning under Adrian's bed, she found the blood stained knives wrapped in torn clothing.

She wrapped them up and started to place them back under the bed when she heard a crash. Through the flying glass and broken wood of the window, she saw nothing but a masked figure and a flying blade. "Adrian!!" she screamed.

With that there was a flash and a thundering boom. The intruder went flying backward in the shower of blood that erupted from his blown open chest. She felt a warm hug and turned, in tears, to see it was her son Adrian's arms around her.

Adrian walked over and removed the mask to find that the intruder was his loving father, Tony.

Chocolate candy is quick and easy anywhere

Just recently I got a case of the chocolate hungries. I am talking about serious hungries, the kind that make grown men cry and tiny women fight.

I was not in any mood to cook a big batch of chocolate fudge—I wanted that chocolate taste right now. I couldn't wait long enough to cook up a Devil's Food cake with rich fudge icing.

Needless to say, I jumped into the car and drove to the nearest store and purchased several pure chocolate bars. One disappeared before I was even back in the car.

The others were wolfed down over the next couple of days and since then that deep urge for chocolate has subsided—at least it had until I found a recipe for a marvelous fudge candy recipe that makes the rounds each year.

Way back when it first came out, at least 35 years, it was known by a number of names. One even claimed that it was Mammie Eisenhower's Million Dollar fudge, another was Fantasy Fudge and yet another was a simple marshmallow fudge. There seemed to be a name for every region over the years I've made that candy and yet the recipe is all the same.

The same holds true for a simple fudge/candy/candy which I discovered in Ohio about 30 years ago.

It takes about ten minutes to cook, and very little talent (if it took talent, I could never cook any type of candy.)

This cookie/candy takes no heavy beating, no soft stage ball in a cup of cold water and no slippery buttered plates.

Not long ago I received a cookbook from a little town in Virginia where I lived a number of years ago. In this cookbook was my candy/cookie which I introduced to the community... but under the "ownership" of a friend.

There were a few minutes of bad feelings but after over 20 years, the recipe has been shared by hundreds of people, many of whom have claimed it as their own.

When I was first given the recipe, about a dozen of us shared it at the same time.

We were all newcomers and belonged to an organization just for those who recently moved to the town. It was recipe night and we all brought a recipe and the finished product. We shared tastes, hints and recipes and came away with some that eventually became favorites of our families.

One was the cookie/candy, the other was an upside-down pudding cake.

It was years before the commercial pudding cakes were placed on the market. That cake is sinfully rich, complicated to cook and impossible to do without an oven and a full pantry.

Not so the cookie/candy. I have cooked it over a camp fire, and on a hot plate as well as in the kitchen.

Use a good heavy pan (a two or three quart one) and mix 2 cups of sugar, 1/4 cup cocoa, 1 stick of oleo and 1/2 cup of milk.

The original recipe called for evaporated milk but it can be made with regular milk, too.

Boil this mixture for one minute, stirring to keep from sticking, remove from the heat and add, 1/2 cup peanut butter, either the plain or crunchy kind, 3 cups of uncooked oatmeal (DO NOT USE THE INSTANT TYPE — use the quick oatmeal) and 1 tea. vanilla.

Stir all of this together quickly and drop by spoonful on waxed paper. Let it cool (if you can stand to wait) and store in a covered dish of some kind. We use those cookie or fruit cake tins that get collected each Christmas.

While you are waiting for the cookie/candy to cool, scrape the pan to get out that last bit of gooey.

There is enough to starve off 'chocolate hungries' for several days or to share with your dorm mates.

Facts and myths of law school

39,000 new students begin law school each year. Of these 39,000, how many are dedicated to becoming lawyers, and how many are simply there for lack of a better idea? Many lawyers and legal educators would agree that the number of young people choosing law by default is too high. According to a recent article entitled "Aimless Associates" in The American Lawyer magazine, editor Steven Brill points out that "law school and lawyering have, indeed, become the province not necessarily of desperately committed young lawyers but of the country's smartest young people who didn't want to be doctors, but knew they wanted to be something."

Larry Richard, President of Lawgistics, a consulting firm to the legal profession, has devoted his entire career to helping lawyers who have fallen into the trap described above. "Law school in the 70's became a repository for people who didn't know what they wanted to do with their lives," says Richard. "Law school became the liberal arts of graduate school." Today, many of these young lawyers come to Richard for career counseling. He continually encounters lawyers who describe their careers with disillusionment. Many are unhappy with the constant adversarial nature of their jobs, and feel frustrated because they realize that their initial ideals about justice and helping people were naive. They feel that their career have been compromised; they have fallen into roles where all they do is work twelve hour days, research trivial details, write repetitive briefs, and argue positions they may not truly believe in.

How, then, can a young person decide whether or not to pursue a career as a lawyer? For both Editor Brill and Consultant Richard, the ideal solution is to gain some experience working in a law firm, talking with lawyers, and learning about the law before you make your commitment to law school. Brill even suggests that "maybe law schools ought to make sure their applicants really want to be lawyers before admitting them-by making each applicant first be a paralegal for a year."

A paralegal, as the name implies, is one who assists a lawyer in performing his or her job tasks. According to a recent definition issued by the American Bar Association, a paralegal is one who (performs), under ultimate direction and supervision of an attorney, specifically delegated substantive legal work, which work...requires a sufficient knowledge of legal concepts that, absent such assistance, the attorney would perform the task. In other words, a paralegal can do anything an attorney can do, as long as the attorney is in charge. This definition illustrates the diverse opportunities available to paralegals - opportunities which are certain to provide a valuable educational experience which will help college graduates decide whether or not to go to law school.

Philadelphia's Institute for Paralegal Training offers college graduates a unique "Law School Transition Program" which encourages them to explore the legal profession by studying and then working as a paralegal. Cynthia Christopher, Director of Admissions at The Institute, describes this program enthusiastically. "So many college graduates rush into law school because the career conveys an impressive, professional image - but the reality is that many students are quickly disillusioned because of unrealistic expectations. We try to encourage these graduates to slow down - and to educate themselves - before they choose their life-long career. Students at The Institute study law and its practical applications in a four-month, full-time program - we offer specialty training in eight areas of law including International Law Administrative and Public Law, and the law of Employee Benefits. We then assist them in finding a job in a law firm or corporation in the city of their choice. After our graduates have had an opportunity to explore the legal profession, and if they are committed to the notion of attending law school, they return to The Institute to meet with our pre-law advisors for counseling and guidance, and we provide them with free LSAT independent study preparation materials. We find that our graduates who attend law school after several years of paralegal work are more successful in law school and are more marketable upon graduation than those people who entered law school directly from college."

Ms. Christopher also points out that a large percentage of new students to The Institute initially intend to go to law school, but after several years of work in a law firm, many find that their career paths are wide open even without a law degree. Many Institute graduates move into management and professional positions in banks or corporations, where their backgrounds in law are valuable assets. One 1978 Institute graduate claims, "I had originally planned to go to law school, but could not afford it at the time. Now I earn too much to even consider law school!"

NHRC Closes 86-87 Contract

The New Hanover Human Relations Commission has closed out its 1986-87 contract year with 104 completed Fair Employment cases. The Commission's contract year runs from October 1st through September 30th to coincide with the Federal Fiscal Year. The number of cases closed increased thirteen percent during the reporting period. Settlement amounts totaled $129,136.00 up from the 1985-86 amount of $83,629.00.

Of the 104 cases resolved, twenty-five resulted in "Negotiated Settlements", charges that are voluntarily settled between parties prior to, any commission determination. In fifty-three percent of the cases a "no Cause" determination was made. This refers to charges that are dismissed because no violation of the Fair Employment Ordinance has been found.

Ten percent of the cases ended as "Administrative Closures". Thirteen percent of the cases ended as "Withdrawal with Settlement". Such cases are withdrawn because the charging party has reached an agreement to which the commission is not a party. Ninety-one percent of the cases received by the commission involved Title VII, issues, i.e., Race, Color, Religion, Sex and National Origin. Six percent of the cases were age discrimination complaints while two percent were Handicap Cases.

Since September 1980, the Human Relation Commission has held its designation from the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission as a "706" agency. This means EEOC defers Title VII and age case processing in New Hanover County to the Commission. Each completed case is then reviewed by EEOC. The relationship between the Commission and EEOC has been successful. Throughout the seven years it has enforced New Hanover County's Fair Employment Ordinance, the commission has maintained a 100 percent acceptance rate from EEOC.

The Human Relation Commission also is the agency designated to enforce New Hanover County's Fair Housing Ordinance which is based on Title VIII of the 1968 Civil Rights Act. Title VIII prohibits discrimination in the sale, advertising, rental, financing, and other aspects of housing if the decision is based on Race, Color, Religion, Sex or National Origin. The Commission completed action on five housing cases this past year.

In addition, the Commission received 940 "Requests for Assistance" up from the 1985-86 total of 894. Requests for Assistance are complaints that are not based on a violation of either the Fair Employment or Fair Housing Ordinance. The Commission attempts to resolve these complaints through informal means.

Talent, and a new attitude

As the Lady Seahawk volleyball team treks towards the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament at East Carolina this weekend, Head Coach Kathy McDaniel will look upon two players who have drastically improved since last year.

Hitters Lisa Mills and Yvonne Holan will lead the 23-9 UNC Wilmington volleyball squad in its quest for its first CAA championship. Last year, Mills and Holan were key members in a 16-14 season, but didn't shine like they have this season for McDaniel.

Mills, a native of Greenville, N.C., was a solid hitter on last season's squad, but has completed her game with not just improved hitting, but also great passing and defense. Her improved game has had great results as she has been a member of three all-tournament teams and currently ranks fourth in the nation in ace average.

"Lisa has made a world of difference this season, said third year coach McDaniel. "She has improved herself on the back row, improved her passing and perfected her awesome serve. She doesn't have the best technique, but she replaces her lack of technique with hustle."

Holan, a Fayetteville native, has developed into one of the better Seahawk players. She has not only increased her defensive skills, but is one of the better hitting Seahawks and is eighth in the nation in dig average.

"Yvonne is a great defensive player because she anticipates so well," said McDaniel. "She has very good hitting skills which help her defensive skills."

To get excellent in-state volleyball players like Mills and Holan, McDaniel has found the recruiting trail very interesting.

"We have found more and more players who wish to come here," said McDaniel. "But it takes two or three years before North Carolina players develop into Division I players."

The big key for McDaniel is all that UNCW has to offer. Before, she lost the top players to the UNC's and N.C. States. Now those players are shifting their interests to the Big W.

"We have upgraded the schedule and next year we will play against some of the better teams in this region," said McDaniel. "As the University grows and it has more to offer, we will get the better players. We now have the name recognition to even get the top North Carolina players."

One reason for McDaniel's success is the services of assistant coach Elaine Penn. Penn serves as McDaniel's right hand, helping recruit the girls needed for the Lady Seahawks to challenge for the CAA title.

McDaniel honestly believes she has a shot at the conference crown. It is an attitude that is new to the UNCW program.

"When I first came to UNCW, they had the attitude that we weren't even suppose to be playing in Division I," said McDaniel. "Now they have an attitude that not only are they suppose to be playing a Division I schedule, but that they can compete against anyone. They expect to win everytime out."

This season, the Lady Seahawks went 3-2 in the Colonial Athletic Association, good for a top three finish.

"The top three was our preseason goal," said McDaniel. "That goal has been reached. Now we want to finish as one of the top two teams. The finals are a realistic goal for the tournament. Anything else would be a disappointment."

UNCW lost to CAA powerhouses James Madison and William & Mary, but defeated East Carolina, American and George Mason.

"We played most of the conference schools earlier in the year," said assistant Elaine Penn. "We now have different blocking and hitting strategies and we have refined our play sets. We have just as much talent as any of the other schools, but we have to play well every time out to have a chance."

Hopefully McDaniel and her troops will reach their ultimate goal, a CAA championship crown. If the Lady Seahawks play to their potential, the crown is not out of reach. With their new attitude and loads of talent like Mills and Holan, the UNC Wilmington volleyball team may be ready to knock the door in on their first title.

improving but the lack of depth hurts us."

The Lady Tribe of William & Mary captured the women's CAA title by out-distancing George Mason, 30-33.

On the men's five mile course UNCW's Layne Fuller completed the race in 16th place, the highest finish by a Seahawk runner in the history of the race.

The UNC Wilmington men's squad place sixth in the championships with team total 178 points.

The U.S. Naval Academy finished ahead of James Madison by nine points, 39-48 for the men's title.

 UNCW men's Cross Country team competed in the Seahawk Invitational where they placed fifth. The Lady Harriers also finished fifth in the meet.

Kim Jones, playing in her final home game, sets the ball for Rhonda Jackson in a contest against St. Andrews. The Lady 'Hawks capitalized on Jones' sets as they were able to defeat the Lady Knights in three straight games finishing with an undefeated home schedule. The Lady Seahawks return to action this weekend, at East Carolina University, for the Colonial Athletic Association championship.

The UNC Wilmington women's volleyball team swept St. Andrews College in three straight games Thursday night, 15-3, 15-13, 15-4, to win their 23rd game of the season.

UNCW used some great hitting and excellent defense to down the Lady Knights.

"Everyone played very well," said Head Coach Kathy McDaniel who has led UNCW to one of its better seasons in recent years.

"We had great hitting by Lisa Mills and Dede Devoley. Kim Jones and Susie Sineath played great defensively."

Thursday's match was also the last home contest for senior Kim Jones. A setter, Jones has played a key part in UNCW's success this season.

The Lady Seahawks played their last home game Tuesday at Baptist College in Charleston, S.C. They will continue their pursuit for the Colonial Athletic Association crown this weekend at the CAA Volleyball Championships at East Carolina.

Swimmers stroke past Emory in opener

From staff reports

UNC Wilmington's Dave Allen is giving his swimmers high marks following their first appearance of the 1987-88 season, a sweep of visiting Emory University at the Seahawk Natatorium Friday night.

"I was extremely pleased with both men and the women," said Allen, who begins his 11th season at UNCW. "The times were very, very good for us at this point of the year. We normally don't swim this well so early."

The men had no trouble in defeating Emory, rolling to a 128-75 victory. Allen said French native Philippe Roth, who captured the 200 and 500 Freestyle, swam particularly well.

"Philippe did a fine job. We just had outstanding swims down the line from the group."

Allen's women rebounded from disastrous start to nip Emory by just five points. A disqualification in the opening even, the 400 Medley Relay, left the UNCW women with no choice.

Allen said, "Our women hung in there and kept going, despite falling behind early. I was very happy that they won. From top to bottom, everyone contributed."

Three university records were set by the women, all by freshman. Kris Hassell snapped Ellen Chushman's seven-year mark in the 200 Freestyle by recording 1:59.08 time. And Mary Elizabeth Tartar broke longtime records in the 200 Breaststroke (2:28.15) and 200 IM (2:15.35).

The Seahawks travel to Charleston, SC, Saturday for their next meet before returning home to face Duke on Nov. 21.

Green-Gold game IN THE BLEACHERS set for today

From staff reports

Coach Robert McPherson carries his UNC Wilmington basketball team to nearby Jacksonville, NC. Wednesday night for the annual Green-Gold intrasquad scrimmage.

The Seahawks opened practice Oct. 15 in preparation for the season opener Nov. 28 at home against Georgia Southern. UNCW meets the Czechoslovakian national team in an exhibition game Monday at Trask Coliseum. "We have a lot of alumni in the Jacksonville area, so it's an opportunity for them to see our club first-hand," McPherson said of the scrimmage. The Seahawks will split into two teams for the 7 p.m. contest at Jacksonville High School.

"It's also a chance for us to have an actual game-type environment prior to the start of the season."

McPherson is reshaping the Seahawks after the loss of six lettermen from last year's 18-12 squad, including all-time scorer and rebounder

Brian Rowsom. Junior forward Greg Bender (Ross/Fremont, Ohio) and senior guard Mark Gary (Highland/Alexandria, Ind.) are the lone starters back for the Green and Gold.

"We're anticipating a nice turnout in Jacksonville," McPherson added. "We'll have game officials and it will be as close to a real game as we can make it."

Four junior college transfers and three freshmen are expected to contribute heavily to UNCW's rebuilding effort. Larry Houzer (Jefferson State), Antonio Howard (Emmanuel), Willie Williams (Faulkner State) and Tim Brewer (Westark) are the junior college players. Scott Tierney (Homewood-Floresmoore/Homewood, Ill.), Major Wiggins (Jones/Orlando, Fla.) and Brannon Lancaster (Terry Sanford/Fayetteville, NC) are first-year players.

In last year's Green-Gold affair, Rowsom hit 7-of-14 from the field and added 9-of-11 at the free throw line to lead all players with a game-high 23 points. He also added six rebounds in the contest at Camp Lejeune.

Running backs should never, ever do this.

Seahawks to depend on new faces Four JUCOs figure to make biggest impact

Robert McPherson knows there are some major question marks surrounding his UNC Wilmington Seahawks this season. Not surprisingly, he's looking forward to finding the answers amidst a sea of possibilities in 1987-88.

The Seahawks are coming off one of their finest campaigns since entering Division I play 11 years ago. In McPherson's first year at the helm, the club pushed national champion Indiana to the limit in Bloomington, threw a scare into David Robinson's Naval brigade and nearly bagged a first-ever post-season berth for the program.

"It's impossible to replace Brian Rowsom. Instead of depending on one player, we'll be spreading the scoring out between more players. We won't be as big at the center spot, but we'll have better jumpers and more quickness."

-Robert McPherson
UNCW Head Coach

Still, there's work to be done. And McPherson is the first to admit that this year's team must smooth out some rough edges to become the gem of the Colonial Athletic Association this fall.

"I thought we had a good year," McPherson said of '86-87. "We turned around a lot of things in the program that needed to be turned around....like attitude, fan enthusiasm and attendance. I thought the kids played hard and represented our city well.

"We hope to improve even more in each area. I want to build a better schedule against nationally ranked ball clubs and get us into post-season play. That's our goal."

Any analysis of the Seahawks in '87-88 begins at the center position, where all-time leading scorer and rebounder Brian Rowsom has dominated over the last four seasons. Rowsom is now headed for the professional ranks in the National Basketball Association.

"It's impossible to replace Brian Rowsom," McPherson says. "Instead of depending on one player, we'll be spreading the scoring out between more players. We won't be as big at the center spot, but we'll have better jumpers and more quickness."

McPherson brought in a pair of junior college recruits to soften the loss of Rowsom. Larry Houzer, a 6-8, 185-pound jumping jack from Jefferson State Junior College in Birmingham, Ala., and Tim Brewer, a 6-7, 230-pound wide-body from Westark Community College in Fort Smith, Ark., appear to be the remedies.

Houzer averaged 17.8 points and 9.1 rebounds at Jefferson State while shooting 59 percent from the floor and 75 percent at the free throw line. Brewer, meanwhile, led Westark to the national tournament 'by averaging 11.0 points and 7.0 rebounds.

Junior starter Greg Bender returns at one of the forward slots. Out of Fremont, Ohio, Bender averaged 8.1 points and 5.3 rebounds last season and

Speed the key for the Lady Seahawks

The prospect of blending veteran players with young talent has Head Coach Marilyn Christoph excited about the 11th season of UNC Wilmington women's basketball.

As always, speed, and more speed will characterize the Lady Seahawks in 1987-88. But wait, Christoph has a few more surprises in store for the upcoming season.

One of those surprises will be the backcourt area. This area figures to be one of the team's strong suits this season, Christoph says. Mercurial point guard Johnnie Smith, sharpshooter Sissy Morse, and speedster Charlene Page are back and newcomers Rosalyn Flood and Cindy Makowski are expected to contribute immediately.

"We should be very solid at the guard position," said Christoph. Speed will be our strength. If we can learn to play under control and with confidence, we'll be okay. I know we'll have a certain number of turnovers, but I'm willing to gamble with it."

Smith enjoyed 11:3 best season of her career in 1986-87, leading the Colonial Athletic Association in assists with 7.0 assists per game. The junior sparkplug from Nakina, N.C., dished out a school record 15 assists in a rout of Delaware State last January.

Morse, meanwhile, can shoot with the league's best. She hit 53 percent of her shots in averaging 12.9 points a year ago. A senior from Rockingham, N.C., Morse started all 28 games last season.

Page is returning after sitting out last season with a knee injury. The Apex, N.C. sophomore played 24 games during her freshman campaign in 1985-86.

Flood is one of Christoph's newest weapons. The 5-9 transfer from Chowan Junior College averaged 12.6 points, 4.8 rebounds and 3.7 assists for Coach Belinda McKeel earning Player-of-the-Year honors in her conference. Flood may also see time down in the paint where she is an excellent rebounder.

Makowski, a preseason All-Freshman honoree by the Women's Basketball News Service, comes to UNCW after playing at Holy Family Academy in Bayonne, New York. According to Christoph, Makowski should see plenty of playing time behind Smith due to her court prowess and excellent vision of the court.

The forward slot is difficult to analyze because Christoph's one-guard offense and abundance of versatile talent on this year's squad. Without question, several players will end up playing on the wings in 1987-88.

Another newcomer, freshman Jennifer Bennett of Union Pines High School in Cameron, N.C. could have a major impact along the baseline this fall. The 5-11 Bennett averaged 19.7 points and 8.5

rebounds a contest at Union Pines, making 60 percent of her shots from the field and 55 percent from the free throw line.

An All-East selection, Bennett was a three-year starter for Coach Bobby Purvis, scoring 1,408 points during her prep career.

"Jennifer may be our most versatile player," said Christoph. "She jumps very well, is physical and rebounds solid. She should be real valuable to us this year."

With Smith running the offense, Morse, Page and Flood will all play out on the wing.

A banner recruiting year gives Christoph the most height and deepest crop of post players since she arrived a decade ago.

Topping the list is senior Sharon McDowell, or "Mac" to her peers, a 5-8 blue collar worker under the basket. The Elizabethtown, N.C., product led the nation's NCAA Division I schools in field goal percentage last season, hitting 68.6 percent from the floor.

"Mac doesn't do anything fancy, but gets the job done. She has a unique way of getting position under the basket. She was the most underate player in the conference last year."

After McDowell, three freshmen - Denise Bailey, Kelly Kincaid and Christina Taylor - are lined up to provide additional strenght in the middle.

We have a good blend of senior leadership and youth. If the two can learn to work together, we can have a very successful season.

- Marilyn Christoph UNCW women's coach

The 5-11 Bailey comes to UNCW from North Iredell High School in Statesville, N.C., where she collected 12.5 points and 9.3 rebounds for Coach Kent Backwelder's squad last season. Bailey made the All-Conference and All-Northwest team as North Iredell finished second in the North Carolina AAA wars.

A 6-0 center, Kincaid has been one of the stalwarts over the past four seasons at Frank Cox High School in Virginia Beach, Va. She scored 1,012 points in helping Coach Stuart Holland's team post an 88-14 record during that period.

Taylor, the tallest player on the roster at 6-2, has the potential to make an immediate impact this season. She averaged 13.4 points and 8.2 rebounds at Pine Forest High School rolled to a 24-4 record.

Christoph said, "Christina has the potential and ability to do as well as any player to come through the program. She has a good touch, runs the court extremely well and can pull the ball off the rim."

The elements are in place: speed, height, accurate shooters. If her young talent only materializes, Christoph could be looking at another stellar campaign.

"These freshmen are definitely going to have to mature quickly," she said. "They can't wait until mid-season to mature. They have to be ready by early December."

was named Academic All-Conference in the CAA.

"Greg needs to increase his point production to double figures. He's one of the fiercest competitors on the ball club, and a lot of our forward success depends on how well he improves his game."

Contenders for the other forward spot include returnees Roy Walker (6-6, 195, Sr.), Jeff Brannen (6-7, 220, Sr.) and freshmen Scott Tierney (6-6, 210, Fr.).

"I think we'll be stronger there," he said. "I thought one of our weaknesses last year was at the guard position. A lot of that had to do with the injury to (Adam) Porter. We should be deeper and more talented at the guard spot."

McPherson predicts the biggest difference in the Seahawks this season will be at guard, where UNCW appears to have more depth than in recent years.

Sandy Anderson and Rob Wagner have departed, but shed no tears for McPherson. Back are sharpshooter deluxe Mark Gary (7.1 ppg, 1.6 rpg), the fiesty Porter (6.1 ppg, 1.9 rpg) and versatile Ricky Griffin (3.7 ppg, 2.5 rpg). Providing Porter recovers fully from a severe knee injury, all three could see considerable action this fall.

McPherson believes his recruits in the backcourt will shine for the Seahawks. JUCO transfers Antonio Howard (Emmanuel) and Willie "Ice" Williams (Faulkner State) are coming in with experience and savvy. Brannon Lancaster out of Terry Sandford High School in nearby Fayetteville gives UNCW another dead-eye shooter who connected on 60 percent of his attempts in the prep ranks.

The second-year mentor is looking forward to '87-88 after taking the Seahawks for in the usual adjustment year.

"When I started out last year, I knew nothing about the kids," he added, "and they knew nothing about me. At least 50 percent of the team knows me this year, and they know what I want. That's a 50 percent increase from one year ago."

"I'm much more comfortable, but we have a lot of work to do. You don't lose two players like Brian Rowsom and Sandy Anderson and not miss them."

"We have better speed and more quickness than last season, but this ball club is an inexperienced one. We're probably a year away from being a real fine basketball team."

"I think the key to this team is not how good or big we are. It's how quickly we come together and establish a team chemistry. If we can establish that, this team has some possibilities."

Men's coach begins second UNCW campaign

McPherson writes new Seahawk chapter

A near-upset of national champion Indiana...A 21-point bombing of Richmond...David Robinson's 17-foot eraser at the buzzer...And, of course, "the shot" of Brian Rowsom in the opening round of the CAA tournament.

Just a few of the roller coaster emotions that Robert McPherson experienced during his first season as UNC Wilmington's basketball coach.

McPherson put the Seahawk cage program on strong footing in his inaugural season with the Green and Gold. UNCW swept to an 18-12 overall record and finished second to Robinson and Navy in the Colonial Athletic Association with an 11-6 mark.

Numerous school records were smashed as McPherson molded the Seahawks into a respected contender. That resulted in a record seven television appearances and valuable national exposure. The Seahawks established new home and away attendance records, playing before the largest crowds ever.

In 1986-87, McPherson's club led the Colonial Athletic Association in three categories: free throw percentage (.700), three-point accuracy (.401) and team defense (.422). The Seahawks recorded their best record and highest finish in the conference since joining the CAA three years ago.

A native of Decatur, Texas, the soft-spoken McPherson learned early that James Naismith's game held a special place in his heart. He coached at five different high schools in the Lone Star State from 1964 to 1977, compiling a remarkable 293-107 (.733) record during that 13-year period and earning nine Coach-of-the-Year awards at the prep level.

McPherson received his first crack at the college game in 1977 when Western Oklahoma State College hired him to establish its program. He wasted no time in bringing success to Altus, posting a 24-7 record that first season - being named Oklahoma Junior College Coach-of-the-Year - and building a 70-21 (.769) record over three years.

Following a one-year stint as an assistant at Cameron University in Lawton, Oklahoma, McPherson was lured away by Sam Houston State University in Huntsville, Texas. Again, it took no time for the successful coach to make a name for the Bearkat program.

From 1981 to 1986, McPherson and Sam Houston State enjoyed great success. He piloted the Bearkats to a 22-9 record his first season and followed up with 20-10, 17-10, 16-12 and 27-6 campaigns for a five-year record of 102-47 (.684).

McPherson's final year at Sam Houston may have been his finest. In 1985-86, the Bearkats enjoyed the second best record in the school's history at 27-6, including a 20-game winning streak. The team was only the second Sam Houston squad to go undefeated at home with a 15-0 record on its own court. McPherson also directed Sam Houston to a 16-0 home mark in 1981-82.

One of the highlights of his Sam Houston career came two years ago when the Bearkats defeated NCAA Tournament-bound Arkansas-Little Rock on the road during the regular season and finished ranked No. 4 in the NCAA Division II ranks.

McPherson, who needs just 17 victories to reach the coveted 500-win mark in his coaching career, is recognized as one of the country's top tacticians. McPherson has won 72 percent of his games in the prep and college ranks, compiling a 483-187 record.

Remarkably, his teams have averaged 22.0 victories over 22 seasons and he has never had a losing season. Never.

The home and conference records of McPherson's teams have been outstanding. In 22 seasons, McPherson has won 78 percent of all conference matchups and over the last six campaigns, his clubs have won 91 percent their home games, going a phenomenal 118-11 during that period.

His first year at UNCW featured not only improvements on the court but off the court as well. A new team bus was acquired, the lockerroom facilities were upgraded, new uniforms were purchased and general support for the Seahawks reached a fever pitch.

McPherson and his wife, Linda, have two children: Kent and Kristi.

Assistants do more than just coach

When you watch a UNCW game, you may notice how Head Coach Robert McPherson works the game. What you don't see or hear about is the work McPherson's three assistants do. Bob Rosenkranz, Lee Hood, and Cletus Green do some of the most unheralded and most important work in building the UNCW basketball program.

These three men not only help McPherson devise a game plan through scouting and coaching, but they handle recruiting, assist the UNCW basketball players through study halls, grade checks, arranging tutors, and making arrangements for the opposing teams lockerroom facilities.

"It takes more than one coach to be successful," McPherson said. "Assistants help alot on the Division I level. They cover many different areas that are important to the program."

Rosenkranz is involved in all aspects of the program, assisting in recruiting, coaching, heading the strength and conditioning program and providing academic guidance.

Hood is the programs chief recruiter, telephoning, writing and visiting prospective student-athletes. He also scouts Seahawk opponents and assist with the conditioning program and study halls.

Green brings the largest amount of basketball experience to the UNCW program. He assists with recruiting, floor coaching and local promotions. Green has been in coaching for 32 years and as a head coach for 27 of those years, Green compiled a 547-267 record.

"All of my assistants are very smart about basketball," said McPherson. "They contribute greatly to the success of the program."

So the next time you glance down at the UNCW bench, remember, it would not be possible without a total team effort, including the assistant coaches.

Returners assume new roles

Bender set to emerge for UNCW

Junior Greg Bender is entering his third year as a Seahawk, on a team that is looking for a leader. Bender could emerge as that person to pick up the leadership responsibilities, brought about because of the graduation of Sandy Anderson and Brian Rowson.

Bender, a starter in his initial collegiate game, has always been viewed as a steady and consist competitor. His court savvy and aggressive style of defense will be counted on considerably this season. His intelligence towards the game of basketball has also carried into the classroom where he was selected Colonial All-Academic last year.

In just two seasons Bender has already been involved in some important moments in UNCW basketball history. Possibly the biggest being last December when Bender found himself with the ball, four second left and the chance to knock off the eventual national champions, Indiana. UNCW playing in the Indiana Classic lost to the Hoosiers by single point, 73-72.

A week later, the Seahawks traveled to Atlantic Coast Conference country and faced inter-state rival Wake Forest with the opportunity to upset the Demon Deacons. Bender came to the charity stripe with 15 seconds left in the contest and the 'Hawks down, 55-54, he sank two of the most crucial free throws a player could be asked to attempt. Unfortunately UNCW was beaten by a buzzer-beating prayer by Mark Kline.

Over the entire 1986-87 season Bender averaged 8.1 points a game and 5.3 rebounds. Last season also saw

Griffin sets JUCO example

Everyone is talking about the post-Rowson era that is to begin for the UNCW Seahawks this season. Who will assume the leadership role? Who will pick up the scoring and rebounding load? These responsibilities may fall on transfer players like second-year Seahawk Ricky Griffin.

Griffin, a 6-3 junior, playing in his second season for the 'Hawks after transferring from Allen County Community College will try to pick up where he left off last season. Griffin's explosive ability shined brightly in the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament final when he came off the bench in the second half to ignite the Seahawks against conference foe Navy. The second half of the game belonged to Griffin as he contributed 12 points off the bench. The Seahawks dropped the contest, 53-50, but the stage is set for Ricky Griffin.

"I am ready to accept the leadership role," remarked

Griffin. "I want the team to turn to me. I would like to be the one looked at in pressure situations."

As many of this year's new players have to do, Griffin had to make an adjustment from junior college to Division I basketball. After an illustrious career at ACCC, Griffin packed his bags and headed east. He entered into a program with six returning seniors. Many did not expect him to jump right in and contribute, but on numerous occasions his presence was felt.

When asked about the transformation from JUCO to Division I, Griffin remarks, "The biggest difference to me as a player is the fact that the competition is consistently tough. The tactics are drastically different. You must communicate on this level."

Another attribute of Griffin's which he credits due to the fact that he had to come into a new last year...scored a career high 23 points versus UNC Asheville in a 88-44 win, 1-8-87...played for Coach Carl Chesnutt at Nakina High...was team MVP for three years...also played softball in high school.

Christoph on Smith: "Johnnie is what gets our offense going. She loves to push the ball upcourt and that is our greatest asset. A year's experience has helped her immensely."

A major addition to the Lady Seahawk program...has the potential to do a number of great things...needs to learn how to use her size...will make a big impact on the CAA...gives Christoph a true post player for the first time in three seasons...was all everything at Pine Forest High in Fayetteville...scored 1098 points in her prep career...shot 53 percent from the floor her senior season in averaging 13.4 points and 8.2 rebounds a contest for Coach Tom Jackson...was an All-Conference and All-East selection her senior season...also played volleyball and ran track...daughter of Mary Taylor.

Christoph on Taylor: "Christina has the potential to be a big impact player in the conference. She gives us something we haven't had in a while, height. I look for many great things from her not only this year, but during rest of her career."

CHRISTINA TAYLOR
6-2, 155
Freshman from Fayetteville, NC

AMY WILLIFORD
5-10, 140
Sophomore from Jamestown, NC

Not a fancy player, but gives Christoph a solid player off the bench...a good athlete who needs to develop her raw talent...played a backup role as a freshman and averaged 1.4 points and 1.0 rebounds in her initial season...scored a career-high eight points at UNC Asheville shots from the charity stripe (13-of-15) last year...a four-year starter for Coach Julia Hinkle at Ragsdale High...first person to

UNCW searches for eighth straight winning season

Lady 'Hawks excel with stable leadership

Christoph continues her winning ways

The energetic Christoph needed just one year before continuing her winning ways in the Port City. The Seahawks went 9-15 that inaugural year in 1979-80, but Christoph has since reeled off seven straight winning seasons. Four years ago, her team finished 22-6 and averaged 83.1 points per game, among the highest in the country.

Christoph is responsible for UNCW's smooth transition into NCAA Division I competition as well. The Lady Seahawks own a 50-34 record since reaching the D-I level in 1984-85, including an 18-18 scorecard against Colonial Athletic Association opponents.

Christoph earned her B.S. Degree in Physical Education and Social Studies from Appalachian State University in 1964.

It's no surprise that Marilyn Christoph is UNC Wilmington's all-time winningest women's basketball coach. The Dyersville, Iowa, native enters her 24th season as a head coach, and ninth with the Seahawk program in 1987-88.

Christoph has a string of seven consecutive winning seasons alive heading into the fall schedule. An avid student of the game, she directed UNCW to the second highest victory total in the school's history last season as the Seahawks soared to a 19-9 mark.

Christoph, who has won more than 60 percent of her games at UNC Wilmington, thrives on success. After an outstanding high school coaching career, she made her debut at Pembroke State University, coaching the Braves to a 36-31 mark in three seasons.

A smile of success

Success has smiled on Christoph as she is UNCW's winningest women's basketball coach with a 130-85 record in nine years.

Gerdes plays vital role

Former collegiate standout Cathy Gerdes heads into her third season as the top assistant for UNC Wilmington's growing women's basketball program.

Gerdes, 28, joined the UNCW staff in 1985-86 after serving as a graduate assistant at the University of Iowa. At Iowa, Gerdes helped the Lady Hawkeyes turn a last place finish in 1983-84 into a second-place record of 20-8 in 1984-85.

At UNCW, Gerdes is the top recruiter and academic advisor for the women's team. She also supervises the team's weight training program.

A native of Muskogee, Okla., Gerdes earned her B.S. Degree in Physical Education from the University of Oklahoma in 1983, playing four years on the Lady Sooners basketball squad. She received her M.S. Degree in Physical Education from the University of Iowa in 1985.

Lady Seahawk Sharon McDowell goes up strong against an opponent.

The attack of Mac

When you think of a "Mac Attack," you might conjure up thoughts of a thick, juicy slab of beef, sizzling on the shiny grill. At the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, however, it is the powerful inside play and dead-eye shooting of Sharon McDowell, the nation's top field goal shooter in 1986-87.

McDowell, a 5-8, 165-pound native of Elizabethtown, N.C., led the nation by making 67.7 percent of her field goal attempts last year. But Head Coach Marilyn Christoph remembers a time when the senior forward struggled with her offense.

"Her concentration was poor and she couldn't hit a thing," Christoph said. "It was so frustrating because she was missing so many high percentage shots."

After minimal playing time her freshman year, McDowell was thrust into the starting lineup because of an injury to starter Sue Dean her sophomore year. McDowell's shooting woes continued until Christoph came up with the perfect remedy.

It's called a "Box-Box" drill. A ball is put on either side of the paint area and the player must pick up the ball and power it to the basket. So many baskets are required in a certain period of time or the player runs sprints.

"It really helps a player with their inside game and concentration," Christoph said. "With Sharon, it really started paying dividends."

The drill helped McDowell improve steadily two ago and she responded with then career-highs of 16 points and 13 rebounds in a loss at Virginia Commonwealth late in the season. She was voted the team's Most Improved Player after averaging 6.6 points and 6.8 rebounds.

In 1986-87, the Lady Seahawks posted a 19-9 record and finished fourth in the country in field goal percentage with 52.5 percent from the floor. McDowell was a big reason for that ranking because the blue collar inside player made 170-of-251 attempts, including 72 percent (85-of-118) in Colonial Athletic Association play.

Nationally, she finished ahead of Tresa Spaulding of Brigham Young and Rutgers's Regina Howard. Only five players less than 6-0 tall were included among the nation's top 25 shooters, and McDowell held that distinction.

Because of the spectacular turnaround, Christoph renamed the old "Box-Box" drill.

"I will always remember it as the 'Mac-Mac' drill because Sharon was one player who turned her game around 180 degrees because of it," Christoph said.

You won't find any golden arches adorning the sidewalk in front of UNC Wilmington's Trask Coliseum. Yet the number one item on the Lady Seahawk menu is a "Mac Attack," served with a smile by Sharon McDowell.

Veterans will key Richmond to the top

1. Richmond

The 1987-88 University of Richmond basketball squad will have quite a similarity to last year's team that went 15-14 and finished in a tie for third in the league race. It is for this reason that Coach Dick Tarrant's squad is an odds-on favorite to take the CAA title.

Back for the '87-88 campaign are two inside players that Tarrant will rely upon very much to take control of the boards. Peter Woolfolk, UR's top scorer (13.9) and rebounder (8.1) and Steve Kratzer (67.3% shooting from the floor) will anchor the Spider's inside attack.

The problem for UR last season was their poor outside shooting. Although they sport one of the better backcourts in CAA Freshman-of-the-Year Ken Atkinson and senior Rodney Rice, UR guards combined to shoot less than 45 percent.

Knowing that the Spiders were weak on the outside in regards to shooting, Tarrant and his staff went looking for an impact shooter. What they found was 6-6 swingman Bebe Bocachica from Puerto Rico. Bebe may just be the answer to their outside weakness. If he gets going early, it will open Richmond's inside game and give the Spider's one of the better balanced teams in the CAA.

One other plus in the Spider's favor is their solid bench. Besides returning five starters, Tarrant can call on three talented guards - William Massenburg, Benly Taylor and Eric English - and solid backups for the inside in junior Mike Winnecki, Paul Webb, a 6-9 player from Australia, and 7-0 transfer Gary Rich from Ohio State.

If the Spiders are to capture the CAA crown, they must not allow their opponents to run over them. With speedy teams like UNC Wilmington and James Madison, the lack of team speed may be the only thing keeping Richmond from the NCAA tournament. If Tarrant finds someone with a good outside touch, CAA teams will have a big headache to contend with.

2. James Madison

Like most teams in the CAA, James Madison and Head Coach John Thurston are without a dominating center. What they lack in height, JMU easily makes up in speed.

The Dukes return seven of its top nine players from last year's 20-10 team that went to the NIT, but lost their top scorer and rebounder. Of the players returning, Thurston will have comfort in returning the league's top point guard, Benny Gordon. The senior guard, who was a JUCO transfer last year, Gordon averaged 11.8 points a game and dished out a school record 221 assists.

The other player that will have an impact on the JMU fortunes is All-CAA candidate Kennard Winchester. The junior forward averaged 13.6 points and played in the shadows of Second Team All-CAA selection John Newman, who has since graduated.

The Dukes do sport one of the bigger big men in the conference with 6-11 Thom Brand. But Brand has been ineffective and slows the JMU speed attack down.

If Thurston can combine the nine old faces with the six new faces, JMU could run their way past Richmond to the CAA crown. JMU is a good bet to repeat their 1987 appearance in the NIT, but Thurston and company could be in the NCAA.

With speed on their side, the slow-footed Spiders of Richmond could feel the bark of the Dukes come March.

3. UNC Wilmington

How do you replace your school's all-time player. Simple, find some immediate help in the junior college ranks. That is exactly what Head Coach Robert McPherson did in trying to replace Brian Rowsom, now of the NBA ranks.

McPherson knows you can't replace a player of Rowsom's caliber over-night, so McPherson got two players to share the load. Larry Houzer, a 6-8 leaper from Jefferson State in Alabama, and Tim Brewer, a 6-7 wide body from WestArk Community College in Arkansas will give UNCW plenty of scoring and rebounding. Couple this with returning juniors Greg Bender and Ricky Griffin, senior Roy Walker, and UNCW will have a quick solid frontcourt.

In the backcourt, McPherson went for speed and shooting, ala James Madison, and found Willie Williams and Antonio Howard to team with senior sharpshooter Mark Gary. It is at the guard position that the Seahawks will be vastly improved.

Besides the JUCO help, McPherson has some talented freshmen at his disposal. Major Wiggins, a 6-7 jumping jack, 6-0 Brannon Lancaster and 6-6 Scott Tierney will give UNCW one of the better benches they have had in recent years.

If McPherson can find a team chemistry, the Seahawks and James Madison may just have enough talent and speed to run down the Spiders of Richmond.

4. George Mason

New coach Rick Barnes takes over a Patriot squad that he helped recruit several years ago when he was an assistant to former coach Joe Harrington. It is a squad that has some question marks, but has enough talent to cause some severe headaches in the CAA.

Returning for Barnes from last year's 15-13 squad is First Team All-CAA player Kenny Sanders. Considered a stud by most in the CAA, Sanders will again lead a GMU team that, like most in the conference, lack a true center. Sanders will combine with senior Brian Miller on a frontcourt that will feature exclusively Sanders.

The backcourt is one of the stronger areas for Barnes. Back is the pudgy "Amp Davis who

See MEN'S CAA, page 12

James Madison to continue their reign

1. James Madison

The key word for Head Coach Sheila Moorman is "chemistry." How well will seven veterans and five newcomers blend together. With a returning post-player like Sydney Beasley, Moorman will not have too many worries.

Beasley, a senior, was the conference's player-of-the-year last season and is a great bet to repeat. Senior Alisa Harris (6-0) will combine with Beasley and junior guard Donna Budd to give Moorman and the Lady Dukes a more than balanced offense.

The Lady Dukes' recruiting class includes all-state guards Nickie Hardison and Paula Schuler and all-state forward Vicki Harris. These youngsters will get plenty of playing time and will prove to be a solid bench for JMU when tournament time comes calling.

This season won't be as spectacular as the last two (27-4 last season), but Moorman and crew should have enough to ride their way back into the NCAA tournament.

2. East Carolina

Three starters return from last year's 16-13 squad that finished second to JMU and new coach Pat Pierson has some of the better athletes in the conference.

Returning are 6-0 senior Monique Pompili, the team's leading scorer in 1986-87, 6-2 junior center Gretta O'Neal, and 5-9 junior Chris O'Connor.

With the talent, Pierson should have no problem leading the Lady Pirates to another second place finish.

3. UNC Wilmington
Head Coach Marilyn Christoph return the nation's leading field goal shooter and probably one of the league's best three-point shooters. Combine this with a host of talented newcomers and Christoph should easily have her eighth consecutive winning campaign.

Sharon McDowell led the nation with a fantastic 67.7% mark from the field. Combined with Sissy Morse's career 50% shooting and Johnnie Smith leading the league in assists again, the Lady Seahawks should have quite a balanced team.

Add newcomers like 6-2 center Christina Taylor and 6-0 Jennifer Bennett and UNCW should have one of their better teams in recent years.

4. Richmond

Four returning starters and a good crop of freshman and the Lady Spiders of Coach Stephanie Gaitley should once again challenge the CAA's upper division.

Center Laurie Governor, an All-CAA selection, and 1987 CAA Rookie-of-the-Year, 5-6 Pam Bryant will give UR a balanced offense. Senior guard Dana Pappas will provide the outside shooting and the crucial leadership.

The Spiders won't catch JMU or ECU, but should battle UNCW for third.

5. American

Head Coach Linda Ziemke lost two impact players in Kelly Lane, an All-CAA selection and Jody Thornton, also All-CAA, led the conference in 3-point percentage. Earl Moore will team with Davis in a backcourt that has to play and shoot well to open things up inside for Sanders. If the outside shooting goes and opponents are able to key on Sanders, the Patriots will be in for a cold winter.

See WOMEN'S CAA, page 12

5. Navy

Head Coach Pete Hermann would love to have superstar David Robinson back for one more year. The CAA is glad he's gone and Navy is going to have to face reality, their chances of winning the conference crown for a fourth consecutive year are very slim.

The well isn't really dry, but Navy will have a hard time reaching their previous heights.

Back for the Middies are three players who will carry the bulk of the Navy load. Senior guard Cliff Rees will give Hermann some outside stability, while 6-7 junior Derric Turner, 6-5 Craig Prather will compliment a developing 6-9 sophomore Bryron Hopkins. Hopkins is a definite talent who should have gained from playing against Robinson in practice for a year, but it is unlikely he will reach Robinson's stature.

Navy did get two USA Today honorable mention 6-1 freshmen, Erik Harris and Joe Gottschalk, but the transition to the Naval Academy as a freshman is very tough so don't look for these two to contribute immediately.

Navy will be competitive and could still finish in the upper division of the CAA. Hermann and the Navy faithful will really miss Robinson come March.

6. American

At last they have a home court, which is good for at least three more wins a year. What they don't have is 25.2 point scorer Frank Ross. The key to Head Coach Ed Tapscott's 1987-88 squad is if the newcomers can produce immediately. If so, American could work themselves into the upper division.

Back for the Eagles is guards Chuck West, All-CAA rookie Mike Sumner and Mike Sampson. Newcomers to the guard position are touted Dale Spears of Florida and Brock Wortman. This will give Tapscott a decent backcourt, but upfront is where he is hurting most.

Andy Bon Salle (6-7) and Tom Scherer 6-9 give Tapscott a tall but ineffective frontline. Help may be found in 6-8 freshman Ron Davenport and transfers Clarence Ingram (6-5) and Daryl Holmes (6-7).

With any kind of solid frontcourt contributions, American could surprise some people.

7. William & Mary

Four starters return from last season's 5-22 squad and the William & Mary program seems to be making its turnaround to prosperity. The Tribe have a new coach, former Duke assistant Chuck Swenson, and a feeling that things will get better.

For 1987-88, things will get better. W&M will not finish last, edging out the depleted East Carolina Pirates. Things have been so bad in Williamsburg in the past few years, eight to 10 wins will be very welcomed.

Swenson inherits a squad that returns seven. Highlighting the returning corps is 6-0 guard Curtis Pride. The sophomore is a quick point man that could develop into a better than average guard. Matt Reilly, a 5-11 sophomore may also see time at the point, but Pride has the most potential.

Teaming with Pride in the backcourt is junior Greg Burzell. The 6-5 Burzell is not the type of guard that Swenson needs to compete in the CAA with the Benny Gordon types, but his hands are tied as to what he can put on the floor.

The front court is even weaker, but with ECU being down and Swenson's new approach, William & Mary should climb out of the cellar for the first time since 1984-85.

8. East Carolina

First year coach Mike Steele will have a difficult road ahead of him as he tries to mesh a team together out of controversy. Blue Edwards, East Carolina's only returning star off of the last season's 12-16 team, has been declared ineligible due to disciplinary actions.

With the loss of Edwards, Steele will turn to guard Jeff Kelly for a leadership role. Kelly the only returning player with any experience. Steele will have a supporting cast of one JUCO transfer, 6-6 Dominique Martin, a redshirt sophomore and five freshmen.

The Pirate program is a couple of years away from regaining its stability. Five to eight wins will be viewed as an accomplishment for this squad. Don't expect a legitimate threat from ECU this year.

Junior Sissy Morse blocks out for a rebound against the Lady Patriots of George Mason. Morse has been the outside threat for the Lady 'Hawks over the last two years. Morse coupled with Sharon McDowell will lead the offensive attack this season for the Lady Seahawks.

Women's CAA

from last year's 20-8 squad.

Beth Shearer, a 6-1 All-CAA selection, 6-2 Kia Cooper, and 6-2 newcomer Ana Marjanovic will give AU the tallest frontline in the conference, but talent wise, they will sorely miss Thornton and Lane.

6. George Mason

Mason returns 6-0 center Beverly McLaughlin and 5-10 Jeannine Jimenez, but the team must show more consistency than last season if they are to improve on 1986-87's 11-17 record.

Six-three Karen Bruining, 6-2 Lynn Dorsey and High School All-American Cindy Baruch will add some much needed height to Coach Jim Lewis' squad, but they will find the CAA waters too deep to find the upper division.

7. William & Mary

Three seniors return, but W&M lack enough talent to get out of the CAA cellar. Debbie Wade, a 5-11 post-player leads the group hard-pressed to win for Coach Pat Megel.

These two superstars, Brian Rowsom (UNCW) and David Robinson (USNA), will be sorely missed in the CAA, but new many faces will attempt to fill their shoes.

Kentucky

The Wildcats, with Rex Chapman and the new young cast, are a sure shot to take it all. In the backcourt with Chapman and Ed Davender, a 15-point scorer, that will give Kentucky one of the most solid backcourts in basketball. In the frontcourt, Winston Bennett will return from his knee injury with rookie Ron Ellis, to produce a great inside game, a game that Kentucky could not find last year.

On the wing freshman Eric Manu will give the Cat's another good shooter and an added rebounder to help Bennett and Ellis. With this added inside game, the Wildcats will have the ability to let both Chapman and Davender light it up from the outside. This could be the teams only fault if the guards decide to shoot too much. Head coach Eddie Sutton and the Wildcat fans will have a lot to cheer about in Rupp Arena with the new cast this year after having a down year by Kentucky standards with 11 losses in 1986-87. Coach Sutton will have a team that will win their 37th SEC title, as well as the national championship.

Last years record 18-11

2. Michigan

This season Coach Bill Frieder has All-American guard Gary Grant, the Big Ten's leading scorer and that alone may be enough. Grant, a senior, will have plenty of assistance in carrying out Frieder's grand plan. Joining Grant off last season's 20-12 team is the Big Ten's number two rebounder, forward Glen Rice, and Mark Hughes.

The loudest noise in Ann Arbor, Mich. is not over this, but the debut of three high school All-Americans that were lost last season because of Proposition 48. Forwards Sean Higgins and Terry Mills, 6-8 and 6-10 respectively, may become the strongest tandem in the paint for several years to come. Joining Higgins and Mills is 6-2 guard Rumeal Robinson. With Grant's guidance Robinson has the chance to mature and develop into a serious backcourt threat of his own.

With this much talent it appears as if Coach Frieder's squad will not receive a serious threat but the Big Ten schedule should resolve this problem. If Michigan is able to survive conference play they will be there come time to make travel plans for Kansas City.

3. Syracuse

Many people felt that Syracuse was a surprise Final Four member last year but this season they are a legitimate contender. The Orangemen return three of last year's brightest stars in the bodies of 6-10 senior Rony Seikaly, 6-9 sophomore Derrick Coleman, and 6-0 Sherman Douglas. Seikaly and last season's freshman sensation, Coleman form one of the most impressive twin towers in the collegiate ranks. The job of getting the ball inside this season is that of the fluid moving Douglas. Douglas reads defenses as well as any one in the land last year, but his specialty may be playing "D".

If anything Syracuse may lack depth and that is when they will turn to sophomores Keith Hughes and Stevie Thompson for assistance. Last season's Proposition 48 casualty Earl Duncan will be looked upon considerably.

The intimidating inside play Seikaly and Coleman accompanied by the sweet ball movement of Douglas will give Coach Jim Boeheim and the boisterous Carrier Dome crowd something to cheer about. Look for SU to be the Beast from the East in late March.

Last year's record 31-4

4. Purdue

The Boilermakers return a solid team for coach Gene Keady this year. At the guard position is the pure shooter Troy Lewis, a stand out player at the World University Games this past summer. With Lewis and Stephens on the outside, the Boilermakers have two shooters to compliment the two returnees on the inside. With both Todd Mitchell and Melvin McCants, Purdue will have a good inside game that should make up around 30 points a game.

Since the Big Ten is going to be so strong in Michigan, Indiana and Iowa, Purdue will experience so many very tough games. Coach Keady will have a team that will make a run at the Big Ten title as well as the national championship this year.

Last year's record 25-5

5. Pittsburgh

Coach Paul Evans has the making of a dream team with Charles Smith, Jerome Lane, and Demetreus Gore. Smith, a 6-10 senior, will be looked upon to increase his scoring this season and if that happens the Panthers will cruise. Lane's presence underneath the bucket, as he led the nation in rebounding last year, may be the ticket for Pitt.

Gore will be joined in the backcourt with junior Mark Goodson and backed up by season's sixth-man Rob Brooklin, a 6-5 sophomore.

Evans, a great tactician, will guide the Panthers into the NCAA were they may waltz in the "Big Dance."

UK's

Last year's record 25-8

6. Indiana

As returning National Champs, Indiana fields a team that will have a strong nucleus. The team's leadership as well as most of the scoring will come from center Dean Garrett, guard/forward Rick Calloway and guard Keith Smart.

Since the graduation of Steve Alford, the Hoosiers will find its heart and soul in these three players. Coach Bob Knight will have strong bench that should help in the stretch run. Expect Indiana to do well, even though they are in the very tough Big Ten.

Last year's record 30-4

7. North Carolina

Coach Dean Smith has J.R. Reid and tradition going for him this season. Reid, 6-9 sophomore, the most dominating freshman last season will again be the force inside for the Heels this season.

Junior guard Jeff Lebo and 6-10 sophomore Scott Williams will be looked upon considerably. The biggest hole to fill this year will be that of point guard Kenny Smith. Prep All-American King Rice has the inside shot at the play-making position. If all the factors fall into place Coach Smith may not need to depend so heavily on the mystic and tradition of Carolina basketball.

Last years record 32-4

8. Louisville

After coming off a dismal 18-14 season, the Cardinal's expect to rebound this season. For coach Denny Crum, Pervis Ellison will have a cast of veterans and one key freshman in LaBraford Smith. Smith is one of the most highly-touted freshman coming into the season and should give Keith Williams a run for his job.

U of L will get consistent play to surround Ellison in key returnees Hebert Crook and Tony Kimbro giving the Cardinal's a strong frontline. Expect Coach Crum's team to take the Metro with little trouble and be a force come NCAA time.

Last year's record 18-11

9. Arizona

Veterans is the key word in the Arizona Wildcat's gym this year. Coach Lute Olson has his entire frontline of a year ago back and are ready to storm through the PAC-10.

The main ingredient missing from last season's squad was point guard and team motivator Steve Kerr who was lost to pre-season knee injury. Kerr is ready to play along with the Wildcats leading scorer Sean Elliot, both are top cats in Olson's plans this season. Look for the sun to shine brightly on the Wildcats.

Last years record 18-12

10. Duke

The Blue Devils will be a strong team to contend with this year because of the four returning starters. Coach Krzyzewski will have pure shooter Kevin Stickland at one guard, and the frontline will be very solid with John Smith, Bill King, and Danny Ferry.

One key problem facing Duke is replacing Tommy Amaker (Can it be done?), which will be done with the play of Quin Snyder. The Devil's will have great play off the bench with Robert Brickey, Phil Henderson, and freshman Greg Koubek. The Blue Devils will contend with North Carolina for the ACC title and should do real well come March.

Last year's record 24-9

11. Kansas

Kansas will center its attack around consensus All-American and possible Player-of-the-Year Danny Manning. Coach Larry Brown has a junior college transfer in 6-10 Marvin Branch that could have more national impact than any other transfer in the country.

With the departure of Cedric Hunter, the Jayhawk's will miss leadership and experience that they will have to find in Manning. The supporting cast will be made up of returners Chris Piper (forward), Kevin Pritchard (guard), and returning from knee injury, senior forward Archie Marshall. Coach Brown should enjoy his last year with Manning and the Jayhawks should give Missouri a contest for the Big Eight title.

Last year's record 25-11

12. Temple

Give head coach John Chaney five players and he will make them a winner. Chaney, a born winner, has four of last season's starters back from a team that was undefeated in the Atlantic 10.

Senior guard Howard Evans is the catalyst behind this high powered offense. Evans will be dishing the ball inside to 6-9 senior forward Tim Perry and the bulkster 6-10, 260 lbs forward Ramon Rivas.

Mark Macon, the high school Player-of-the-Year in Michigan last year, should join Evans in the backcourt. Macon, a scoring machine in the prep ranks, will enable the Owls to fly into post-season play.

Last years record 32-4

13. Iowa

National Coach-of-the-Year, Tom Davis will rely heavily on the playing experience of guard B.J. Armstrong and forward Roy Marble in order to have a successful season.

Marble will generate a lot of scoring for the Hawkeyes and should be the man with the come crunch time. Although Iowa did graduate three players, the team should not look that different because of the many substitutions that are made by Coach Davis. Jeff Moe will again lead the team in three-point percentage and Al Lorenzen will see a lot of playing time also.

Since Iowa is in one of the most competitive conferences in the country, the Big Ten, they will have their share of setbacks, but don't count the Hawkeye's out in March.

14. Missouri

The Tigers have one of the most explosive offensive weapons in the nation in the form of Derrick "Band-Aid" Cheivous. Cheivous has broken all scoring records at Mizzou and still has one more season.

Cheivous will be coupled on the frontline with junior Mike Sandbothe. The low post position will again belong to 7-0 Gary Leonard.

If the Tigers can get past Kansas in conference play they may be suprised when the NCAA's come a calling.

Last year's record 24-10

15. Florida

The Gators have two of the most underrated players in the nation in 6-4 senior guard Vernon Maxwell and 7-3 sophomore center Dwayne Schintzuis.

After these two superstars Coach Norm Sloan will have to look hard for additional help. Chris Capers, a 6-6 junior forward, will be counted on considerably to assist Schintzuis in the inside paint.

Many experts have penciled in Kentucky for the SEC crown this season but if everything falls into place watch for the Gators to threaten Kentucky's title.

Last year's record 23-11

16. Geogia Tech

Coach Bobby Cremins may have one of the finest forward duos in the country in Tom Hammonds and Duane Ferrell to center his team around. At the center position will be 6-11 James Munlyn that is going to have to produce in order for Tech to win. The Yellow Jackets have one of last year's finest high school player in Dennis Scott who will have to make the transition to small guard to give the Rambling Wreck a true outside threat.

Coach Cremins will enjoy the friendly confines of the Omni and Alexander Coliseum with 18 home games to help ensure some wins. Tech should push both North Carolina and Duke to a good race for the ACC title and are sure to be seen in the NCAA.

Last year's record 16-13

17. Wyoming

Coach Bennie Dees has a coaches dream with all five starters back. Heading the list is Fennis Dembo, a legitimate All-American at small forward and a possible candidate for player of the year. Dembo, a 6-5 senior, coupled with 6-11 senior Eric Leckner will once again lead Wyoming to a conference title and into the late rounds of the NCAA tournament.

Last year's record 24-10

18. Notre Dame

With the graduation of forward Donald Royal and guard Scott Hicks, Coach Digger Phelps is expecting Marc Stevenson and center Gary Voce to step in and give the Irish another 20 win season.

Not enough can be said about the outstanding play of David Rivers who will be back at 100% this season. Even though Notre Dame is young on the bench, Coach Phelps can expect a strong season and a good showing in the NCAA.

Last year's record 24-8

19. Memphis State

With the Tigers off their NCAA probation, Coach Larry Finch is expecting a good team that is centered around three players. Guard Dwight Boyd will

The Tigers will get good play from freshman Perry Elliot to combine with Boyd in the backcourt. Expect Memphis State to give Louisville a strong run for the Metro title.

20. Bradley

The Missouri Valley Conference will be well represented this season by the Bradley Braves. The Braves behind the leadership and scoring of 'Prime Time' player Hersey Hawkins will sweep the MVC competition. Hawkins, a 6-3 senior, will control the outside for the Braves, while 6-7 Trevor Trimble will dip inside and caress the boards. Coach Stan Albeck has a national contender this season and should guide the Braves to respectability.

21. UNLV

Due to the loss of five of the top seven scorers, the Rebels will be very young but should still have enough power to take another PAC Coast title. Coach Jerry Tarkanian will probably start two freshmen guards, Stacy Augmon and Karl James, with Jarvis Basnight, David Willard, Rick Robinson, and transfer Anthony Todd will fight for two spots.

Gerald Paddio will again give the "Tark" the 3-point treat as the "Runnin' Rebels" threaten the counterparts in the west.

Last year's record 37-2

22. N.C. State

Coach Jim Valvano will be returning four starters that will give the Wolfpack a strong and experienced team. Charles Shackelford, Vinny Del Negro, Chucky Brown and Quentin Jackson will lead that attack at the begining of the season, but expect to see one of the best young duos at the guard positions in freshmen Chris Corchiani and Rodney Monroe by the end of the season.

Since the ACC is going to be very tough, State will struggle but should still have a good showing.

Last year's record 20-15

23. Georgetown

With loss of Reggie "The Sweetness" Williams, the Hoyas will have to rely heavily on three players, Perry McDonald, Mark Tillmon and Dwayne Byrant, in order to be successful this season.

The Hoyas will contend with Pittsburgh and Syracuse in the Big East race and should cause a stir come March.

Last year's record 29-5

24. DePaul

Since the graduation of Dallas Comegys, Coach Joey Meyer will have four returning starters that are going to have to give an extra effort to live up to the 28 win feat of last year.

Kevin Edwards, Kevin Golden, Terrence Greene, and Rod Strickland give Meyer a strong nucleus, as the Blue Demons should be the cream of the crop among independents.

Last year's record 28-3

25. Austin Peay

Although the Governors return only one starter, they do have the services of three transfers, Barry Sumpter, Andre Harris and Javin Johnson. This strong core of players should make Peay the team to beat in the OVC.

Last year's record 20-12

26. Oklahoma

Coach Billy Tubbs will rely on Harvey Grant and Tim McAlister to lead the Sooners to the upper division of the Big Eight.

Last year's record 24-10

27. New Orleans

Ledell Eackles is a cinch for All-American honors and the Pirates will be giant-killers come March.

Last year's record 26-4

28. Marshall

Coach Rick Huckabay will have all five starters back and the Southern conference title will be a cakewalk for the Thundering Herd.

Last year's record 25-6

29. Richmond

Four starters return for Coach Dick Tarrant that will lead the Spiders through the CAA and into the NCAA's.

Last year's record 15-14

30. West Virginia

The Mountaineers will challenge Temple for the Atlantic Ten. Darryl Prue will lead Coach Gale Catlett's team that made the NCAA's last season.

Last year's record 23-8

Manning, Reid among the nation's best

As another new and exciting year in college basketball is beckoning upon us, we will find that the true national powers will be led by at least one super-star. Some of these all-americans will be very familiar to the general public and others will not be so familiar, but they will all have the same distinct characteristic: leadership! So on with the task at hand, which is listing an extensive composite of the cream of the crop in college basketball today.

CENTERS

J.R. REID, North Carolina, 6-10, So. - As Coach Dean Smith says, "The best thing about freshmen are that they become sophomores." If this holds true then the Tar Heels should be well on their way to another successful season behind leadership of J.R. Reid. Since he has such a wide body, he has little problem posting up against defender as well as boxing out for rebounds. He has outstanding post moves which makes him a sure score for the Tar Heels. Coach Smith will expect great things from this outstanding sophomore this year and in the near future to help North Carolina stay atop of the national level.

PERVIS ELLISON, Louisville, 6-9, Jr.

Manning

Reid

Although Louisville and Ellison are coming off a down season by Cardinals standards, they can look for better times this season with there not being any pressure on them. Expect Ellison to bounce back as super scorer and rebounder for U of L. Because of his extra long reach, one can assume that he will again be a true threat as shot blocker.

RONY SEIKALY, Syracuse, 6-10, Sr. - Returning off a "Dream Season," Rony Seikaly is having great aspirations of another outstanding performance this season. Through sure determination, Seikaly has become one of the best at the center position. He is a player that knows his limitations and his willing to play within them for the better of the team. Seikaly is a threat to the opposing offense.

because of his size and the great shot blocking ability that he has. If determination plays a big factor again, look for Seikaly to lead the Orangemen to another exciting year.

Best of rest: Tito Horford (Miami), Dwayne Schintzuis (Florida), Dean Garrett (Indiana), Will Perdue (Vanderbilt), Eric Leckner (Wyoming)

POWER FORWARDS

Danny Manning, Kansas, 6-11, Sr. - Danny Manning will lead everybody's list for Player-of-the-Year honors as the year comes to an end. Coach Larry Brown will enjoy this last season with Manning who will be the team's "crunch" player as well as it's leader. Manning is a player that has developed his skills over the last three years to become the best all-around player in the country today. Expect Manning to again intimidate offensive players because of his great ability to block shots and hit the boards. Expect everything from Manning and you will not be disappointed.

Best

Charles Smith, Pitt, 6-8, Sr. - As the driving force for Panthers, Charles Smith will lead his team to another successful season. Smith is an outstanding player, that gives Coach Paul Evans an great baseline player that all opponents will have to contend with. For a big man, Smith exerts outstanding strength for his rebounding ability and also has a soft touch as a shooter to help keep his seventeen points a game average up. With the help of Jerome Lane, Smith should continue to blossom into one of the best players in country.

Best of the rest: Tom Hammonds (Georgia Tech), Derrick Coleman (Syracuse), Danny Ferry (Duke), Todd Mitchell (Purdue), Tim Perry (Temple), Derrick Lewis (Maryland)

SMALL FORWARDS

Griffin

program and start all over, is his desire. He enters the game with the look of one who is on a mission.

When asked to explain this or felling Griffin explains, "I don't like to lose."

Many collegiate players have attempted the jump from JUCO Division I basketball. Some succeed, while many are lost to the masses. Griffin has proved that he is a very capable player that has had to travel in an around-about manner to reach his goals. His chief ambition is to reach the NCAA tournament. Griffin has accomplished feats that few have attempted. With JUCO behind him, he should have no problem pursuing further intentions.

He is an example that the Seahawks hope their four new JUCO transfers follow.

Fennis Dembo, Wyoming, 6-5, Sr. - As a senior, Fennis Dembo will team up with Eric Leckner to lead the Cowboys to a WAC title as well as a birth to the NCAA tournament this year. First year coach, Benny Dees will be surprised at the many skills that Dembo has as shooter, scorer and a leader. Couple these outstanding skills with a strong body and you have a great player that can make an impact on the national level. After coming off a tremendous Pan Am trial this past summer, Dembo proved to the country that he could play with the best and even be better. The Cowboy fan's will have a lot to cheer about with one of the best forwards in the country to lead their team.

Derrick Chievous, Missouri, 6-7, Sr. - Derrick Chievous will again lead the Tigers in scoring and rebounding this season. Chievous will give the Tigers a solid forward that has outstanding range as a shooter. If Chievous can keep his intensity level up through out the season, Missouri will have a Big Eight title by edging out Kansas this season. Chievous has great vision of the court as well as an understanding of the game of basketball. This ability makes him head and shoulders above most forwards in the country. The Tigers will rely heavily on the play of Chievous, so if Missouri is going to have a season to remember, Chievous is going to have to play to expectations.

Best of the rest: Jerome Lane (Pittsburgh), Roy Marble (Iowa), Ricky Berry (San Jose State), Perry McDonald (Georgetown) Ricky Calloway (Indiana)

Shooting Guards

Rex Chapman, Kentucky, 6-5, So. - As the team's leading scorer as a freshman, Rex Chapman leads everybody's list as one of the best at the guard position. Chapman is a player that is not afraid to put the ball up from downtown or to take it inside with the trees because of his great jumping ability. With a young supporting cast at Kentucky this year, Chapman should blossom into an even better player this year since he will not be pressured to be the team's only offensive weapon. Even as a sophomore, Chapman will give Coach Eddie Sutton the needed leadership to give the Wildcats a chance to take all the marbles.

Gary Grant, Michigan, 6-3, Sr. - Gary Grant is an outstanding defensive player that has improved offensively over the past three seasons. Grant has an tremendously quick first-step that gives him the ability to blow by defenders for the easy score. He is the team player that will provide Coach Bill Frieder with much needed leadership to carry the Wolverines this season.

Best of the rest: Vernon Maxwell (Florida), Hersey Hawkins (Bradley), Rod Strickland (DePaul), Troy Lewis (Purdue), Byron Larkin (Xavier), LeDell Eakles (New Orleans), Jeff Lebo (North Carolina)

POINT GUARDS

David Rivers, Notre Dame, 6-0, Sr. - David Rivers will be the quarterback for the Fighting Irish this season and he will be playing at 100% after coming an almost fatal car accident. Rivers has great ability to penetrate most any defense and if that does not work then he can pull up off the dribble and shoot from most any place on the floor. Because of his penetrating skills, the Irish will see a lot of zone defenses that should force Rivers to drill the ball from downtown. When it comes "crunch" time, expect Rivers to drop his head and start for the basket for another phenomenal play that should give the Irish two more points.

Best of the rest: Pooh Richardson (UCLA), Sherman Douglas (Syracuse), Keith Smart (Indiana), B.J. Armstrong (Purdue), John Johnson (Virginia), Ken "Mouse" McFadden (Cleveland State) career-bests for the forward against American he was the man with the hot hand and pumped in 20 points.

Concerning this season, Bender hopes to increase his scoring output and become more consistent offensive producer, but he is looking forward to assuming the job as a guide for a new Seahawk team.

"Scoring is important but I also want to be the player that the team and the coaches turn to in crucial situations," Bender said. "I realize the pressure is on myself and a couple of the other guys but I feel that I am prepared to accept the leadership role."

Coach Robert McPherson simply responds, "I'm expecting Greg to have a great year."

Much has been written and speculated about the upcoming basketball season, but a universal concern of all is who will the Seahawks turn to when a basket is needed or a man is to be stuck with some tenacious defense. If the last two seasons are any indicator, Greg Bender may be that very person and if so he's more than ready.

Junior Greg Bender shoots a layup against Southern Illinois. The steady Bender will be looked to for leadership and in the crucial moments this season.

Ricky Griffin, a former JUCO transfer, shows his talent against Augusta. Griffin says he's ready to assume the offensive and leadership roles for the Seahawks in '87-88

The Colonial: Foundation to success

When a proclamation announcing the Colonial Athletic Association was signed by some 53 officials, two year's worth of plans and hopes became reality.

On the day eight colleges-American University, East Carolina University, George Mason University, James Madison University, University of North Carolina Wilmington, University of Richmond, U.S. Naval Academy, and College of William & Mary-lowered the old ECAC South banner and raised the new name, and with it a new philosophy and spirit, and new hope for growth and success.

The Colonial's formation ended a chain of events begun in 1983, when the six ECAC South members-East Carolina, George Mason, James Madison, Navy, Richmond, William & Mary-agreed to expand the league's horizons.

Up to that point the conference existed only for men's basketball competition. During the next two years, however, championships were added in eight sports and membership was increased by two colleges.

Three more sports were added for 1985-86 bringing the Colonial's total to 12. Men's basketball, with its automatic bid to the NCAA tournament, remains the conference's centerpiece, but it is now a centerpiece surrounded by a spectrum of sports: baseball, women's basketball, men's and women's cross country, men's golf, men's soccer, men's and women's swimming, men's and women's tennis, and women's volleyball.

The Colonial Athletic Association spans the middle Atlantic region of the United States including the states of Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina and the District of Columbia. The conference stretches for the Chesapeake Bay and Atlantic Ocean to the Appalachian Mountains and Shenandoah Valley.

Central to the Colonial's region are the metropolitan areas of Richmond, Va., and Washington, D.C. Richmond is site of the league's central office and one of its member colleges, Richmond. Washington is home of one member, American with two more located nearby George Mason in Fairfax, Va., and Navy in Annapolis, Md.

The Colonial's area also includes these cities and the member colleges located in them or nearby: Harrisonburg, Va. (James Madison); Newport News and Williamsburg, Va. (William and Mary); Greenville, N.C. (East Carolina) and Wilmington, N.C. (UNC-Wilmington).

Colonial membership represents a mix of public and private institutions and a range of enrollments and academic missions.

Six members are public institutions: George Mason, James Madison, and William & Mary belonging to the Commonwealth of Virginia; East Carolina and UNC-Wilmington in the North Carolina university system; and Navy as one of the nation's service academies.

Enrollment ranges from 2,700 at Richmond to 15,000 at George Mason. Navy and William & Mary list their figures as 4,500, UNC-Wilmington 6,000, James Madison 9,400, American 12,500 and East Carolina 13,800.

A variety of academic programs can be found at Colonial institutions. For example there are law schools at Richmond and William & Mary, more than 20 doctoral programs at American, a medical school at East Carolina, dozens of master's degree programs at George Mason, James Madison and UNC-Wilmington, and nationally-recognized undergraduate programs at nearly every school.

Many Colonial members include their basketball arenas among the newest and most impressive of their campus facilities. George Mason played in its new 10,000-seat Patriot Center last season; James Madison opened its 7,600-seat Convocation Center four years ago; American will soon unveil its new Khashoggi Center; and UNC-Wilmington moved into Trask Coliseum nine years ago.

Similarly, many Colonial members include recent basketball successes among their more impressive achievements. James Madison was a winner in three straight NCAA tournaments from 1981-83; Richmond has won in both the NCAA and NIT during the past two years; American and William & Mary have played in the NIT within the last four years; and most recently, Navy has risen to prominence with three 20-win seasons and numerous victories in NCAA tournament play.

UNCW games offer more than basketball

Going to a UNC Wilmington men's basketball game, you are likely to experience more than just basketball. From the cheerleaders to the ushers, UNCW is trying to make Seahawk basketball one of the best entertainment dollars in the city of Wilmington.

"We are in the entertainment business," said Associate Athletic Director Jim Bass. "We have to put on an all-round show from the time fans park their cars to pregame and halftime festivities to the time they leave campus. If we do that, people will feel good about coming to Trask Coliseum."

Besides the basics involved with putting on a UNCW game, Bass has worked to get some added surprises for Seahawk fans this season.

Nine of UNCW's home games have promotions planned for them. Starting with the Czechoslovakian exhibition Nov. 16, a new and bolder promotions schedule will kick off.

The Czechoslovakian game will be Tar Heel Photo-Swenson's Autograph Night. All children 15 and under will receive a free team picture for autographs after the game. During the autograph session after the game, Swenson's ice cream will offer free ice cream for those kids who have stayed.

The November 28 game against Georgia Southern will be AG Edwards Night with the first 1000 persons wearing green and gold getting a free UNCW poster. The Atlantic Christian game December 12 is WGNI Toys for Tots Night. WGNI, UNCW and the Marine Reserve will be collecting toys for underprivileged children.

The December 20 game against Boston College is Wilson's Supermarket Night. With an ongoing promotion involving Wilson's - UNCW bumper stickers, persons displaying these stickers will be eligible for a giveaway of 10 pairs of season tickets and certificates will be also given away for free turkeys and a shopping spree.

On January 16, the American game will be Wilmington Merchant's Association Fan Appreciation Night. It will be the culmination of a 2-for-1 ticket give away for the first six home games. The WMA will also give door prizes out to fans.

The Navy game January 18 is GoGas Hat Night with the first 1000 persons wearing green and gold receiving a hat. On January 30, a similar promotion is planned, the Coca-Cola T-Shirt Night. The first 1000 persons will receive t-shirts if they come to the game wearing green and gold.

The February 20 game against William & Mary is homecoming and for the final home game, February 24 against Richmond plans are under way with Pizza Hut for a soon to announced event.

Although promotions play a part in the success of the UNCW program in helping to increase ticket sales, it is the spirit that is most important to Bass.

"With all our promotions, we try and develop an atmosphere," said Bass. "Our main emphasis is to try and increase attendance. Our secondary emphasis is to create an enthusiasm with the t-shirts, hats, etc. I feel we have an excellent promotions program again this year. I just hope we can make Trask Coliseum too small through increased support."

Ticket sales

Ticket sales for the 1987-88 season are well ahead of last year. As of November 2, Bass said that there were already 900 season tickets sold, a significant increase over last year. All season tickets remain on sale until the November 28 game against Georgia Southern.

Tickets may be purchased through the UNCW athletic department by calling 395-3232 or 395-3571 for season ticket.

Ticket prices are $5 for adult and $3 for children. Season ticket prices are $63 for the 14 home game schedule. Student get in free with a valid UNCW ID.

They call it home, Trask Coliseum

The home of UNC-Wilmington basketball is the Raiford G. Trask Coliseum, one of the most beautiful on-campus structures in the state. The facility seats 6,100 fans for basketball events, with the capacity almost evenly divided between permanent theater-type seating above the playing surface and the bleachers located on the floor level.

The coliseum was officially dedicated on Nov. 26, 1977, when the Seahawks entertained Wake Forest before a sellout crowd, losing to the nationally-ranked Demon Deacons by a score of 83-79. Trask was also the site of the Seahawks' first-ever conference victory when they defeated George Mason 66-64 on Jan. 5, 1985. UNCW teams have gone on to win more than 70 percent of their games in the arena, posting an overall record of 77-35.

The modern facility has served to heighten the overall intercollegiate program at the University, serving as home for UNCW women's basketball as well as enhancing the physical education and intramural activities of the entire student body. The coliseum was the site of the Colonial Athletic Association's women's basketball tournament in March of 1986.

Home Sweet Home

Trask Coliseum is the home court to the UNCW men's and women's basketball teams. The Coliseum has 3,000 theatre-style seats and 3,000 bleacher seats. The arena was officially opened in 1977 to a sellout crowd for the UNCW men's game against Wake Forest.

The main building of the complex contains three general purpose classrooms, one lecture classroom, a physical measurements laboratory, five handball and racquetball courts, and faculty and administrative offices. The complex also includes the Seahawks' aquatics facility, with an eight-lane 25 x 20-yard pool and separate diving tank. The natatorium was the site of the first Colonial Athletic Association swimming and diving championships in early 1986.

Catch the fever... Seahawk Action!

"Give Me One Good Reason Why I Should Go To The 1988 Colonial Basketball Championship."

1. It's on a weekend. Mostly March 5, 6 and 7. Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Four games Saturday starting at noon. Semi-finals Sunday at 2 p.m. Championship game Monday at 7:30 p.m. You can see six games without taking time off work. And if your team plays in the final, you can call in sick.

2. It's convenient. The Hampton Coliseum is right on Interstate 64. It's an hour and a half drive east of Richmond. Half an hour from William & Mary. Four hours from American, George Mason, JMU and Navy. Three hours from East Carolina and five from UNC Wilmington.

3. It's economical. A ticket book for all seven games is $25. That's $3.57 per game—cheaper than a movie. A ticket for a two-game session Saturday or Sunday, and for Monday's championship game, is $10 ($5 for college students.) Tickets are available at member college ticket offices and at the Hampton Coliseum.

4. There are hotels and restaurants galore near the Coliseum. Rush out for some fast food, or sit down to a famous Chesapeake Bay seafood buffet.

5. The Coliseum is a great place to watch basketball. There's not a bad seat in the house.

6. There's plenty of post-game nightlife for the night-owl in you. "Party hearty" and celebrate your team's victories.

7. You can show your school spirit by competing in the "Old College Try" Fun Run Sunday morning at the Coliseum. Or you can play golf and tennis. Or take a stroll along Buckroe Beach.

8. You can visit the NASA Visitors Center and learn the history of the space program. Or visit Fort Wool and Fort Monroe and learn Civil War history. Or visit Kecoughtan Village and learn Indian history. (Hampton was founded in 1610, by the way.)

9. You can go shopping between games. Coliseum Mall (130 stores) is just down the street, and world-famous outlets are just up the Interstate.

10. You'll see great college basketball. Eight teams fighting for the conference title and a bid to the NCAA tournament. Last year's championship game was a 53-50 nail-biter between Navy and UNCW (the Mids won). This time—who knows? You'll have to be there. Mark your calendar now for an exciting weekend.

Calls, breakins reported

By Elizabeth Peacock,
Staff Writer

On Thursday, the Campus Police received a complaint from a victim living in 306 Graham Hall that a white male was making harassing phone calls. The victim said that most of the calls consisted of heavy breathing.

Another set of harassing phone calls were reported where a female subject was reported to have called another female four consecutive times, stating her name, address and phone number and saying that she was looking for her mother. When an officer called the stated phone number, no one answered. The victim was advised by Campus Police to log any further calls.

Unknown subjects broke into the storage room below the swimming pool in Trask Coliseum by prying the lock open. Police were unable to determine at the time if anything was missing.

In another case, a student residing at 304 Graham Hall reported that one or more persons entered her room and removed $100.

Other students reported lost or stolen decals from the rear windows of their cars. When asked how often decals are stolen or lost each semester, Sgt. Jack Kennedy of UNCW Campus Police Dept. explained that "quite a few" are reported missing.

"The new decals 'self-destruct' now, by tearing when they are removed from the car," he said. He went on to explain that students sometimes give their decals away and get a duplicate at no extra cost. However, all decals are recorded with the University and Campus Police Department.

Eight nominated for Supreme Court seats

Monday's Student Government meeting focused its attention on supreme court justice nominations. There are eight Justice positions on the Student Supreme Court: two nominated by senate at large, one nominated by each class president and one nominated by the President and Vice President.

President King opened his report by a motion to elect Freshman Doug Pratt to Supreme

UNCW major contributor to area economy

By Jefferson Weaver,
Editor in Chief

According to figures released here last week, UNCW puts more money into the local economy than either the State Ports Authority or the New Hanover County Airport.

The figures were presented by Dr. W.W. Hall of the Cameron School of Business here as part of the fortieth anniversary of the University. The survey was done by the Center for Business and Economics and the Cameron School of Business. The four county area of Brunswick, New Hanover, Pender and Columbus counties was used as the basis for the study, which was done last spring.

Information for the study came from a questionnaire circulated through the student body, faculty and staff of UNCW. Data on the University's impact on the four-county area was obtained through the University accounting office.

Dr. Earl Honeycutt, Assistant Professor of Marketing, developed the questionnaire, and the data was analyzed and processed by graduate students Steve Boushara and Chris Jones.

University employees spent more than $18 million in the region during the survey period, $5.6 million of which went to housing costs such as rent, house payments, taxes, etc. Employees spent more than $1 million on transportation, compared to $5.6 million for vehicles, upkeep and fuel spent by students.

Employees spent more than $3.5 million spent on food. Students spent approximately $31.6 million off campus, with non-resident students making up $10.7 million of that sum. More than $6 million was spent on groceries and off-campus meals.

Earlier this fall, figures showed that with only one exception, Wilmington residents spend more on fast food than any other city in the country—approximately $390 per person each year.

Dr. Hall noted that "Assuming that all of those off campus (student) meals were fast food, the average amount spent on fast food per student was over $470 per year."

Housing for off-campus students was another high figure. Seventy percent of the University's students live off-campus, and those expenditures amounted to $10.7 million, with $6.6 million of that going to rent/house payments.

While the total amount turned into the local economy only took up 5.4 percent of the entire estimated gross regional product (the total amount bought and spent in the area) the total was more than triple that of the New Hanover County Airport and four times that of the state ports.

"If the recent past is any indication of the outlook," Hall said, "both the future of the University and that of Southeastern North Carolina look very promising."

New annual format comes "Out of Chaos"

By Alise Ellis,
Staff Writer

This year, the UNCW yearbook, The Fledgling, will be replaced by a magazine. The yearbook staff decided to change the format this year due to low sales in the past.

The magazines co-editors, Beki English, a senior English major and Jenni Brown, a sophomore English major, are optimistic about the new magazine, which is entitled Out of Chaos. According to English, the name represents all the good that can come out of a controversial situation—like the new publication.

Out of Chaos will be a 108-page color pictorial with opinion articles written by students. The magazine will be totally student-oriented. "We really believe the magazine will be the turning point for campus involvement," said English.

The magazine will offer students a vehicle to voice their grievances, ideas, or anything related to UNCW. It will be divided into five sections: Student Life, Sports, Greeks, Organizations, and Classes.

The individual pictures taken by the Olan Mills Studio will still be used. The student opinion articles will appear throughout the publication.

Students will be receiving information about writing articles for the new publication in their University post office boxes. Out of Chaos will be available in April for $4.

Great American Smokeout' slated for Thursday

By Celeste Bulley,
Managing Editor

Once again this year, the American Cancer Society will make a special effort to encourage smokers across the country to take a break from cigarettes and enjoy a fresh breath of life for just one day: November 19th.

UNCW has decided to join The American Cancer Society by sponsoring events in Nov. 19th's Save-A-Seahawk Day in hopes promoting a greater awareness of the hazards of smoking and tobacco use.

Nearly 24 million of the nation's 54.5 million smokers participated in last year's event, topping all previous records. Public awareness of Smokeout day reached an all-time high last year, with nine out of ten adult Americans aware of the day's purpose.

Although the overall percentage of adult smokers in the population has declined, cigarette smoking is on the rise among young women. Recent studies suggest, tragically, that lung cancer has surpassed breast cancer as the leading cancer killer among women.

Events planned by the UNCW LivWell/Alternatives Center for Nov. 19 will include a kissing booth where students and staff can switch tobacco for chocolate candy, and a dental screening for tobaccorelated mouth problems by Dr. William H. Salling, a Wrightsville Beach dentist.

Although the Great American Smokeout Day focuses on cigarette smoking, the American Cancer Society will try to alert the public further to the hazards of smokeless tobacco through a vigorous ad campaign.

'Save a Seahawk' events slated

(UNCW News—) "Save-A-Seahawk Day" is the theme of a number of special observances scheduled between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 19, at the University Union on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Nov. 19 is also the date of the Great American Smoke Out.

Sponsoring the event are the UNCW LivWell /Alternatives Center and the Department of Public Safety.

The following activities will be held:

- The Great American Smoke Out, sponsored in conjunction with the American Cancer Society.
- "Seabell: 'CONVINCE' Demonstration, with the New Hanover County Health members were nominated: Jim Sullivan, Chris Meridith Stacy Shaddocks, Janis Author, Jim Kraft, Lloyd Hinant, Scott Jones, and Burt Kilpatrick.

Because four of the nominees were not present for questioning, the Senate decided after much debate to postpone voting on them. They instead moved to wait until receiving a letter from each nominee stating their personal qualifications.

At this time, Brian Holler,

Freshman Class President, nominated Freshman Terry Grange to the position of Supreme Court Justice. Grange was elected after some questioning. The three other Class Officers moved to postpone their nominations until next week.

During closing announcements, Jeff Steinmiller, from the Division of Student Affairs, commended the Senate for "sticking it out regardless of the basketball game" and for "the seriousness taken in the Senate Justice Appointments."

Microlabs becoming hot item in Randall and Bear

By Joy T. Tubbs,
Special to the Seahawk

Overcrowding is not confined to the dorms or the parking lot at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington — there is also overcrowding at the micro-labs at Randall Library.

Bob Berg, head of the Academic Computer Services at UNCW, agreed that there was a problem with getting access to the computers.

Berg stated, "The wheels of progress do turn slowly... but they do turn."

The interest generated in micro-computers has become so overwhelming the ACS has limited the number of hours that are available for reserve by faculty and staff.

Evidently this has not alleviated the overcrowding problem because complaints are still heard by instructors that students cannot get enough time on the computer.

Mary Wasson, English Instructor at UNCW has several computer assisted classes, and she said that "Many of my students have said they cannot get in to use the micro-lab."

On Monday of last week, twenty new micro-computers were scheduled to be set up in the Randall micro-lab, according to Berg. He added that the furniture had not yet arrived, but temporary tables will be used until the new furniture arrived.

Along with the installation of new systems, Berg revealed that other innovations are being implemented to ease the current congestion problems at the micro-lab.

Announcements and events

The Wrightsville Beach Ocean Racing Association invites students to join them Tuesday evening, November 17, at 7:30 p.m. at Roland Grice Junior High School in Wilmington, North Carolina, to see an unforgettable adventure sound and slide show of "Northern Lights Arctic-Antarctic Voyage". Rolf Bjelke from Sweden and Deborah Shapiro from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, spent two years voyaging 33,000 miles, starting in Sweden and going to the Arctic, Greenland, the Pacific, then exploring the Antarctic and tip of South America, and then returned home, covering 33,000 miles. Bjelke and Shapiro are professional photographers and have shot 14,000 photographs and dozens of reels of sound tapes that they have edited into a knock-out sound/slide show. They have also published a beautiful book about their voyage. Northern Light: One Couple's Epic Arctic-Antarctic Voyage is available in bookstores and can be bought directly from the authors at the performance.

The cost is $6.00 for students with valid ID and tickets can be bought at the door. The show is 1 1/2 hours long and there will be time for extensive questions after the show. This is a show not only for people who like sailing, but for adventurers who like incredible scenery, mountains, glaciers, and particularly those who like wildlife in their natural habitat, including whales.

The following members of the Senate have been reprimanded this semester by the Senate: Shannon Wooten, Dawn Clodfelder, Erik Storm, Attorney General Bob Gailow, James Earl Jones, Sean Freeman, Jim Humphries, Amy Loge, and Alexandra Dais. These reprimands were issued for violation as the Senate attendance policy. Attendance has increased drastically since the beginning of the semester. Submitted by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The Playwrights' Producing Company will present three short plays November 13 and 14 at 8:30 each evening at Jacob's Run. The plays, "Colored Scribbles", "Sandwich", written Doug Swink, and "Liza Has A Spell", are being held in conjunction with the NC Writers' Network's fall conference being held at Wrightsville Beach this weekend. For tickets call 762-5253.

The Atlantis, UNCW's Art and Literary Magazine, has extended this years submission's deadline until November 20th at 5:00 p.m. This will be the last possible date of submission for the 1987-88 magazine. Submit works to the UU Room 202-F. In addition, the Atlantis is sponsoring an art contest. Cash prizes will be awarded, 1st place fifty dollars, 2nd thirty, and 3rd twenty. Submit art contest entries in Room 205 of the UU (Atlantis office). The art contest deadline is November 20th at 5:00 p.m.

TOGETHER WE DEFEATED EMORY UNIVERSITY. THE UNC-W SWIMMING AND DIVING TEAMS WOULD LIKE TO THANK EVERYONE WHO SUPPORTED US TO OUR FIRST VICTORY.

Prospective real estate agents can brush up on the basics for the North Carolina Real Estate Salesman's Licensing Examination in a six-hour intensive study/review offered Friday, December 11 and Saturday, December 12 by UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs.

The study will cover terminology, brokerage operation, law, rules and regulations, financing, valuations, contracts, trust accounts, taxes and math. Instructor is Dr. John H. Davis who holds a North Carolina real estate license and is certified as an instructor by the N.C. Real Estate Commission.

The workshop will run from 7:00-10:00 p.m. on Friday, December 11 and from 9:00 a.m. until 12 p.m. Saturday, December 12 on the UNCW campus. The fee is $65 per person discounted to $59 for registration prior to December 1. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

The members of the UNCW Gospel Choir need your help in their annual "Can Food Drive for the Needy Project". Please gather those cans, non-perishable food items or just a donation and support them on November 17-21. A table will be set up in the University Union between the hours of 10am-2pm.

Sigma Xi Scientific Research Society, and the honor society, Phi Kappa Phi, will present a seminar November 19 at 8 p.m. in UU-100. Terry L. Myers, M.D., and Ph.D., will discuss "Clinical Genetics: The Ethical Dilemma of Human Birth Defects." Dr. Myers is a clinical geneticist from East Tennessee State University. The seminar is open to the public.

John Gilmore, visiting distinguished professor, will present his second master class of the semester Sunday, November 22, from 2-5 p.m. in King Hall. Students, faculty, staff, community members and their accompanists are invited to attend and participate. Free.

The Wilmington Merchants association will sponsor "The Nutcracker Ballet" November 17 & 18 at 7:30 each evening in Kenan Auditorium.

November 15-21 is Geography Awareness Week. UNCW will join local schools in activities that promote the importance of improving geographic skills.

Auditions for The Lark by Jean Anouilh will be held November 30 and December 1 from 7:15 to 10:00 p.m. in the SRO Theatre on the UNC-W campus.

Roles will be available for 15 men and 5 women. Extra roles will require 12 men and 2 women. Rehearsals will begin on January 11, 1988.

As Dr. Terry Theodore, director of the production states, "The Lark beautifully and movingly recreates the life and legend of Joan of Arc from a simple peasant girl, to inspired warrior, to sublime saint."

Sensitively adapted for the American stage by famed playwright Lillian Hellman, The Lark creates a memorably dramatic moment from history and exalts it for the stage.

The Lark will be presented February 18-20, 1988 at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

For further information contact UNC-W's Department of Creative Arts at 395-3440.

Departments are asked to inform the University Union Information Center of all special meetings and events that are being held on campus. This information will allow the information center to answer questions from individuals in an efficient manner. Call 3841 or 3846 or send information to Heather Goodman in UU-214.

The UNCW ceramics class will sponsor a ceramics art show and sale of students' works in Kenan Hall December 3 & 4 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. All works are original and would make great gifts for the upcoming holiday season.

Dr. David Allen, special assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs for student life studies, will deliver a seminar Thursday, November 19. The seminar, based on his recent research of female students at UNCW and Peace, is titled "UNCW Women: Persistence Withdrawal Patterns?" will be held in UU-207 from 4-5 p.m.

The University Program Board Coffeehouse Committee will present Del Suggs in concert Wednesday, November 18, at 8 p.m. in UU-100. Suggs is a singer and guitar player. The concert is free and open to faculty and staff.

The third program in UNC Wilmington's Adult Enrichment Series continues with a showing and commentary of the movie, "The Passion of Joan of Arc," Friday, December 4. The film, which has been hailed as one of the artistic achievements of the 20th century, ranks as one of the last great silent films. Commentary will be provided by Dr. Terry Theodore, professor of drama in UNC Wilmington's creative arts department.

Fee is $19 per person and includes dinner. Registration deadline is November 20. Dinner begins at 5:45 pm with the program following at 6:30 pm.

UNCW awarded $1500 for program on the South

The North Carolina Humanities Committee has awarded The University of North Carolina at Wilmington $1,500 for a project titled "The South for Natives and Newcomers."

Due to the extensive growth in Wilmington and New Hanover County over the last decade, hundreds of residents have poured into the Wilmington area. These individuals who come from all over the U.S. and abroad share one common thing--a lack of knowledge about the historic community in which they now live. Because of this lack of knowledge, Dr. Melton McLaurin of the UNCW History Department saw a need to teach old and new residents alike about the regional culture, historic values and traditions of the area.

The project will be directed by Dr. James C. Edmundson, "we will examine how Southerners perceive themselves, what traditions and values they hold dear and how these traditions and values reflect in the region's politics and how Southern literature reflects these traditions and values."

The program, a three-part series, will be presented during spring semester 1988 in the form of a dinner/lecture series with each dinner featuring a regional Southern menu. Following each dinner, a noted scholar will speak. Two of the three speakers will focus on the significance of family, land, race and religion as themes in the cultural experiences of Southerners. One speaker will examine Southern autobiographies to determine how residents of the region perceive themselves, another will come from a literary approach and will focus on traditional values rather than external change while the third program will be on Southern politics and religion.

Speakers will include Melton McLaurin, professor and chairman of the UNCW History Department, Merle Black, associate professor of political science at UNC-Chapel Hill, and Doris Betts, professor of English at UNC-Chapel Hill.

The programs scheduled for early next year will be a part of the current Adult Enrichment Series sponsored by the UNCW Office of Special Programs and will be held on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Phi Kappa Phi begins search for scholars

The UNCW Chapter of Phi Kappa Phi, the national honor society for distinguished students in all academic fields, has begun its evaluation of student records for consideration of election to the Society. The Society's By-Laws allow a student to be considered for membership with a 3.75 GPA for Juniors with 74 hours or more completed, a 3.68 GPA for seniors with 89 to 105 hours, and a 3.60 GPA for Seniors with more than 105 hours completed.

The National Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi was founded in 1897 at the University of Maine. Men and women in all academic disciplines are eligible for membership, on the basis of scholarship, integrity, and character. The Society's motto is "Let the love of learning rule mankind". There are about 250 chapters of the society, established at leading colleges and universities throughout the country.

The UNCW Chapter of the Society was established in 1980. The fact that an institution has to prove its excellence before a chapter of Phi Kappa Phi can be chartered makes membership in this Society a valuable asset to the graduating student. The society is convinced that recognizing persons of good character who have excelled in an academic area will stimulate others toward this achievement. The Chapter's officers for the current year are Dr. Marcee Raff, President; Dr. Lewis Nance, Secretary-Treasurer; and Dr. Charles West, Public Relations Officer.

Elections to the Society are made each semester, after analysis of the University's academic records to determine eligible outstanding students. Final decision is made by the student and faculty members of the UNCW Chapter. A formal initiation ceremony will be held in the Spring, shortly before graduation, with the date to be announced.

Minority advisory committee formed

By Michael Smith,
Staff Writer

A television interview with Dr. Charles Cahill, provost for academic affairs, has led to something new — the UNCW Minority Advisory Committee.

During an interview last semester Cahill asked for assistance from anyone who had an idea that would aid in the recruitment and retention of minority students to UNCW.

In response to this plea, a graduate of UNC-Chapel Hill contacted Douglas Johnson, Associate Director of Admissions at UNCW, and suggested a student-lead minority committee. A committee of this type had been formed at Chapel Hill and had been very effective in recruiting and retaining minority students.

The UNCW Minority Advisory Committee was founded during the latter part of the spring semester. The purpose of the committee is to recruit and suggest to the university anything it can do to retain its present minority enrollment. The committee is made up of six students with classifications from senior and sophomore and majors ranging from Speech Communication to Biology.

During the upcoming minority visitation day scheduled for Nov. 21 in the University Union from 1:50 p.m. to 4:30 p.m., the committee will serve on panels answering questions that the visiting high school students and their parents may have. The committee will also solicit aid from the UNCW student body to give tours of the campus as well as the University's residence halls.

In other business, the committee discussed upcoming projects that would benefit future as well as current Seahawks.

"I feel we need to do something for the currently enrolled students which will in turn motivate them to help us with recruitment and retention," said Kim McCarthy, a sophomore majoring in Biology.

Johnson, who serves as advisor to the committee, stressed that interest had to be kept among all students at UNCW but a greater emphasis should be placed on the minority student.

Microlab filling up in library

The micro-lab is also available as a workshop area for faculty interested in learning to use the computer. To eliminate the shortened time-in-use for students, Berg noted that a partition had been ordered to divide the room for separate usage.

Berg also stated that by mid-spring semester, there should be about 35 micro-computers available in the micro-lab.

Along with this information came news concerning a new laser printer to be located in the micro-lab. Berg stressed the point that the new printer will only be operated by a consultant assigned for this purpose and that it will be available for final editions only.

The micro-lab's peak hours for the month of October were from 10:00 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. and again from 7:00 p.m. until 8:00 p.m. and students are urged to avoid these periods if at all possible.

The hours for the micro-lab at Randall are from 8:00 a.m. until midnight, but you will only be allowed to work until 11:30 p.m. to allow time for closing.

Another late night spot is Bear Hall, Room 215. Although designed basically for business students, they do have four micro-computers compatible to the Write and Spell program used IBM PC's such as the ones in Randall and the Writing Place in Morton Hall.

The Bear hall lab's hours are from 8 a.m. until midnight.

AIDS policy proposed for UNCW

reviewed for University purchase. The AIDS Institution Policy was accepted by the committee and is being passed on to Cancellor William Wagner for approval. The document states that any student, faculty or staff member who has AIDS or any AIDS related disease should not be withdrawn from the University. It also contains what precautions the University should take in dealing with these people. An abstract of the document will be placed in the student handbook next year. All department heads, deans, and the Student Government will be given copies of this Institutional Policy on AIDS.

The committee talked about future events that would help to widen campus knowledge of the horrifying facts resulting from the AIDS epidemic. They plan on approaching the Greeks with the possibility that they might have some kind of program during Greek Week concerning AIDS on campus. The programs would be mandatory and points would be given to those who attended. They would also be open to the public.

During last summer's freshman orientation questionnaires were given to parents and the applicants concerning the presence of condom machines on campus. Over 55% of the responses were in favor of condom machines in the campus dormitory bathrooms and in other campus buildings. This is being considered as a future plan

Condoms are now available in the Student Health and Wellness Center free of charge. The committee also plans to better inform the faculty and staff of the seriousness of the disease. This will be discussed further in the next meeting.

"What the heck's a Snee Farm?" asks our friend

Red Neckerson, a buddy of mine, wandered into my office the other day, grumbling like an hungover pit bull.

"What's your problem?" I asked him.

"Don't know what a Snee is" he growled, straightening his Georgia Bulldogs cap. I asked him to elaborate.

"I wuz comin' up Highway 17 toward Wilmington," he said, "an I seen this here housing projick on mah right. The sign said 'Snee Farms.' He rearranged the chaw of Levi in his cheek, and took a swallow of Mountain Dew.

"What, may I ask, is a Snee?" He looked at me as if I were a yankee used car salesman on vacation.

"What do you think ah ast you thet same question?"

Disbelieving, I had my redneck friend drive me out to this snee farm. Sure enough, there was sign with big bold letters reading SNEE FARMS.

Being the quizzical good ol' boys we are, Red and I parked the truck and wandered over to take a looksee over the fence and see exactly what a Snee was.

Red stuck his head up over the fence, and first thing you know, he got hit between the eyes by what we figured to be a snee egg.

The snee egg was perfectly round, and had little dimples all over it. On one side, there was a little circle, a number and the name 'MacGregor.'

"Must be a brand, like you put on a cow," Red muttered, rubbing the rapidly rising technicolor bump in the middle of his forehead. "Hardest damn egg I ever did see."

"But how'd it come flying over the fence?" I pondered. Summoning up all my courage, I stuck my head up just enough to see into the field on the other side

Pickups. Politics and Hound dogs

with Jefferson Weaver

of the fence. The pasture was about the prettiest thing I have ever seen: snees must be grazing animals, because there was a lot of green grass all over everywhere. Here and there, little flags were poked into the ground.

"Awful pretty pasture," I said. "Snees must produce some real good fertilizer." Red agreed with me, and then squinted into the distance.

"Lookyhere," he said, pointing at the funniest little car I had ever seen. "I ain't never seen one of them before."

The funny little car only had three wheels; there were two really overweight men riding in it, and while Red went back to the truck for his binoculars (very useful in watchine deer, ducks, or the Baptist Camp for Wayward Girls.) I watched as one of the two men dropped what appeared to be a Snee egg onto the ground and hit it with a stick.

The snee egg landed about fifty yards from one of those little flags, and the first man waited while the second dropped an egg on the ground and hit it, too. His didn't go quite as far, maybe a hundred yards or so from the flag.

The men got back into the car, and drove to where the snee eggs had landed. The first man—wearing the white shoes, orange pants and flowery shirt I took to be the uniform of a snee farmer—got out and hit his snee egg again. This time, it hit near the flag and rolled into a hole by the flag.

From what we could tell through Red's binoculars, the hole was just a little bigger than the ball. When the first man's egg rolled into the hole, the second man laughed and pounded him on the back.

Then they went back and repeated the whole thing using the second man's snee egg. At that point, Red and I wandered back to the truck, puzzled at this new discovery. He still carried the snee egg that hit him in the head earlier.

I contemplated the snee egg as we drove back to town.

It has a very tough hide; almost like leather. Leather? Wait a minute....

"Red," I began, "I think I know what this thing is."

"What?"

"A baby nauga."

"A what????"

"A baby nauga. You know, where nauga hyde comes from. Like Sally Mae's new living room suit?" Sally Mae was Red's younger sister who had just gotten married.

"Ah'm confused," he said.

"It's simple. The two guys we saw were snee farmers. They just ride that car instead of a horse."

"But why do they hit 'em around like that with those sticks?"

"As tough as those shells are, the little snees probably have to have help to get out of the shells. Since rll babies are hungry when their born, they just crack the little snee eggs out there on the field and let 'em eat away."

"What about the hole they was trying to knock 'em into?"

"I reckon if the egg ain't quite ready to hatch, they put the snees back into their nests. Them holes was the nests."

"Oh."

We stopped at Fannie's Bar and Grill ("Follow your nose to the best barbecue for miles around," their sign says.) and were examining the snee egg more closely when the waitress, Jennie Lou McElveen, stopped by our table (she was kinda sweet on Red.)

"What ya'll boys doin' with that golf ball?" Red swelled out his chest, and tried to look superior.

"This ain't no golf ball. This here is a snee egg."

"Snee egg? Shoot, what kinda stuff you tryin' to pull? This here's one of them golf balls that high society folks try to hit into little holes down there at Snee Farms. Snee eggs. Hah."

Red sipped his drink, and stared after her, shaking his head.

"Crazy women. What does she know? Everybody knows rll's what they throw back and forth on the beach. It's one of them flat round thangs. Stupid women."

Are we the only ones who care how we look?

Sunday's Wilmington Morning Star noted on the editorial page that "buildings are popping up like dandelions behind the pine trees at UNC-W."

What they failed to mention was that buildings are popping up like kudzu in the community around UNC-W. Everybody and his dog wants to open a shopping center, restaurant, or outlet to better help spend your -- err, to better serve you.

Witness the new desert on the corner of New Centre Drive and College Road, across from Bennigan's. Ditto what used to be a stand of trees beside K-Mart.

And, by George, the contractor's study (totally objective, of course) showed that putting a McDonald's on the corner of Wilshire and College Road (in an unused corner of Kroger's parking lot) wouldn't complicate traffic problems in that already congested area.

While our University fights with building contractors and costs to preserve the aesthetics of our campus, everything outside the pines is going to hell in a handbasket.

Before it's over, UNC-W will be a silk pocket in a four color polyester double knit sport jacket.

Great American Smokeout

It won't kill you for a day

This Thursday is the great American Smokeout, where we are all asked to give up our weeds for one day in deference to personal health.

While it is slowly but surely becoming stylish to ban smoking in public places (due to the fact that 'passive' smoke can kill even the non-smoker over time) we still feel that while segregation (smoking and non-smoking) makes sense, absolute bans are a bit too much.

From the non-smoking corner, though, we still feel that a little courtesy and common sense would make things easier on all accounts (in other words, ask first before you burn).

The eradication of tobacco from our society is about as likely as the eradication of alcohol — sure, people die, sure, it costs money, but humans are potentially proud as well as self-destructive animals. Say no, and they probably say, what if I do?

But for one day, it won't kill you. Save your weeds for later.

Frankly Speaking

STUDENT FORUM

Reader catches our faux pas — before us

Dear Editor:

I had to take a second look. Surely "AMA" stood for Americans Marketing Alcohol. Afterall, there they were, twenty healthy and happy looking coeds standing in front of an impressive advertisement for beer. Yes, this banner quite clearly read "America Marketing Budweiser" - or at least that was all that could be seen in this photo released by the Seahawk last week in the Announcements and Events section. Perhaps there was more valuable information inconveniently shielded behind that cluster of collegiate "leaders", as they called themselves, and their proudly displayed plastic party cups.

This organization and the Seahawk should be applauded for the propagation of the all-American myth that alcohol is the cohesive glue and the magical elixir that contributes to the success and the fun of just about any social function. In this era of "Say No", "M.A.D.D.", "R.A.D.D.", and "S.A.D.D.", Smokeouts, raised drinking ages, and yes, even U N C - W 's "Alternatives!" how can there be any significant changes in society's obsession with drugs, especially the legal and acceptable ones, when there continues to be a deluge of positive and reinforcing messages that foster the faith?

It is unfortunate but true that for every step forward taken by drug educators, sometimes with the assistance of the media, two steps backward occur when positive messages concerning drugs are projected to the public. And perhaps those images are actually not so flattering to the organizations involved either. As the announcement in question reads, "Remember... Joining the AMA does more than put another line on your resume..." More-like it puts a smile on your face, a cup in your hand, and the opportunity to push drugs? Congratulations.

Sandy Errante

Bookstore needs more security

Dear Editor,

One of the most stupid and unfair policies in the UNCW school system has to be the rule of putting one's books in the little cubby holes outside the bookstore. Whoever wrote that one up must have been concerned with students stealing from inside the bookstore, but not worried about it occurring in their own breezeway.

It seems unfair that those of us who buy our books are forced to put them where those who would rather steal their books can get them. I had a very expensive book stolen from there the other day, and with exams approaching and people preparing to sell books back, I'm sure it will happen to others who fall victim to the bookstore's policy of no backpacks in the store making it easier for those who want to get money back on what they didn't buy.

If we are expected to put our semi-annual $300 investment back into the bookstore's hands just to be allowed to shop there, they should give us someone who will stay out there and watch them for us.

Right Field

Joseph Britt, syndicated columnist
PO Box 711 Dunn, N.C. 28339 C1987 LIT

As the controversy rages over how the deficit can be reduced—as certainly it must be—why not take a look at a few proposals I have not heard discussed. Let me say here that I am deadly serious.

Since there have been repeated suggestions for whopping increases in tobacco and gasoline taxes, obviously by enemies of the tobacco industry and "city boys" who don't understand that millions of Americans in rural areas have to drive many miles to earn a living and no car pool or public transportation is available, why not a substantial tax on all alcoholic beverages?

For years I have felt it was an outrage to grant a tax exemption for union dues. Let's do away with that exemption before the unions succeed in taking back the control they exercised from the 1930's until the 1980's.

If the workers think they benefit from union membership they don't need any exemption. If they are forced to join or pay tribute to a union as a prerequisite to making a living, then it's time to put the pressure on their state legislators for a right-to-work law.

And in right-to-work states where the law is being circumvented by the unspeakable device known as the "sweetheart deal" or where agency shop positions exist, they need to demand action to put an end to this.

Maybe the amount spent to fund abortions isn't too big an item, but every little bit would help. Plenty of adequate methods of birth control are available to all women.

These measure could be a double blessing, because in addition to saving tax dollars they might discourage consumption of alcoholic beverages, union participation and abortions, all of which the nation would be better off without.

I don't deny that I am motivated in making these suggestions by both the potential economic benefits and the possible side results, but the tobacco-tax people can't deny it either.

At least a cigarette smoker isn't going to go home and beat his wife, or kill or cripple one or more people on the highways, so why pick on the tobacco business while continually glorifying the use of the worst drug of all—alcohol.

Naturally I wouldn't expect any of these proposals to get to first base, but anyone, or all of them would, I believe, be a better alternative than what is likely to be done.

Public Safety Notes.....with Joseph Johnson, Director

Littering on campus becoming a problem

The other day, an Administrative Officer of the University ventilated extreme frustration to me, in reporting that she had observed a student throw some trash out of their car window. When this staff member attempted to confront the student about their littering, the student rolled the window up, turned the stereo up in the car and ignored the person.

Two groups of employees work very hard at keeping the campus of this University clean and tidy. Our grounds crew and our housekeeping staff have a very difficult job in picking up after all of us. They do an excellent job in keeping this campus in the fine shape that it is in. One of the first comments visitors make about the campus is how pretty and clean it is but, I can assure you, there is a never ending battle to keep the campus looking that good.

Every time one of us drops paper, or beer cans, or cigarette butts, or any other debris on the grounds of the campus, we are engaged in a law violation, littering. If any one of us marks on a wall without permission, we are also violating another State Statute dealing with defacing public property. I don't recall an arrest for littering or defacing public property on this campus in the last four or five half years. Maybe it is time we think about littering, the law and our responsibilities.

The grounds crew spends almost forty man-hours each day in picking up our trash. Not trash in trash cans but, trash from the grounds and the roadways. The housekeeping staff's job would be much easier, if all of us would put our garbage in the proper receptacles. Certainly, there is dust and dirt that gets tracked and blown in but, how much time could be saved and how many dollars could be saved, if all of us were conscious about where we put our debris. The aesthetics of this campus and the cost to keep it that way, are tremendous. We all need to be very conscious of the efforts in keeping it pleasing to the eye and sanitary.

Remember, the next time you get ready to throw something out, down or about, someone has to pick up your trash. If you believe that receptacles are not properly placed, or that we need more trash cans around, call Robert Warren, our Grounds Supervisor or Dan Geddies, our Housekeeping Administrator. I believe they would appreciate your input and I know they would appreciate your consideration and assistance in keeping the campus clean and beautiful.

Student apathy needn't be a part of college life

Apathy is frightening. The apathy at this school is particularly frightening, because UNCW is building into one of the foremost schools in the state. As the university Trustees, Advisors, faculty and staff struggle against the flood tide of students who are applying to UNCW, the school is undergoing changes to accommodate and many decisions are being made.

UNCW is rapidly becoming a very popular place to go to school and perhaps the students who are here now need to realize that their presence can make a difference for students who will be attending the University in the upcoming years.

A report presented in last week's Seahawk on the swelling of the University showed some of the difficulties that are arising from the expansion of the University. This is the time for students to become involved in the changes and help solve some of the problems.

Many people do participate, but the number of interested students is consistent with the amount of students enrolled in the University several years ago. One very active student I talked with commented,

"The same people do everything."

Please don't think I'm talking about being involved in everything and only going surface deep in them; I mean picking a pet project or two and truly supporting them. There are many organizations which are trying to make a difference, but don't have the student support behind them.

And how often do you get angry with the way something works (or doesn't work) at UNCW, but don't make a real effort to let the right people know how you feel about it, or contribute your "better idea"?

It's not that hard to write a letter to the Editor or attend a meeting where you can express your opinion.

Students need to become involved in the things that will make them familiar with all the benefits of the school. As much potential for lasting influence there is for students within the current decision-making state of the university, it's a shame that more people are not taking trying to make a difference.

Please don't criticize what you are not familiar with, or what you've not had an experience with. The opportunities for expression at UNCW are virtually limitless. Nurture a concern for tomorrow's UNCW as well as today's. This is the time to make a difference.

The Other Side with Rick Cairns, columnist

Columnist's words not as bold as television

Television has come a long, long way. I have noticed that the networks have gotten bolder than ever this season, and nobody seems to care. I certainly don't care. The nastier, the better as far as I'm concerned, but I have cable and can see anyone doing anything to anyone, which makes network television pretty wimpy. It's like a few years ago when Jimmy Connors was asked why he mellowed out, and he replied, "I didn't change, it's just that someone worse than me came along." So while cable is getting all the attention, network T.V. is getting guttier.

I haven't really tested my editor on censorship. I haven't used any real bad language, but in this weeks column every "bad word" I used has been said on network primetime

So, of course it can be printed in a hip college newspaper—right left? When television shows started forty or fifty years ago it was pretty tame, to say the least. Censorship rules were very strict. Lucy couldn't sleep in the same bed with Ricky. You talk about uptight. It was so ludicrous to think that they were married on the show and in real life even, and they had twin beds. Now that's sick!

For a long time if a couple were seen on a bed together, they had to have one foot on the floor. That seems so demeaned, to go so far out of the way not to show anything which may remind anyone of sex.

I have experimented with the one foot on the floor stuff, and it does hinder sexual variations, but I've got good old Yankee ingenuity, and there are definite possibilities (You must be in pretty good shape though.)

The first couple shown in bed together were Mrs. and Mr. Brady of the Brady Bunch. I bet that was exciting for the viewers, and I wonder how many unwanted teenage pregnancies resulted from it?

Saying the word "pregnant" was forbidden at one time, and now you can see racially mixed couples working at getting pregnant under a sweaty sheet. The times they are a changing.

This season I have noticed the networks fascination with the word "ass", particularly NBC. It's not one of the deadly seven which George Carlin made so popular, but it is pretty risque for the tube. Over the years I have heard quite a variation of "ass words" on T.V. Aspirin, ascertain, assemble, ascent, assine, jack-ass, ass, wise-ass, smart-ass, pain in the ass, and kiss my ass!

It's not so much the words used, but how they are used. The new woman on Cheers told Sam that he's got two strikes and no balls. I've also heard that some guy doesn't have the "stones" to sue someone. I wonder what they meant by that? A doctor on St. Elsewhere told his girlfriend that his board hasn't been shined in a month, and she said something about a spit shine.

Those old shows would never make it today. If Gilligan's Island were prime time today who would believe that those men wouldn't be dogging the two chicks? If I were on that island I'd be all over Maryann the moment the Minnow hit the island. Who would care about being rescued?

Kids shows have sexual innuendos. Jomby, on PeeWee's Playhouse was remarking on Cowboy Curtis's big feet, and Curtis said, "you know what they say about big feet don't you PeeWee?" Of course PeeWee replied, "gee, no Cowboy Curtis." As Jomby and Cowboy Curtis exchanged winks, Curtis replies, "it means that I have big boots." Now come on, we aren't stupid; we know what they meant—he has big hands!

What is next for television? A return to Walton's Mountain where John-Boy had an operation and is now John-Boy and is dating JimBob? Maybe Jomby will grant PeeWee his weekly wish, and PeeWee will get laid. What a frightening thought.

Students have a chance to face reality of hunger

Every time the minute hand of the clock sweeps 60 seconds, 20 people die from hunger related causes. Unpleasant! But I imagine this is not news to you. The reality of hunger in our world has been around as long as you have been conscious of world events.

Don't do that! Don't shake your head and turn away from this article! I know you know about the problem. I know there is a sense of helplessness in the reality that it never seems to go away, or even seems to get worse. Both our concerns and our efforts seem so puny. Still, for our sakes, as well as for the sakes of those who are in need, we need to maintain some level of commitment to doing what we can to relieve world hunger. In my value system, a full and meaningful life demands a balance between self-concern and other concern. The issue is not simply a matter of successfully ending hunger. The issue, for us, is faithfulness to values we claim to hold. We often give up when success does not come quickly. But if we are caring people, then we need to stick at expressions of caring for others even when the task seems insurmountable.

Hear the facts: One child in every ten dies before it's first birthday; children in the poorest countries are sick an average of 65 days a year; in 83 poor countries, 3 percent of the landowners control 80 percent of the land; people in richer nations (25 percent of the world's population) eat 67 percent of the world's food.

Now what are you going to do about it? First, continue to educate yourself about the issue. There is enough food produced in this world to feed everyone who is alive! So what's the problem? Study the issue, think about it. Secondly, take part in the hunger week activities on UNCW campus this week. Sign up between 10:00 and 4:30 in the University Union to support a walker in the five mile hunger walk which will take place beginning at 3:00 p.m. at the 'portal entrance of the University Union this Wednesday. If you have a meal plan, sign up during lunch Wednesday to skip Thursday lunch in the cafeteria. The money saved will be donated to world hunger and that produced almost 600 dollars last year! Thirdly, think about your values and your lifestyle and the reality that your lifestyle is maintained by poor countries producing materials for export to us rather than food for their own people. In many ways economics systems related to food production are unfair and we benefit while others suffer. How might that fact impact your values and the way you live our your life?

Hunger is not going to go away. Neither is the need for you to educate yourself, act and think about your values.

Multi-media event examines Kennedy's death

'November 22...An

Assassination Revisited' opens at Front Street News

Front Street News announces a Multi-media presentation to be held this coming Sunday, November 22. An Assassination Revisited will examine some of the more controversial and questionable aspects that surround the assassination, 24 years ago, of President John F. Kennedy. Local actor Robin Dale Robertson is producing the multi-media presentation, based on information that he personally collected and researched over the past years.

Robin Robertson

Although the famed Warren Commission investigated the crime and determined that President Kennedy was killed by a lone gunman, a great many questions about the whole situation remain. There were 400 witnesses that day, and only one-third of them pointed out the Texas Book Depository Building as where Lee Harvey Oswald had fired on the President from. The other two-thirds of the witnesses recalled shots being fired by a gunman in a ground level grassy knoll. The Kennedy Assassination has remained a point of controversy ever since.

Over the years, theories that involve Texas right-wingers, the Mafia, the FBI, the CIA, the Russians, and Fidel Castro have all been examined. According to Robertson, just about anyone who for any reason disliked the President could have actually been involved.

Included in the presentation will be numerous slides, the famed "Zapruder Film", an exclusive 1986 taped interview with former Congressman Richardson Preyer, chairman of the 1978 hearings on assassinations, and an original monologue written by Robin Robertson, and performed by Raleigh actor Mark Uermohlen as Lee Harvey Oswald.

Robertson wrote the Oswald monologue after realizing that the accused assassin's twelve hour interrogation was never recorded or documented in any way. Because Oswald was beaten, denied the right of attorney, and never charged with the actual death of Kennedy, Robertson recreated what MIGHT have been his statement at the time. Since Oswald was murdered by Jack Ruby before he could testify, no one will ever know what information he might have provided.

November 22...An Assassination Revisited will be performed at Front Street News (9 South Front Street) on both Sunday, November 22nd at 2 p.m. and Monday, November 23rd at 7 and 9 p.m. Ticket price is $4.00 for the General Public and $3.00 for Students and Senior Citizens.

It was shallow!

by Anita Bradshaw

Opera House Theatre Company gave a special performance of "Camelot" before their 1988 season officially starts. They should have waited until 1988 as originally planned. Before I saw the performance a colleague and I joked about "Camel-trot"—it's no joke folks.

The performance was slow. It just didn't pace well, at all. Members of the audience were literally falling asleep. The fact is, there was no action and the play was stagnant.

Fredrick Delajo, cast as King Arthur, simply couldn't hold his own in the role. His interpretation of Arthur seemed to be one of a bumbling idiot. His lack-luster performance made you glad he lost Guenevere to Lancelot.

Cindy Colucci as Queen Guenevere was neither great nor horrible. She really didn't give presence on stage. If she had not sang solos she could just as easily been a prop. She fit in quite nicely with Delajo's lifeless performance.

Robin Robertson didn't do much for his Lancelot character either. He did flicker a bit with his "C'est moi" performance. For a moment I thought the play was taking a turn for the better—how silly of me!

Michael Titterton, Meryl, struggled to live up the disastar, but rubble is rubble and even a real wizard couldn't have salvaged this one.

The costumes, done by Cynthia Miles, seemed out of place. They were absolutely spectacular. Sparkles, and light flowing fabrics intermingled with the heavy metal and leather of the knights rendered an authenticity of the times. They were really wonderful and would have shown up even better if they had been adorned by actors and actresses willing to live up their parts.

A performance that should have been relaxing and entertaining left me feeling tired, tense and completely drained. All during the performance I struggled for the actors, with the actors and at last gave up and just struggled to stay awake.

Movie Update

by Anita Bradshaw

"Death Wish 4," starring the aging Charles Bronson, is just what you expect—a shoot'em up, blow'em up movie. Bronson as Paul Kersey is out for revenge on drug dealers. Two gangs are responsible for 90% of the drug dealing in L.A. Kersey sets out to make each gang think the other is killing its members. The police, naturally, are crooked, so that helps to thicken the plot. If you're not a Charles Bronson fanatic, skip this one, it's just like all the other Death Wish movies. I give it a three. Cinema Six, New Centre Three—R.

"Hiding Out" with Jon Cryer was filmed partially in Wilmington. Besides the fun of trying to pick out people and places you know (like UNCW's own Julie Brockman, Dick Olsen and Randy Harrington) there's not much to this movie. The story is supposedly this: A guy is to testify against some criminals, he's hiding from them because they're trying to kill him, and yet he goes in to public places, jeopardizes high school students' lives and doesn't guard who he tells his story. Just a wee bit less than realistic, don't you think? Save this one for the people that are in the film who want to see themselves and for their friends and relatives that want to see them on film! I give this one a three. Cinema Six-PG 13.

"Made in Heaven" with big brass names such as Timothy Hutton, Kelly McGinnes and Maureen Stapleton was made anywhere but Heaven! This movie is outrageously boring. Hutton's character, Mike, drowns, goes to Heaven, falls in love with Annie (McGinnes), and she is promptly sent back to Earth. Mike wants to go back to Earth to find her and the rest of the movie we follow Mike around. He doesn't remember he was in Heaven of that he's looking for the love of his life (or non-life since he is dead). He finally finds her (of course) and that's the movie. I'll be nice and give it a three. Oleander Twin-PG.

Del Suggs

Del Suggs in concert on Wednesday night

The University Program Board Coffeehouse Committee will present Del Suggs in concert on Wednesday evening. One of Florida's premier performers, Suggs, a popular singer and songwriter, brings his guitar to Wilmington. He plays before standing-room-only crowds throughout the Southeast, performing what he calls "Saltwater Music." This is one show you don't want to miss.

Drawing on his north Florida roots and gulfstream upbringing, Suggs has become one of the most popular performers on the college circuit. His new album, Wooden Boat, has just been released on Key Porpoise Records and it contains his most popular new material. His last album, Saltwater Music, has been compared to the best works of James Taylor, Jimmy Buffett and Paul Simon by the critics. It has received extensive national airplay after being endorsed by the National Federation of Community Broadcasters in Washington, DC. The album has sold thousands across America, and as far away as Japan and New Zealand. Suggs is also a featured artist on the double album Steve Meisburg and Friends: In Concert. Last year the television special "Del Suggs: With My Friends, For My Friends" was broadcast over satellite to PBS affiliates around the country. Originally broadcast live over WFSU-TV, the show was a 90-minute concert hosted by Suggs and featuring his music. The instant popularity of the program resulted in a local rebroadcast only two weeks later, and led to satellite distribution across the country.

Suggs tours exclusively on the college circuit, and performs in concert at over 75 schools a year. He has shared the stage with such notables as Garrison Keillor (of Prairie Home Companion), The Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Mac McAnally, Tim Weisburg, Gamble Rogers, Steve Meisburg, Jerry Clower, Pierce Pettis, and many others. Suggs has been recognized by and awarded endorsement agreements with Ovation Guitars and Peavey Electronics. These fine companies provide him with outstanding guitars and sound equipment for tour support.

The concert will take place at 8 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 18, in the University Union Room 100 on the campus of UNCW. The performance is free of charge and refreshments will be served.

"Steel Dawn" with Patrick Swayze is a futuristic cowboy movie of sorts. The people of Earth have depleted it's natural resources, mainly water. Everyone needs more water. Swayze is a nomad and wanders onto a farm, run by a woman. She is fighting the enemy of the valley, Dammil. Of course the crust of the film is how the nomad helps Kasha, the woman farmer, overcome Dammil. In the end the nomad, having done his duty wanders away. Give this one a three. College Road Cinema-R.

"Less than Zero" is a bit like "St. Elmo's Fire" though not as well directed, and with a few twists. It's about friendship and how, over time these friendships evolve, but still remain intact. A message about drugs being the ruin of people's lives is thrown in to see if you're paying attention! I'll give it a four (that's being extremely fair). College Road Cinema-R.

"Made in Heaven" with big brass names such as Timothy Hutton, Kelly McGinnes and Maureen Stapleton was made anywhere but Heaven! This movie is outrageously boring. Hutton's character, Mike, drowns, goes to Heaven, falls in love with Annie (McGinnes), and she is promptly sent back to Earth. Mike wants to go back to Earth to find her and the rest of the movie we follow Mike around. He doesn't remember he was in Heaven of that he's looking for the love of his life (or non-life since he is dead). He finally finds her (of course) and that's the movie. I'll be nice and give it a three. Oleander Twin-PG.

Film 'The Outing'

opens next week

"The Outing," a TMS Pictures release of a H.I.T. Films production, will open at theatres throughout the area on November 27th.

Starring Deborah Winters, James Hutton, Danny D. Daniels and introducing Andrea St. Ivy, "The Outing" was directed by Tom Daley. With Warren Chaney as writer and producer, and Fred T. Kuehnert and M.N. Sanoussi as Executive Producers, "The Outing" features special effects designed and created by Reel EFX.

"The Outing" concerns a high school student who unwittingly becomes the 'keeper' of an antique lamp which contains an evil, uncontrollable force. Inadvertently releasing the deadly spirit of 'The Jinn' from the lamp, the young woman becomes possessed as the lures her friends into a bloody outing of gruesome mayhem and fright...an outing of skeletons springing to life, of bodies snapping in half, of spears burrowing through the air and of poisonous snakes lunging in the dark...an outing of murder...

Writer/producer Warren Chaney was a professional magician before turning to film production, and many of the startling effects in "The Outing" were actually created from well-known illusionists' tricks. And like a true magician, Chaney quickly declines to give away any secrets behind the tricks.

"The Outing" is rated R (Restricted).

Steven Errante and the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra

Symphony concert on Saturday

The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra will present its second concert of the current season on Saturday, November 21, 1987, at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Under the direction of conductor Steven Errante, the program features four orchestral works from the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, by composers of four different nationalities.

The program opens with Symphony No. Two in D Major of Jean Sibelius, Finnish composer who lived 1865-1957. The second half of the concert includes "Fanfare" to La Perle by Paul Dukas (1865-1935) and "Irish Tune from County Derry" (better known as "O Danny Boy") by Percy Grainger (1882-1961).

The program concludes with the popular "1812 Overture" by the Russian composer Peter Tchaikovsky (1840-1893). The work will be punctuated by unusual and outrageous off-stage sound effects.

Admission to the concert is by season ticket or by individual tickets which may be purchased at Kenan Auditorium on the night of the concert ($5 adult, $2 stud./Sr. Citizen, and free for UNCW students). The program is sponsored in part by Physicians' Health Plan of North Carolina.

CAMELOT! Two Views

It was shining!

by Heidi Berge
Asst. Ent. Editor

The Opera House Theatre Company's production of "Camelot" is a visual feast worth experiencing. It is set in a romantically dark castle and spattered with colorful crests and costumes (many borrowed from DEC's "Konan the Barbarian" closet) to portray an excellent recreation of the "Dynasty" of King Arthur and Queen Guenevere.

You know the story: King Arthur dreams of creating a Round Table where knights can gather with the purpose of upholding morality, truth, and justice. But fate intervenes as Queen Guenevere falls in love with Arthur's prize knight, Lancelot. The story then weaves its way through the twists and turns of this medieval love triangle: your basic ancient soap plot...

But Opera House's "Camelot" is by no means a basic stage production. Director Lou Criscolo brings everything together for a synergistically magical evening.

Technical Director, John R. Sutton, II has outdone his technical work on previous Opera House performances with flash pots to introduce Merlin the Magician, erie English fog, and many movable set parts. The lighting and sets, designed by Jim Martz, are perfectly medieval and the characters are equally well developed.

Fredrick Delajo plays a young King Arthur who is idealistic and incapable if making decisions important to the plot as these characteristics are ultimately his demise as a King. Delajo sings some beautiful renditions of the play's hit songs "I Wonder What the King is Doing Tonight", "Camelot", and "What Do the Simple Folk Do".

Cindy Colucci's lyric soprano voice rivals that of Julie Andrews who first played Guenevere on Broadway. Her movements are royal, yet human enough to invoke empathy. The men in the audience can't take their eyes off her and the women sympathize with her plight. Lancelot, played by Robin Dale Robertson, can't take his eyes off Guenevere either. Robertson portrays a virtile Lancelot in smooth Robert Goulet style, singing a resigned "C'est Moi" and a memorable "If Ever I Would Leave You."

Comedic relief from the royally serious plot is provided by David Parker as King Pellimore whose sideways outlook on life provides lots of laughs.

Perhaps the most entertaining characters of this production however, are the ones on the "darker" side. Michael Titterton, of WHQR public radio, plays a tall, willowy Merlin so well that he seems to have stepped out of the dark ages onto the Thalian stage. His mix of comedic timing and stage presence make him bigger than life—as every wizard should be!

Ann Smith plays the seductive Nimur with movements that are often not too graceful but otherwise, we are able to see why Merlin follows her.

The role of Morgan Le Fey, the sweet-toothed nymph who lives in an invisible castle is portrayed by Beverly Skinner. The choreography, by Peri Crapo, is at its peak as Le Fey's two hawk-faced companions (Diandra Mundy and Penny Hayes) perform a fantastically bird-like dance in "The Enchanted Forest" while the illegitimate son of King Arthur and Morgan Le Fey, Mordred looms, Steve E. Cooper as Mordred, a mischievous entertaining foil for King Arthur who lounges on the King's throne when he's not around.

"Camelot" is a classic story and the performance at Opera House is worth seeing this weekend. Show times are 8:00 p.m. nightly Nov. 18-22. Student discount tickets are $6 and $8, available by calling the Thalian Box Office at 763-9328.

The Beasts of Valhalla A 1980's Pulp Adventure

By Scott Urban

I'm fairly certain few of you have read any pulp magazines, the primary source of escapist entertainment in the 30's, 40's, and 50's, after radio. Still, some of our culture's greatest heroic figures arose from the yellow-tinted pages -- the Shadow, Doc Savage, Buck Rogers. There was a pulp for every interest and occupation, but the ones that continue to garner the most attention are those devoted to "wired menace." The pulp's "wired menace" genre often featured a young, handsome hero defending his curvaceous lady-friend -- and in some cases, the world -- from a murderous psychotic or cackling mad scientist. The pulps weren't characterized by high literary style -- rather, the writing hurled you headlong through an adventure, leaving you breathless by the story's conclusion.

George C. Chesbro has come up with what has to be ultimate pulp novel for our decade, The Beasts of Valhalla. (Dell, $3.95). You have to buckle your seatbelt and unleash your imagination for this one. From the very beginning, you are invited to stretch your ability to believe -- and Chesbro makes you do it willingly. Beasts is the latest in Chesbro's series of novels featuring Dr. Robert Frederickson -- otherwise known as Mongo the Magnificent. Mongo is a dwarf who has worked as a circus gymnast and acrobatic star, who holds a PhD in criminology and a black belt in karate. He now works as a private detective in New York City and teaches at New York University. (Can you get that much to begin with? Gets wilder from here on out.)

The book's opening finds him gathered with his family in Nebraska -- but the occasion isn't a joyous one. His nephew is apparently the victim of a bizarre double-suicide pact. Reluctantly, Mongo is talked by his family into investigating further. What he discovers is a outlandish conspiracy that reaches far beyond the Nebraska fields -- a plot to accomplish nothing less than domination of the world.

Mongo; his brother Garth; Lippitt, an aged intelligence officer; Golly, a sentient gorilla; and Victor Bannister, a telepathic alien from a planet oppressing the immense powers and governmental backing of an insane family of genetic scientists, the Loges. Mongo and company uncover evidence that the Loges might want to bring dinosaurs back to life on the Earth. Or, they might want to turn all mankind into deformed mutants. Or --

Much of the novel's mystery stems from figuring out just what the mad scientists are up to. (How are we sw allowing all this?)

Then how about this for a plot complication: Mongo and his brother Garth have been injected with a serum that is slowly deactivating them -- reversing their genetic make-up. And if they can't discover the Loges' whereabouts on time, Garth is going to become a human-repilian hybrid. Got that?

I'm giving away some of the novel's more unique surprises, but believe me, there are even more in the story. The fascinating thing is that Chesbro leads you into all of this just slowly enough to let you buy into it, and just quickly enough that you keep turning the pages, wanting to know what happens next.

Even though Chesbro is primarily concerned with producing a roller-coaster of a read, he does make the reader stop and think about some very serious issues: Just where is humanity going -- and can we really say we've justified our own existence in the centuries we've been around? Part of the novel's attractiveness arises from the sheer charisma of its eccentric villains, who are almost charming enough to make us believe the world deserves Armageddon.

Some of the plot's excesses become a little hard to take. It's hard to believe such a number of high officials from various countries would back Loge's operation (of course, he doesn't tell his true motives, but still --).

I'm sure the reasoning behind some of the scientific explanations is more than a little flawed. And the highly-emotional bond between Mongo and Garth is a little saccharine at times.

Yet, if you're looking for something to take your mind away from classes, homework, students and sour love affairs, you couldn't ask for a more exciting diversion than Beasts of Valhalla. By the way, the rest of Chesbro's Mongo series is being re-released in paperback. And, if you enjoy this one, look for the others. In addition, Chesbro's novel Yell, a non-Mongo mystery, is also out in paperback from Mysterious Press.

Master Class scheduled for Sunday

A master class for area musicians will be held by John Gilmore this Sunday from 2:00 to 5:00 pm in King Hall on the campus of UNCW. University student, faculty, community members and their accompanists are invited to attend this free class.

Internationally-acclaimed John Gilmore is UNCW's returning University Foundation Visiting Distinguished Professor for 1987-88. He made his debut in October 1981 and has performed in more than 250 operas with the Met since that time, including several appearances on the "Live from the Met" telecasts on PBS. He has appeared with the Boston Symphony, the Minnesota Orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the National Symphony, the New York Philharmonic and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Gilmore's world premieres in 1986 include Penderecki's Polish Requiem in Israel, Messiaen's St. Francis of Assisi in France, and Glass' Civil War in Holland, then followed by a world tour.

Concerts for this season include performances in Seoul, Korea and Utrecht, Holland as well as in cities throughout the United States. Gilmore is also a recording artist for Phillips and Deutsche Grammophon.

Gilmore's master classes, designed primarily for musicians and actors, were highly successful last fall, and his reputation as an easy-going, informal music educator is well-known and appreciated by the amateur and professional alike. He understands that singers are sometimes intimidated by the demands of the Classical art song or opera aria.

For this Sunday's master class, music from Bach to Bernstein is acceptable and it would be a good idea to bring your own accompanist, although one will be available as well.

The master class is strictly audience participation. John Gilmore's unique combination of experiences, interest, and training should produce an informative session for the general public this Sunday, 2:00-5:00 pm in King Hall.

The World Within the Word: Performance and Literature

by Heidi Berge

What's going on in the Speech Division of UNCW's Creative Arts Department this weekend? Lots!

Children's literature, cultural tales, myths, legends, tall tales, and personal narratives are just a few of the events scheduled as UNCW hosts the Carolina Fall Festival in Kenan Hall, Friday through Sunday.

Randy Harrington, lecturer at UNCW and host of WJKA's "Midday" program says, "it's a chance for people around the country to explore the semantics of literary performance along different themes." Mr. Harrington will be one of the participating performers at the festival along with others of national origin.

This year's theme is The Oral Tradition: The World Within the Word. The theme centers on the performers being as true to the author's intent for the text as can be interpreted. In this way, legends, myths and tall tales may be preserved in their original fashion.

Some of the performers will use props, slides and music to convey literary meaning while others will not. The Fall Festival is a chance for performers to experiment and take chances with the literature as long as it is "true to text". Mr. Harrington says that performance can "transcend the barrier of time that keeps printed literature removed. It can be a very powerful thing."

The public is invited to attend the World Within the Word weekend, Nov. 20-22, by registering in the lobby of Kenan Hall, Friday at 12:00. The fee is $10 which includes a Saturday night banquet dinner.

Your Horoscopes for this week

by Joyce Jillson

For Wednesday, November 18, 1987

Moon in Libra prevails until 8:47 pm (PST) when it enters watery Scorpio. You'll find it easy to get the results you want in your career -- with a few positive surprise endings. If you make the right eye contact, you're sure to win the one you love. Keep things simple and basic. Purity of heart counts.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You may discover a surprising new dimension to your career. Continue to do your best. You'll make sure your competitive spirit works for you, not against you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Work keeps you busy, but you find a way to enjoy it. Cultivate your sense of adventure. Careers involving travel or promotion are now open to you. Trust your enthusiasms.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Your social life continues to be active; you experience an immediate rapport with others. Children may be resistant to your authority. Hobbies are satisfying.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). This is a day to be on the go; short trips are productive. You'll combat their problems as best as they can. Artistic inspiration is higher than usual. Spend on pleasure.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Put the finishing touches on your long-term projects. Others are drawn to your earthy nature. Legal affairs will proceed more smoothly than normal. Compromise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You attract the attention you desire. Look for the best in others and you'll find it. Keep the pace of your life moving forward. Turn problems into opportunities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Resist the impulse to take the path of least resistance. You need the support of others to get things done. Be willing to meet your loved ones halfway.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You may have an opportunity to increase your income. Others are likely to grant one of your wishes. Develop your social life by extending invitations to friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You have greater visibility today. New career projects are worth pursuing. If a relationship can't go well, let it go. Stay within the safe zone.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You have an opportunity to improve your mind. Long-range projects have an excellent future. You believe strongly in your ideas. Send an important letter.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Join financial matters during a period of adjustment. Start a savings program if possible. Your deeper emotions will seem overwhelming, profound, serious.

For Thursday, November 19, 1987

Moon in Scorpio is in the same sign as Mercury and Pluto -- an excellent time for pursuing your business. Important agreements are formed, perhaps on a large scale basis. One thing to remember: Keep your wits about you when it comes to bet. And, don't be outmaneuvered by the opposition. It could happen.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Go all out to secure a financial agreement. The intensity of your emotions may take you by surprise. You'll meet the heart of any problem. Do research.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Better communication helps your relationships. You have a profound emotional breakthrough. Don't let others pressure you into anything. You find success in the public eye.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You have your head full at work. Make major revisions in your day-to-day routine. Change your diet or start an exercise program; your body may be going through a purging process.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You don't have to be alone unless you want to. A love affair could change the course of your life. Develop your deeper creative urges. Get creative with your work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You may feel emotionally abandoned by others, part of a natural transition period in your life. Take care of home repairs. It's easier to attract money than you think.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Your profound ideas will meet with ready acceptance. Relative influence your life for good or ill. Complete projects so you'll be under less mental pressure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Concentrate on making money, stay objective and impassionate. The success you achieve will enhance your self-worth. 100 percent. Eliminate possessions you no longer need.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You may be objective about yourself. Major personal decisions should be made today. Even your mistakes will work to your benefit. You have the power behind the scenes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Stay on good terms with influential people; you may have an opportunity to increase your income. Others are likely to grant one of your wishes. Develop your social life by extending invitations to friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Stay socially active. It's better to be on the right side at the right time. Your friendships may be going through a period of transition. Be shrewd in business.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Concentrate 100 percent on your career. You radiate power and authority. Build your success on a solid home life. You may make a psychological break from one of your dreams.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You have penetrating insight into the deeper purpose of life. You're guided into the right profession. Important news brings the career you've wanted for.

We saw our first snow this week; it was kind of early for the white stuff, but it didn't stick, and was just enough to send everyone looking for a bowl of hot chili or home made soup.

The recent chilly evenings made us wish for steaming mugs of hot chocolate, too.

Both dishes can be made ahead on a weekend and taken back to college dorms or apartments, in order to fill those hungry tummies at night.

Chili is easy to make, freezes nicely and is ready at a couple of hours notice.

To freeze, use a double foil lined baking dish. Be sure to leave a generous amount of foil in order to seal your 'loaf' of chili. I use my bread pans and make several 'loaves.'

After the loaf is frozen, simply slip it out of the pan, seal the top and pop it back into the freezer until needed.

To make your chili, set aside at least a half hour to begin cooking and two hours for the cooking time.

You will need 2 pounds of ground meat which you will begin cooking in a large heavy pan like a dutch oven. Cook it until it has lost its redness and then begin adding the following:

Over your meat sprinkle 1 tbs of chili powder, 2 tea of salt and 1 teas of sugar. Blend well and all 1/2 cup minced green pepper, 1 1/2 cups chopped onion, cook and stir until the vegetables are just tender. Add 2 small or one large can of tomato sauce and one (use the water to rise out the tomatoe sauce can). Add a clove of garlic and cook over low heat (simmering) for one to one and half hours. Add a large (1 lb-14 ounce) can of red beans, drained, and cook another half hour.

This makes about two and a half quarts of chili and lots of good eating.

To make your hot chocolate mix you will need a large container for mixing and several large oleo bowls with lids for storage.

Mix eight quarts of dry milk powder, a 16 ounce of sweetend cocoa mix, a pound of sifted powdered sugar and a six ounce jar of coffee creamer.

I have sometimes used a cup of cocoa and some additional sugar and have gotten the same results. This makes 15 cups of mix.

To serve add 1/4 cup per

cup and fill with boiling water. We use big two cup mugs at our home so use a half cup of the mix. In fact we just keep a 1/2 cup measure in the cannister where the mix is.

Credit must be given as to where the recipes came from. The chili recipe came from the Hunt Wesson kitchen's cook book, "Hunt's Complete Tomato Sauce Cookbook." The chocolate mix from a booklet passed out at Christmas time by our local home extensions service.

Its name is a "Holiday Pot Purrie" (yes it is pot purrie, like a kitten purring, not French for a spicy mix.)

Everytime I look at my Hunt's cookbook I remember the then "society" now lifestyle, editor of the paper I once worked for.

A package was delivered to the office and it contained a soup mug, a can of tomato sauce and the cookbook. She generously gave me the cookbook, saying she had no use for it.

I'm sure that the mug, has long since been delegated to a yard sale and the sauce used up but my cookbook still gives good service and will for a much longer time. — LTJ Features

Clinical Genetics will be discussed here

(UNCW News) — "Clinical Genetics: The Ethical Dilemma of Human Birth Defects" is the topic of a talk to be held at 8 p.m. Nov. 19, in Room 100 of the University Union on the campus of UNCW. The public and members of the medical community are invited to attend this free meeting. Refreshments will be served.

Speaking will be Dr. Terry L. Myers, geneticist and medical doctor on the faculty of the department of clinical genetics at East Tennessee State University in Johnson City.

Sponsoring Myers is the UNCW Sigma Xi Club and Phi Kappa Phi honor society at UNCW. Support for the lecture was also provided by the College of Arts and Sciences and a grant from the National Sigma Xi, The Scientific Research Society, as a result of a proposal from UNCW psychology professor and local Sigma Xi secretary, Dr. Robert Brown.

Myers is a Sigma Xi National Lecturer who travels around the country giving lectures.

"The Sigma Xi National Lecturers are selected to participate in the national speakers bureau because they are outstanding speakers in addition to having an outstanding scientific reputation," explained Dr. Ron Sizemore, associate professor of biology and president of the 58-member UNCW Sigma Xi club.

Born in Tennessee, Myers studied biochemistry at Michigan State, molecular genetics at Florida State (Ph.D. 1969), and medicine at the University of Virginia (M.D. 1973), with a residency in pediatrics at Creighton University.

He is currently professor of pediatrics, obstetrics, and gynecology at East Tennessee State. His research interests in clinical genetics and DNA have resulted in numerous professional publications. His wife Marian is a neonatologist.

In addition to speaking Thursday evening, Myers will be on campus at UNCW during the day meeting with several classes including one in human genetics.

Intrafraternity council plans for Greek Row

By Chad Adams,
Staff Writer

For the past few weeks the Intra-Fraternity Council (IFC) has been meeting with a local realtor with the hopes of building an off-campus fraternity row to provide housing for UNCW's growing Greek population.

Carl Trost, president of Pi Kappa Phi fraternity, made it clear that the idea is only in the planning stages and that actual construction probably won't occur for "about two years."

He was very enthusiastic about the plans thus far and stated that should the plans succeed, the row would "definitely increase the focus of the Greek system for the University."

Dan Belcher, the newly elected president of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity, was relatively uninformed about the details surrounding the idea, but stated that if the chapters could raise the money, this would be "the best thing that has happened to this University in a long time."

Melody Morton, president of the Delta Zeta sorority, was also very excited about the idea. She made mention of the common problems associated with the plans that involve zoning for the project and the raising of money by each individual chapter, pointing out that these problems are normal and that they shouldn't hold the project back.

Overall she felt that the row would make people, especially incoming students, much more aware of the Greek system and make the Greek system a more prominent aspect of the University.

In the past two years the Office of Residence Life has tried to incorporate, what has appeared to have been, Greek housing into Hall '85. Charles A. Maimone, Head of Residence Life, mentioned that the housing that was set aside for the Greek chapters had been open to any campus organization, but that will happen.

the Greeks were the only ones who took the opportunity.

He also stated that the Greeks did not affect the 60% of on-campus housing set aside for incoming freshmen.

Jeff Steinmiller, the academic advisor for the Greek system at UNCW, stated the realistic view that this idea is at such a primal stage of development that it still stood the risk of not succeeding, but that it very well could. He also stated that the University was in full favor of the row and that he, too felt that this idea represented definite progress for the Greek system.

At this point, it would be difficult to criticize the actions taken by the IFC. There is still far more that must be done as the idea is only in the planning stages. UNCW can only wait to see what

Appalachian discusses housing on campus for Greeks

The concept of Greek housing has been considered by ASU for years, but had yet to be acted on.

"The Board of Trustees has endorsed the concept of Greek housing. The stumbling block is how to finance it," Assistant Director of the Student Development Center Dino DiBernardi said.

Any housing built on university property must be self-liquidating. This means that the funds would have to be obtained through student fees.

DiBernardi said State Farm Field and the area above Stadium Field are possible sites for Greek housing. At the present time, three fraternities have houses: Pi Kappa Phi, Lambda Chi Alpha and Tau Kappa Epsilon. Cannon Residence Hall houses Sigma Nu, Delta Chi and all of the campus sororities.

"Pi Kappa Phi has a house," Pi Kappa Phi President Bill Maycock said. "The Mountaineer Pi Kappa Phi Alumni Association owns the house and we rent from them, but we take care of the cost and rules."

Students have mixed feelings about the idea of Greek housing.

"It depends on who pays for it," Joe Melton said. "If the Greeks pay for it themselves I'm all for it."

"Making Cannon dorm all Greek was the most unfair thing this university had done for its students," he added.

"Greek housing would add a social center where we could have controlled parties, especially if you built it in the right place, away from residential areas," Sigma Nu member Jeff Merritt said.

"I think Greek Housing would be good but it would make the Greek system grow and I think the system needs to stabilize right now," Chi Omega member Laurie Blankenship said.

"I think that if we had Greek Housing it would've eliminated all of those problems we had last summer," Phi Mu member Pam Mills said.

DiBernardi also said he felt Greek housing would encourage alumni to return to ASU.

It pays to graduate, study shows

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS) — It pays to graduate from college.

College students who graduate earn an average of $672 more a month than students who drop out of college before graduating, the U.S. Census Bureau estimated in a reported released Oct. 1.

They gross an average of $1,841 a month, while people who hold two-year degrees average $1,346 a month.

"The piece of paper," concluded the Census Bureau's Robert Kominski in a statement accompanying the report, called What's It Worth? "means something to employers and to the success of individuals."

Law, dental and medical school grads, the study found, earned about five times as much per month as high school dropouts.

People who earned doctorates made a little more than four times more than high school dropouts, who average $693 a month, while students with four-year undergrad degrees made more than twice as much.

The Census Bureau found about 21% of the population holds a college degree.

Timing and luck help Rowsom's life with Pacers

Sunday night, Brian Rowsom made his debut in the National Basketball Association. Although he didn't play, for the first time, he was on the Indiana Pacers' active roster in a regular season contest. It also marked the first time a UNC Wilmington player has played in the NBA.

For Rowsom, the chance almost slipped away. After being picked in the second round and 34th overall, Rowsom struggled through training camp. Because of an agreement between the owners and the NBA Players' Association, Rowsom and all other rookies could not tender contracts with their respective teams until the end of an October 1 moratorium. Because of this, Rowsom was denied the chance to go to summer camp with the free agents and rookies for valuable NBA-style experience.

Rowsom

The summer camps are where players get to know their team's system before joining with the veterans in the fall camps. Rowsom missed out on this, which could have proven to be fatal or extremely lucky in regards to his chances early in the year with the Pacers. In the professional ranks, you have to have all the breaks and Rowsom has had more than his share so far.

Rowsom's first break came with the retirement of Pacer forward Clark Kellogg over the summer due to bad knees. Rowsom then went to camp in October and didn't play to the level he had at the Big W. Rowsom was a pitiful 4-of-18 from the floor, which didn't impress the Pacer brass. But luck shined on Rowsom once again as he suffered a sprained ankle in Indiana's last exhibition game.

This gave the Pacers the excuse to put Rowsom on the injured reserve, allowing Coach Jack Ramsey more time to decide on two other players to keep, Greg Drieling or Stuart Gray, instead of possibly getting rid of Rowsom.

The Pacers have yet to make a decision between Drieling and Gray, but in the mean time, guard Scott Skiles has fallen to victim to recurring back problems. That would have solidified Rowsom's spot, but guard Clinton Wheeler of tiny William Paterson College has developed, giving the Pacers another option.

Another bad sign for Rowsom is the Pacers have inquired to other clubs for help at the forward position. According to the Sporting News, the Pacers offered the Boston Celtics a second round draft pick in 1988 for the services of forward Fred Roberts. Luckily for Rowsom, that deal fell through, allowing Rowsom to stay on with Indiana.

Rowsom's activation Sunday is due to a couple of excellently timed factors that came in the past few days. Veteran forward Herb Williams was placed on the injured reserve, opening a spot for Rowsom over the weekend. Besides giving UNCW's all-time leading scorer and rebounder another opportunity, during Rowsom's stay on injured reserve, Drieling and Gray played very sparingly, showing their true worth to the club.

A decision will be made between Drieling and Gray, which will solidify Rowsom's spot. With luck on his side, he has made it through most of the NBA's tests. Unless the Pacers deal for a proven forward, Rowsom should make it the rest of the season with Indiana.

Next year, the NBA will expand, giving Rowsom an even greater opportunity for a decent NBA career. If the 6-9 former Seahawk makes it that long, he can look back on the one thing that most professional players would kill for, the power of luck and great timing.

For most professional players, timing and a little luck make all the difference in surviving the pro ranks.

Czechoslovakia bounces past
Seahawks in exhibition, 72-69

By Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

The Czechoslovakian national team placed five players in double figures as they nipped the Seahawks, 72-69, in an exhibition basketball game Monday night in Trask Coliseum.

Oto Maticky led all Czechs with 16 points and 12 rebounds, while comrades Ron Svoboda chipped in 12 points.

The Seahawks led, 41-34, at the intermission, but the Czechs shot 65 percent (13-of-20) from the floor in the second half to erase the UNCW lead.

Stefan Svitek opened the second half with a three-point bomb to close the Czechs to within four. Following a Willie Williams' jumper, Svoboda hit two jumpers and Vlastimil Havlik added another, the Seahawks saw their lead fall to a single point, 45-44, with 16:50 to play.

UNCW held on to the lead until the Maticky hit two free throws with 6:30 to play, giving the Czechs a 61-59 lead.

The Seahawks fell behind by as many as six points, but closed to a single point with 1:44 left on a Houzer dunk.

Juraj Zalfa hit two free throws to give the Czechs their final three point lead with eight seconds to play.

UNCW had a chance to tie with a three pointer, but Willie Williams was called for traveling and the Czechs were able to run the clock out.

Larry Houzer led all UNCW players with 21 points and seven rebounds. Guard Antonio Howard was 6-of-8 from the floor in scoring 18 points, but foul trouble held the 6-3 junior to just 25 minutes of playing time.

UNCW fell behind early when Leos Krejci hit a bank shot to give the Czechs a 16-11 advantage. But the Seahawks came right back, taking the lead for good in the first half when Larry Houzer scored on a dunk. UNCW added to the lead, on a Howard breakaway dunk and closed out the half when Houzer completed a three-point play.

The second half belonged to the Czechs who put their height advantage to use. The Czechs at one point were 11-of-14 from the floor, while the Seahawks went cold, shooting just 28 percent during that same period.

The loss was Head Coach Robert McPherson's first loss to a national team. While at Sam Houston State, McPherson engineered Wins over Mexico, Bulgaria and Bolivia. It was UNCW's first-ever encounter with a national squad.

UNCW will open their season Nov. 28 when Georgia Southern comes to Trask Coliseum.

UNCW place third in CAA volleyball tourney

by D. Curtis Nichols
Asst. Sports Editor

The UNC Wilmington volleyball team competed, in the Colonial Athletic Association women's volleyball tournament, this weekend and walked away with third place, their best finish ever in the tourney.

The Lady Seahawks out lasted George Mason in a five set marathon match, 12-15, 15-5, 7-15, 15-8, and 18-16, in the semi-final round to secure third place overall.

William & Mary won the tourney for the second straight year defeating James Madison in the final match.

Through out the tournament the Lady

'Hawks were led by all-tournament selection Mary Lou Ryan. Ryan was the Lady 'Hawks sole representative among the tournament squad.

In the earlier rounds UNC Wilmington was set back by William & Mary, 4-15, 10-15, 11-15. The Lady Seahawks bounced back to embarrass host East Carolina, 15-4, 17-15, 15-2 enabling them to proceed into the semi-finals.

The All-CAA team was announced with sophomore Yvonne Holan being elected to the first team squad. Junior Lisa Mills and senior Dede Devoley made the second team.

The Lady Seahawks finished the season with an overall record of 26-11.

Swimmer glide past Charleston

From staff reports

The Seahawk men's and women's swimming teams downed the College of Charleston in a non-conference dual meet. The Lady Hawks cruised past the women of Charleston, 112-77, while the men won, 120-76.

Three Lady Seahawks captured two events each, with Stephanie Carlson leading the way. Carlson won both 200 meter individual medley and the 100 butterfly. Mary Tarter and Kristie Hassell were the other double winners for the Lady Swimmers.

Mary Beth Mills, swept both the one and three-meter diving events. Completing the Lady Seahawks dominance over College of Charleston.

Yarko Foltyn led the men by winning the 200 individual medley and the 100 butterfly.

Mike Walker won both the diving events with scores of 78 and 91.05 in the one and three-meter events respectively.

IN THE BLEACHERS

"Look, I've got to have some protection or I'll never complete a pass. Grimmy, sometimes I think you guys are purposely letting me get sacked."

by Steve Moore

Bender, Gary '87-88
Seahawk captains

From staff reports

Senior guard Mark Gary and junior forward Greg Bender have been selected co-captains for the 1987-88 UNC Wilmington Seahawk basketball team, head coach Robert McPherson has announced.

The pair bring a wealth of experience into the upcoming campaign, seeing action in every game during their collegiate careers. Gary has started 36-of-87 games, while Bender has been in the starting lineup in 54-of-59 games.

"These are the two most logical choices coming back," said McPherson, who enters his second year with the 'Hawks. "They have the leadership qualities we need for this position."

The 6-2, 185-pound Gary is the only member of the squad to play all four years at UNCW. He averaged 7.1 points, 1.6 rebounds and 2.5 assists last season, scoring 21 points in the team's near-upset of Navy in late January.

McPherson said, "Mark's a very heady player. He loves the game, wants to win and will do the things necessary to accomplish that goal."

The Alexandria, Ind., product started 11 of the last 12 games in 1986-87. The Seahawks posted a 10-3 record when he started last season.

Bender, meanwhile, continues to improve going into his third season in a UNCW uniform. A native of Fremont, Ohio, the 6-6, 195-pound cager averaged 8.1 points and 5.3 rebounds one year ago.

"From the weight room to conditioning, to on-court practice, Greg works extremely hard in every phase of the game," added McPherson. "He is probably the most competitive player we have on the ball club. He comes to play every day and every night."

Bender has played in every game since donning the Green and Gold two years ago. An excellent student, he was named to the All-Academic team in the Colonial Athletic Association.

Moreover, he finished second in the CAA in free throw shooting in '86-87, hitting 78.2 percent at the charity stripe.

THE STUDENT NEWSPAPER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AT WILMINGTON

Dec. 1, 1987

Presidential candidate visits here Friday

Michael Dukakis, a candidate for President of the United States, will be on the campus of UNCW Friday, December 4 to give a talk to students, staff, and members of the Wilmington Community. His speech, scheduled for 12:30 P.M. in Room 100 of the University Union, is hosted by the UNCW College Democrats.

Dukakis is a third-term governor of Massachusetts and one of the leading Democratic Party candidates for the presidency. He is a graduate of Swarthmore College and the Harvard University Law School. As governor of Massachusetts he presided over a very successful period in the state's economic development. The state's potential deficit was turned into a substantial surplus, and Massachusetts passed the largest tax cut in its history. Over the last three years Massachusetts has had the lowest unemployment rate of any industrial state in the nation.

After Governor Dukakis' talk in the University Union, he will hold a press conference, meeting with representatives from the local media as well as reporters from national newspapers and radio and television stations.

Suspect arrested after UNCW truck stolen

By Elizabeth Peacock,
Staff Writer

On Nov. 18, a University employee reported that the UNCW Physical Plant Truck he was driving had been stolen while he was in Dorm 85. According to the officer on duty, the keys had been left in the truck.

The next day, an off-duty Campus police officer spotted the same truck in Wilmington. According to Sgt. Regina Lawson, the state license plates had been replaced with stolen tags.

"The officer followed the subject in his private vehicle and obtained a partial tag number," Sgt. Lawson stated that the partial tag number was then reported to the Wilmington Police Department who then picked up the subject. "The truck had minor damage," Lawson said, "The University emblems were peeled off and the window was [broken]."

Campus Police officers spotted a possible security risk on Nov. 24—the keys had been left in two of the Physical Plant Trucks while they were parked in Lot BB. The vehicles were unsecured and the keys were returned to Roger Fry, the director of the Physical Plant.

In other reports, a female student pulled into parking lot G and struck a police officer's car. She hit the right rear door of the police car; the damage was estimated at $150.

In follow up investigations, the Campus Police Dept. was advised by a student that the obscene phone calls she had been receiving had ceased since she filed a report with their department. They closed the case until further complaints from the victim or her roommate.

A University citation was issued to two high school students trespassing on the school grounds last week. The warning ticket was issued for engaging in disorderly, abusive or inappropriate behavior/sexual encounters. The parents of both subjects were called to pick up their children.

With Christmas time approaching, Heather Goodman of the Union administration and Shelby Gray have their hands full decorating the courtyard at the Union.

Open forum on Union Tuesday

Students will get an opportunity next Tuesday night to help decide what they want in a planned annex to the University Union.

An open forum on what the University community expects from a Union will be held in the Hawk's Nest at 6:30 p.m. Dec. 8, according to Associate Vice Chancellor (Student Affairs) Richard Mullendore.

The new building — actually the soon-to-be renovated brick warehouse located at the corner of Riegel and C Street — has been approved by University officials and the actual planning has been turned over to the University Union Expansion Committee, chaired by Dr. Mullendore.

"We encourage anyone with an interest in the University Union to attend," he said. "We want to hear ideas not just from the 'mainstream' students, but we need the input of minorities, commuter students, non-traditional and graduate students as well."

"This is an excellent opportunity for the students to tell us how we can better serve them in the future."

Give Santa Claus a hand this week

By Jefferson Weaver,
Editor in Chief

A student organization is asking for help in making this Christmas a little merrier for residents of the Caswell Center for handicapped persons.

Sam Sumner, president of the Student Council for Exceptional Children, will be working with more than thirty other members of the council operating a booth in the University Union today through Thursday as part of Operation Santa Claus.

Sumner told the Seahawk that the SCEC will be accepting donations of pajamas, toilet articles, transistor radios, watches, etc. to donate to the 1000 residents of the Caswell Center. Sumner emphasized the need for "basic adult-type gifts."

"There are fewer than twenty-five children at the center," he said. "We will accept toys but we are more interested in items needed every day by grown men and women."

Chief Justice Geoffrey Moore resigns

By David King,
Staff Writer

The November 23rd SGA meeting opened with Geoff Moore resigning from his Chief Justice position. No reasons were given for his resignation. Petitions for Chief Justice position will be accepted for the next ten days beginning Tuesday, November 24th.

During his executive report, President King announced a fund raiser for the executive fund. The fund raiser will sponsor the USA Student Discount Cards.

The remainder of the meeting was spent in executive session and focused on interviewing Supreme Court Justice nominees. After members voted by secret ballot, nominees Chris Meredith and Janice Anbur were elected to the Student Supreme court.

This week's SGA meeting centered around SGA budget issues before an Executive session was called. This is the third time an executive session has been called in the past month.

Prior to the session, President King reviewed the SGA general Fund and Presidential Budget. The general budget, previously $10,000 in debt, was assisted by $14,000 of credits coming in from Capital Improvements, Yearbook Ads, Riser Rentals, and Budget/Allocations. This leaves approximately $4,000 in the SGA general fund for the remainder of the school year. When asked if this low amount was alarming, President King said that it was not because most SGA expenses are already allotted for and more incoming credits are expected from such things as riser rentals.

At this time, executive session was called to interview Ron Ham, nominated last week for Sophomore Class Supreme Court Justice. He was approved as Supreme Court Justice as the executive session continued for another hour.

Sewage problems traced to grease

By Allie Ellis
Staff Writer

The maintenance crew at UNCW has been working hard the past month to eliminate the sewage problem at the University Union. The crew has had to dig up the line several times during recent weeks to determine what was causing the slow drainage.

According to the Maintenance and Operations Supervisor, Jim

Mathis, the blockage in the line "was a greasy-soapy solution that hardened into wax." Because the wax solidified, nothing was able to pass through the line, causing the drainage problem.

Mathis found a large amount of grease in the line, which prompted him to contact the Hawk's Nest and question their disposal of grease.

Kim Murrill, Assistant Director of ARA Services, stated the employees of the Hawk's Nest were disposing of grease adequately. According to Murrill, "a seminar was held to show the employees the proper procedures to follow in disposing of the grease."

The grease is filtered daily, while new grease is added every three to four days. The old grease is stored in barrels outside the Union until they are full and a company outside of Wilmington comes and disposes of them.

According to Ms. Murrill the grease could have seeped into the sewage system because the grease barrels are stored near a drain.

Both the maintenance crew and the Union hope the problem has been solved by chemicals which were poured into the line which will dissolve the wax solution, and the grease barrels will be stored in a different location.

Students still not practicing safe sex, according to survey...

By Amy Odom,
Staff Writer

UNCW students should know by now the necessity of "safe sex", but according to an on-campus survey released from the Health and Wellness Center, there is question on whether students are putting their knowledge into practice.

Although the term "safe sex" has recently referred mainly to using a condom to prevent the spread of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, it also refers to using condoms and other forms of birth control to prevent unwanted pregnancies.

The Health and Wellness Center reports that within a 3 month period alone, from August 1987 to the present, 80 pregnancy tests have been administered at the center, with 20 of them testing positive.

"We are very concerned about the finding because from July 1986 through July 1987, a 12 month period, we had 53 positive pregnancy tests," commented Deborah Haywood, the coordinator for the office of Health Promotion.

"The center is here to help students make responsible choices, and with these alarming statistics in we'll be working even harder."

Deborah Haywood, health promoter.

The results of the on-campus survey of 463 UNCW students taken last spring give Haywood and others at the center a better idea of student's sex contraceptive knowledge, attitudes, and practices. Of the 463 people who identified themselves as sexually active, 3 out of 5 of them said they have experienced pregnancy scare at some time during their college years.

Sixty-three percent surveyed said that their method of birth control or their partner's method of birth control was the oral contraceptive, or the pill.

Although the pill is one of the most reliable forms of birth control, there are problems that accompany it. First, Haywood says that it will only work if the pill is taken responsibly, which is every day at the same time.

Another problem is that one pack of pills costs $13 to $15 a

During the entire academic year 1986-87, a total of 230 pregnancy tests were conducted at the campus Health and Wellness Center, 53 of which produced positive results.

During the first three months of the Fall 1987 semester, there have already been 80 pregnancy tests conducted, 20 of which have turned up positive. Now for the scary part: UNCW campus health officials don't know how many students go to off-campus clinics or independent practitioners.

*The Student Council for Exceptional Children will be accepting donations for the Caswell Center Wednesday through Friday in the University Union. *An open forum on student ideas for the planned University Union Annex will be held Tuesday, Dec. 8, at 6:30 p.m. All students are urged to attend this important meeting.

"It's not a matter of higher sexuality" says Deborah Haywood, Coordinator for the Office of Health Promotion for the University. "It's a mixture of not practicing safe sex and lack of knowledge among the students."

In results revealed from a survey taken by UNCW students in the Spring of 1987, 58% of those polled believed sex was o.k. if you simply liked each other.

According to Ms. Haywood, 3 out of 5 girls experience a pregnancy scare during their college years. Ms. Haywood revealed that there was a 60% to 70% chance of becoming pregnant if no birth control measures are taken during a sexual encounter.

The Student Health & Wellness Center can help a great deal both in knowledge and in birth control facilities. The Center offers a biweekly seminar for girls and couples. The staff at the seminar will answer any questions in a sort of "Did you know" type seminar.

The Center also distributes pamphlets on the different types of birth control and is willing and able to start those on a type of birth control provided you are equally willing and able. The physical and first pack of birth control pills are free of charge and cost only $12.00 to $15.00 a pack every month afterwards, about $.50 a day.

Announcements and events

In last week's CAMPUS COMMUNIQUE, it was noted that UNCW has had six faculty members to receive Fulbright grants. Since that writing the University Advancement office has been notified that two other faculty members have also received this prestigious award. Joining the list of scholars is Dr. Tony Puente, Associate Professor of Psychology, and Dr. Jim Sabella, Professor and Chairman of Sociology & Anthropology. Due to the extreme prestige of this particular award and the fact that records have not been kept—the University Advancement office would like to keep a permanent accounting of UNCW's recipients. If you know of another UNCW Fulbright scholar—call Patsy Larrick at 3169.

The Lower Cape Fear Hospice will present its annual "Festival of Trees" Saturday, November 28, through Sunday, December 6, from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. at the Hilton. Featured attractions will include some 85 elegantly decorated Christmas trees, continuous live music from area musicians, gift shops for holiday shopping and many other special events. Proceeds from the "Festival of Trees" will benefit HOSPICE, a program of care and support for terminally ill patients and their families. $3.

Dr. David Allen, special assistant to the vice chancellor for student affairs for student life studies, will deliver a seminar TODAY at 4 in UU-207. The seminar is based on his recent research of female students at UNCW and Peace College and is titled "UNCW Women: Persistence Withdrawal Patterns?"

The UNCW ceramics class will sponsor a ceramics art show and sale of students' works in Kenan Hall December 3 & 4 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. All works are originals and would make ideal gifts for the upcoming holiday season.

Reception for Graduates to be held

Acting on recommendations of the 1988 senior class, the University has planned a reception for the 330 students who have applied for graduation in December. The Hors d'oeuvre Reception will be held Dec. 9 in Room 100 of the University Union from 6 p.m. until 7:30 p.m.

A reception is usually given in the spring for all the year's graduates, but many of the December graduates do not return to this area and do not attend. Chancellor Wagoner and other senior officers and faculty members have been invited to attend. All the prospective graduates are invited to join them for this evening which precedes the exam period.

"I didn't know we had a Baptist Student Union on campus," is a comment the members of BSU have heard many times since beginning eight weeks ago. BSU began at UNCW in the early 60's but merged under the umbrella of Campus Ministry in the 70's. At that time there were fewer students at UNCW and the denominations were joining together. Now, because of the diversity and increase of students on campus, several organizations are starting up again and new ones are being formed.

So, what is Baptist Student Union? It is a fellowship of college students seeking to find and implement God's purposes for them and their world; a program that provides opportunity for an inward journey of spiritual growth and an outward journey of service to others; an organization recognized on more than eleven hundred campuses in the United States and in several foreign countries.

The Christian witness of Southern Baptist work in institutions of higher learning in response to our Lord's command to make the gospel known to men.

BSU is a program that seeks to involve students in an inward journey seeking to answer the question "Who am I?" It helps students gain a total picture of themselves, their work and their world. BSU is also an organization that coordinates the best efforts of its members in an outward journey of service and ministry to other persons as each seeks to answer the question "What shall I do?"

Among the activities sponsored by BSU are leadership conferences at Ridgecrest and other Baptist Assemblies.

The UNCW Baptist Student Union meets every Monday night in University Union Room 207 from 7:00-8:00 p.m. During this hour we have a time of fellowship, Bible study and prayer. (Submitted by Carlene C. Evans, BSU Minister)

There will be a celebration honoring UNCW's 40th Birthday held in conjunction with the annual Christmas dinner sponsored by ARA for faculty, staff and their families.

The menu will include hors d'oeuvres, carved roast beef, ham, chicken, green bean casserole, sweet potatoes, rice pilaf, stir fried vegetables, dinner rolls & butter, and assortment of pies and cakes, iced tea and coffee. Dinner will be $5 with the CAMPUS COMMUNIQUE or $6 without. Children under 12 may eat for half price.

A cake cutting will be held, and entertainment will be provided.

Employees are invited to bring their children to a Story Telling hour beginning at 4:30 p.m. in the University Union Living Room. Santa Claus will make a special appearance during the story hour. For dinner reservations, please call 3534.

Wrightsville Beach Parks and Recreation Department will be sponsoring a Christmas Wreath Making Workshop Dec. 7 from 7-9:00 p.m. Class includes construction of an attractive CHRISTMAS WREATH for you to keep! Sandy Overbeck of the Harbor Island Garden Club will instruct this class at the Wrightsville Beach Elementary School. Cost for this workshop is only $4 which includes all of your supplies. Register by calling the Wrightsville Beach Parks and Recreation Department (256-4744). Class size is limited so call today!

The UNCW Historical Society will sponsor a public lecture by Charles Townshend at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, Dec. 3 in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall. The title of his lecture will be "The Function of Terror in Politics." The lecture is free and open to the public.

Townshend is a professor of modern history at the University of Keele (England), and is currently a fellow at the National Humanities Center. He is the author of several important books on political violence and counter-insurgency.

The college level service club known as Circle K International, whose parent organization is Kiwanis International, is having a planning and strategy meeting in SB 206, Wednesday, December 2 at 6:30 p.m. All university students, men and women, are urged to meet with the group, which is in the process of revitalizing the already chartered UNCW club. Anyone with Key Club experience and all students who are eager to develop leadership and community service skills, as well as to have fun and friendship, are invited to get in on the planning for the spring semester blitz for members and projects. For more information, call 262-3000, 395-3525, or 392-3063.

The local rock band Valence will be at Jakes in Jacob's Run on Thursday, Dec. 10 for a Pre-Exam Jam. Valence will play from 10:30 p.m. until 1 a.m. and admission will be $1. All ages are welcome.

The UNCW Student Government has an opening for Chief Justice. Qualifications for the position are UNCW student status and a completed petition of fifty names. If interested inquire at Union Room 200 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Student loans still available for 1987-88

Page two

RALEIGH. College Foundation Inc. (CFI) announced this week that educational loan funds are still available for the 1987-88 academic year. CFI has financial commitments from North Carolina banks in excess of its current estimates on loan needs for funding its three educational loan programs for 1987-88.

N.C. Insured Student Loans are for dependent or independent students and are based on financial need. N.C. Supplemental Loans for Students are for independent self-supporting students and are not based on financial need. N.C. PLUS Loans are for parents of dependent students and are not based on financial need.

The loan funds are available for applications received by the Foundation up to 30 days before the end of the academic period specified in the loan request. According to their enrollment situation and financial situations, students may specify the full academic year, or specific semesters or quarters, as their loan periods.

Additional information and applications are available from financial aid offices at higher education institutions or directly from College Foundation Inc., P.O. Box 12100, Raleigh, NC 27603.

Leadership America applications being accepted

The International Leadership Center is seeking applicants for the second session of its summer-long leadership development program. Titled "Leadership America," this is a national program for college students who will have completed the junior year of their undergraduate studies by June 10, 1988.

Fifty outstanding men and women from campuses across the country will be selected to spend 10 weeks strengthening their leadership skills. The objective of the program is to prepare these students to accept major leadership responsibilities earlier in their careers and to handle them more effectively. This non-partisan program takes place between June 10, 1988 and Aug. 18, 1988.

The program places special emphasis on building an international perspective and on increasing its participants' understanding of technology. In addition, students will practice leadership in the group setting, increase their self-awareness and build their self-confidence.

Leadership America includes one week in North Carolina, one week in the Rocky Mountains and three weeks in Dallas, Texas. It also includes a four-week internship in business, government, or community service followed by a closing session in Washington, D.C.

Students incur few expenses in Leadership America since most costs are underwritten by corporate sponsors. In addition, participants receive a $2500 scholarship.

To be eligible for selection to Leadership America, a student must be currently enrolled at UNCW and have completed the junior year of his or her studies by June 10, 1988. The primary criterion for selection is that the student have an "outstanding potential for leadership." Selection will begin in February 1988, and invitations will be extended in mid-March.

For additional information about Leadership America, contact Linda Moore, Director of the Union, in the Union, room 214 or call 395-3283. Applications for this program must be completed no later 5 p.m. on January 20, 1988.

UNCW Toastmasters chartered by nat'l. group

(UNCW News) — The Smooth Talkers Toastmasters Club of UNCW-Wilmington held its charter dinner Nov. 17, at the Hilton Inn downtown. Receiving of the charter officially recognized the club as one of the thousands of Toastmasters Clubs established internationally.

District 37 Governor Sheila Miller, of Cary, presented membership certificates to each of the 20 charter members, and presented the club's charter. She encouraged each person to use Toastmasters as a tool to help them continue growing and challenging themselves.

District Administrative Lt. Governor, Patricia Tierney of Research Triangle Park, and Southeast Division Governor, Mary Brown of Greensboro, also attended the charter dinner. Other guests included Jean West, editor of The Tarheel Talker, the District 37 news magazine, UNCW, civic, and business leaders, and several members of the Wilmington Toastmasters Club, the Smooth Talkers' sponsor.

Toastmasters is designed to help each member improve general communication skills and leadership skills. This is accomplished through the delivery of prepared impromptu speeches, followed by an evaluation by peers. All of this is done in a friendly and supportive atmosphere.

Faculty sponsors for the Smooth Talkers Toastmasters Club are Dr. Sheila A. Adams, associate professor and chairperson for management and marketing, and Dr. David F. Allen, special assistant to the Vice Chancellor for student affairs for student life studies. The club mentor is Ms. May Craven. All are members of the Wilmington Toastmasters Clubs.

Wilmington area business index notes slight jump

Overall economic activity in the Wilmington area (Brunswick and New Hanover Counties) rose between August and September 1987. The September 1987 level of the Wilmington Area Business Index (WABIX), prepared by Dr. Claude Farrell and Dr. W. W. Hall, Jr., at UNC-Wilmington, stood at 153.01, 2.1 percent above the August 1987 level and 6.7 percent above the September 1986 level of the index.

Commercial capital usage was up 9.1 percent, and air passenger traffic at the New Hanover County Airport was 3.9 percent higher. Both employment and retail sales were virtually unchanged between August and September 1987.

The Wilmington Area Business Index (WABIX) is a monthly measure of overall economic activity in the Wilmington area. It has a base year of 1979. All data used in the index are seasonally adjusted. In addition, the retail sales data are deflated by the Consumer Price Index (CPI) and thus converted to 1967 dollars.

Groups learn to promote themselves at session

By Celeste Bulley,
Managing Editor

The student unawareness of the advertising resources available at UNCW lead the Student Activities Office to sponsor a publicity and promotion workshop Nov. 15.

Jeff Steinmiller, Assistant Director for Student Activities, opened the workshop by relating the differences between publicity and promotion and defining the goals of effective advertising.

Steinmiller first stated that it was important for students to know that promotion need not be expensive or elaborate, just carefully planned. He defined the purpose of promotion as getting people to develop a loyalty to your product or organization, in turn expanding your market.

Steinmiller continued by outlining the two major approaches to advertising, the shotgun effect and the rifle effect.

The shotgun approach is common to college promotions—a week before the event, a deluge of information appears on campus, usually on fliers.

The rifle approach is the well-planned method, with the promotion beginning 4 weeks before the event and consisting of a variety of materials.

After handing out suggestions for creative, inexpensive advertising, Steinmiller showed a few minutes of a publicity and promotion video which is available to groups through the Student Activities Office. He invited students to take advantage of the video by using it with their groups.

Steinmiller encouraged the attending students to become more aware of the University's publicity resources including clip-art books.

rubber letters for creating sheet banners, and a typeset machine.

Throughout his lecture Steinmiller stressed the importance of using a logo to catch the viewer's attention and keeping the information on the promotion materials simple. He told the students that "all aspects of the product must be true, specific and easily understood."

Steinmiller encouraged students to inform the University Advancement Office of their group's events a few weeks in advance. This office is responsible for publishing press releases to local media and can be a student group's most powerful resource in promotion. Steinmiller concluded the workshop by adding "Why create more work for yourself when someone has already done it?"

month. This even out to about $150 a year, a very high sum for a non-working college female.

Lastly, if you want to get a prescription to go on the pill from the Health and Wellness Center, females must first have a pelvic examination. The center has the capability to do only about 15 examinations a week, and they are usually booked up for weeks in advance. Until an examination can be scheduled, Haywood said that students are encouraged to use 2 forms of birth control, for example, condom and foam.

"The center is here to help students make responsible choices, and with these alarming statistics in we'll be working even harder," Haywood commented.

Bill could complicate financial aid if passed by Congress

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS)—Only freshmen and sophomores could get Pell Grants and only juniors and seniors could get Guaranteed Student Loans in the future if Congress approves a bill introduced last week by an influential legislator from Michigan.

Rep. Bill Ford (D-MI), a very influential member of the House education committee, explained he thought the bill, introduced Nov. 3, would help minimize student loan defaults and help low-income students finance college.

"The bill is an attempt to kill 2 birds with 1 stone," said Tom Wolanin, a Ford aide. "It deals with both the problems of equality and defaults." Ford's measure, if passed, would prohibit first and second year college students from receiving GSAs. Those students, however, would be eligible to receive Pell Grants, federal endowments that students don't have to repay.

If passed, the bill would let students get Pell Grants of up to $4,000 a year, up from the current $2,100 limit.

Pell Grants may only be used to pay for 60 percent for education costs, and although Ford's bill does not seek to change that policy, Wolanin said "we're open to change."

GSAs would be limited to upperclassmen and graduate students, and the maximum amount a student could borrow would be increased from $4,000 to $7,000 a year.

Community college and vocational school students would benefit most from the bill, Wolanin said, because they could complete their 2-year educations without incurring loan debts.

Existing federal student aid programs discourage low-income students from enrolling in colleges, Wolanin said, because many are reluctant to go into debt to do so.

Giving such students Pell Grants instead of loaning them money through the GSL program, Wolanin said, would "help them get started. Many students don't know what direction they want to go in when they first attend school."

The proposed legislation would reduce loan defaults, Wolanin reasoned, because many defaulters are underclassmen from low-income backgrounds who drop out of school when they don't find their niche.

"The problem is we lend money to people who are too high a risk," he said. Upperclassmen and graduate students, who presumably after 2 years of school know what they want to do with their college educations, are better credit risks, he said.

Wolanin doesn't believe the bill would require greater funding for education programs, since the federal government would save money from decreasing loan defaults and subsidies. Additional funds would be available since juniors and seniors would not be eligible for Pell Grants.

"According to my figures, it would be a wash. We would need no new money. We would just use what we already have more effectively."

But Bill Jamroz, a Department of Education spokesman, said the plan would bring additional costs. Another problem, he said, is that the bill calls for "a literal shooing of money into schools with no ties to the quality of education" provided.

Other observers, while supportive of the bill's goals, are reserving judgement until further study can be done.

"Ford is a very big student advocate and the bill comes with the best intentions," said Mary Preston of the United States Student Association. But "we're going to study it and make some recommendations."

"We have no position on it yet," explained Dr. A. Dallas Martin of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators. Martin called the proposal a "positive step away from the heavy reliance of loans," but said the bill "needs some refinements."

First children's health fair to be held at UNCW

By Jennibeth Kennedy,
UNCW News intern

The education majors of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will present "Kid's Care Health Fair" at 12:30 p.m. on Dec. 3, in room 119 of Trask Coliseum. The fair will be presented to third and fourth grade students from Cape Fear Academy.

The health fair is a project for students enrolled in Education 304, Health and Safety in the Classroom. They are required to create a booth with action oriented activities on health issues in which the children can participate. This year's activities include flexibility tests, fire safety tips, vision tests, water safety plus much more.

According to Dr. Nancy

Maylath, assistant professor of health, physical education and recreation, this is the first year that students have hosted the health fair for children.

"Usually the health fair is more of a show and tell between the students; one group demonstrates their booths while the other group observes. We decided to bring actual children in this year because the students do such excellent booths, and they wanted to see how children would enjoy such an activity," she said.

Along with the games and demonstrations, health tips and healthy snacks will be provided by clowns. "I think it will be an excellent fair and we hope to do it again for more students," Maylath said.

Rantings of a madman at 3:11 a.m.

The announcer on the radio just said that there are twenty-one minutes left before three o'clock.

Those fleeting memories of sleep that stir in the back of my memory are as long gone as the rest of my staff. Somehow, between the computers screwing up and telephone calls and missed assignments and "what pictures do you need this week?" and "how many pages are we?" and "How do I do this?" and "Jefffffff!" my column ends up getting written at twenty-one minutes until three in the morning.

The column is not being written on my faithful Remington, with the luxury of a typesetter to come in tomorrow afternoon and make out my scribbles in the margins. It is being written on a computer which suddenly — surprise! — has lost 95% of her (I mean, its) memory.

Being alone in the office does have its advantages; you only have to solve your own problems, you can do you work in sock feet and underwear if you so desire (and when the air conditioning in the union died this summer, I did exactly that); the phone rarely rings at fourteen minutes until three a.m. (how time flies.) Somewhere along the line, Alexander Graham Bell developed a thing for torturing the Weaver family; his invention is slowly becoming the bane of my existence, after a total of sixty-three (by actual count) telephone calls coming through the two lines we have in the Seahawk office.

Sixty three calls times an average of two rings per call before the phone is grabbed. That equals one hundred twenty six. 126 times about six individual contacts between the clapper and the bells in the phone equals...hell, I can't count that high. I'm an English major.

There is some incredibly idiotic bird sitting on the windowsill, watching me curiously. Am hungry enough that I could easily eat said bird.

Three minutes until three. Why do I put up with this? I'll work another four hours on a project for a class, get two hours of sleep, drink about four more pots of coffee (the stuff in my cup bites as I take a gulp. Good batch.) and be too hyper to sleep tonight. The only sure cure to the caffeine blues is to drink yourself silly, and that costs and hurts too much.

And what will I face tomorrow? More people telling me I make too much money in this job. I'll put those people on hold while I try to calm the electric company (because my bill is past due) and my landlady (because my rent is late) and the grocery store (I can't be overdrawn — I still have checks left...) and try to figure how well chainsaw fuel will run in a Chevy pickup.

While trying to juggle my own finances I'll be worrying — with good cause — about those of the paper.

Something is crawling across my desk. Oh, okay. It just jumped back in the coffee pot. No problem.

Maybe I'll get a bite of lunch about twelve. More likely, I'll suck down another cup of coffee, get on another caffeine jag, and try to stay awake through the class that my project is due in this afternoon.

At some point, I'll call my wonderful, beautiful ladyfriend who brought me two biscuits, a cup of orange juice, and a hug after she got off work at the TV station and tell her that I think I'm still alive. An absolutely incredible lady I don't really deserve.

Comic books, for pete's sake. I am getting a bad case of the remembers — daily walks through the woods with two dogs (now only occasionally, and we're one less), fishing in a slowly flowing river (with fresh water and nothing big enough to eat you), playing cards and smoking cigarettes in the attic (quit cards cause I lost too much money and quit smoking because I like to breathe occasionally), bike rides in the fall when the leaves are on the streets and the dogs are running alongside in the cool breeze and old folks wave at you and "damn" was the worst thing you ever said, and that only in extreme circumstances.....

To be sure, I'll have to ride down to Shallotte with the big redneck who delivers the papers on Tuesday night. Probably help him drop a few stacks here and there.

Around seven-thirty tonight, when I'm throwing

Geno (the redneck distributor) a handful of papers, someone will come from the other end of the hall and ask if he/she can have a new Seahawk.

When they smile, and say thanks, then I think I'll know why I'm sitting here at three-eleven a.m. writing a column about sitting here at three-eleven a.m.

Klan might be Kooks, but so was Abdul

This past weekend, about eighty folks who loudly proclaimed themselves to be proud, patriotic Christians walked from the corner of Third and Market streets, through Riverfront Park, and back up Princess to Thalian Hall, where they sought to help those of us who they say have strayed to mend our ways.

As if it weren't bad enough that these robed saints of hate were shouting white power slogans and trying to recruit new members, a group from the black community walked along next to them most of the way, shouting black power slogans and screaming about civil rights violations when Klansmen refused to give a rather vocal black muslim named Abdul Mohammed an application to join.

Abdul is a student at East Carolina University, according to the Wilmington Morning Star. One might think that in the enlightened (ha-ha) atmosphere of academia (even ECU), the idiocy of shouting challenges and epithets would be known.

But a Seahawk editor covering the rally spotted a UNCW student in the march. Said student was not a tobacco chewing redneck, either. Blacks hurled threats against whites, who replied with promises to "come in the night, when ya'll black boys ain't so brave."

About the only really smart folks out there were the families — some white, some black — that brought their children out to Sunday's rally for the Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

Before you prepare to call the American Civil Liberties Union, or your local lawyer, or your local Klan Klavorn, or the nouthouse (whichever you think appropriate), here us out, gentle reader.

We are not, as you well know, bleeding heart liberals. Nor are we quite as far to the other side of the fence as many of you think.

We say the family members — the majority of whom were silent and completely emotionless throughout the entire festivities — were smartest because they brought along children from ages three (when parental influence becomes stronger) up to twelve (about the time most of us are beyond hope.)

These kids saw a bunch of grown men and women dressed up in silly outfits, making absolute fools of themselves, and picking fights with one another (Quoth Abdul, "Come over here on the sidewalk and show me how big a man you are." Replied the Klansman, "You come on, boy. We'll put you in your place.") These are things that most kids — regardless of their parent's political persuasion — know are wrong.

The kids knew it was wrong to call each other names in public — especially some of the names that were being tossed back and forth. They knew it was wrong to pick fights.

And they probably could tell it was wrong to hate someone for no other reason than the fact that they are different than you.

Once again, we emphasize that we at your campus newspaper don't watch the world through rose-colored glasses. And some of us have a sincere cynicism for the idea of universal peace and love (can't and won't happen. Period.)

But the kids — and some of the adults, surely — saw that racism, regardless to who is calling whom which name, is something that needs to be outgrown by our society.

That will only happen when decision makers realize that over-compensation and recompensation and quotas and discrimination suits aren't the key.

And the chances of that happening anytime soon are roughly equivalent to those of Abdul showing up at the next rally in sheets and hood.

Senior says, "Clean it up, cheerleaders!"

To the editor:

Currently, I am a senior; and for the past three years I have been impressed with the UNCW cheerleaders. But, this year is another story... The repeated use of profanity in the cheers at the game on November 16, 1987, was in very poor taste! The cheerleaders are an elite group of individuals who represent UNCW and its character. Using profanity in the cheers is demeaning to the character of the university. To encourage audience participation in the cheers that contained the profanity was also degrading to UNCW's character. Personally, I do not appreciate the fact that profanity was being used and encouraged around young children at the game who look to us as role models. In my opinion, I feel the cheerleaders would receive more audience participation in the cheers if the profanity was removed from the cheers. I appreciate each cheerleader's dedication to the university, but I think each one should stop and consider what he/she represents.

Sincerely,

Karen Singletary

Reader disgusted at editor's column

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the article, "The quest for a roof, - and a good roomie," by Celeste Bulley, in the November 4, 1987 issue of the Seahawk. I read this article several times trying to figure out what Miss Bulley was trying to say, and why she felt she was such an authority on the benefits of dorm living.

My first question was did you ever actually live in the dorms? The article sounded as if you did not, yet you write that the transition from home to apartment is much like the transition from home to dorm would have been. BULL! Until you live in a dorm and experience what living like "Three's Company", with your roommate, and her boyfriend, puke in the halls, bathrooms, sinks, and showers usually every week Friday till Monday, fire drills at all hours of the morning, constant noise from inconsiderate "Neighbors", and no privacy... until you've experienced all of this, how can you say it is the same??? You can't.

I can tell you it's not because I went through dorm life my freshman year. I moved into Galloway in August, and moved out October 31, two months later. Coincidentally, I moved to Campus Edge, and the two are incomparable, and by far not the same.

I moved out of the dorms because problems weren't solved by the RA, the head of housing, or anyone else I contacted. Eventually, when my parents took action, the housing staff still failed to do anything. I could write a book about the problems I had while I lived in Galloway.

I couldn't help to wonder what your significance of being here, let alone, what your major in college is, after reading your response to peoples complaints that, "the dorms are far too noisy, and that it's hard to get anything done, I say tough." What are you saying? If you've come to college to study and learn... too bad, go home, or to the library. The dorms are places you pay to sleep in, not study. Is that your point???

You say, "Come on people, college is supposed to be a challenge." What kind of classes do you take? Obviously nothing very challenging. The point I'm trying to make is classes are challenge enough without putting up with the extra stresses dorm life can create. And having never lived in one, who are you to even form an opinion to suggest freshmen not be given a choice, and all required to live on campus? I could have respected your article, if you had lived in the dorms; loved it, and still be living there now. You're writing on something you know nothing about. A hint to successful reporting is research of your topics.

I found my apartment roommate my freshman year by a name I tore off a piece of paper on the bulletin board in the union. She was having similar problems in Graham. We both paid two rents that year, apartment, and dorm. I considered myself lucky because I knew a lot of unhappy people who wanted to move out, but couldn't. I still have the same roommate. We're juniors now. We still enjoy loud music, and a good time, but we also respect each other and know there's a time and a place for everything. My experience with dorm life, I wouldn't wish on my worst enemy, but I know some people enjoy living on-campus, and I think that's great. I think everyone ought stay where they best fit. I just pray it never comes a day at UNCW that students aren't given the choice of choosing on or off campus housing.

Our columnist has a few things to be thankful for

Before you read this column, I would like to remind you that my column is rated "PG"—some material may not be appropriate for children under twelve.

I understand that at least one student has called the editor, and made a big fuss about some words they believed to be too naughty for the Seahawk. Remember, this is a college newspaper, not The Weekly Reader, and I presume that my audience consists of adult students and professors.

I have no plans of changing my style because many people enjoy my column. I am merely attempting to show the lighter side of life, and hopefully get some readers to laugh with me.

I offer a simple solution to those of you who find my column offensive—don't read it!

Now that I weeded out the riff-raff, on with this week's column. Of course we just celebrated another Thanksgiving and I realized that I have plenty to be thankful for. I am simply going to make a list of all I am thankful for. The list is in no particular order of importance.

I am thankful:

1. That my family is healthy.
2. That I am healthy and fit.
3. For being back at school. If this sounds strange to you, believe me school beats full time work.
4. For WOZ — it keeps me partially sane.
5. That the Cleveland Browns are Super Bowl bound.
6. That the Cleveland Indians are in Cleveland.
7. That I have a beautiful, sexy wife.

following due to this column. (Remember if you enjoy this column every week, you may need to seek professional help.)

25. For not worrying about blowing noses when I give speeches anymore. In fact I joined the Forensics Team.
26. Not having to think about safe sex. I hate that term. Safe sex sounds like boring sex to me.
27. That I don't have to practice abstinence. I never had to practice as a teenager, I was damn good at it. A natural, I guess.
28. For deodorant.
29. For not having hemorrhoids, ingrown toenails and/or diarrhea.
30. For Brendles.
31. That I haven't puked in two years and ten months.
32. That it doesn't snow in Wilmington.
33. For the beach.
34. Bikinis.
35. For all the women who pose nude for magazines and movies.
36. For Rock-N-Roll, reggae and the blues.
37. For comedians like Sam Kinison.
38. For Late Night With David Letterman.
39. For Saturday Night Live.
40. For racquetball.
41. That I wasn't born in the middle east, where people get shot in the head everyday.
42. That I'm married, and don't have to try and impress women.
43. Finally, I am thankful that you read my column, because I enjoy writing it.

A Kennedy we can trust? Unlikely but true — maybe

I have, as any reader of this column must be well aware, supported President Ronald Reagan about 99 percent of the time, and I still do.

However I can not deny that once or twice during the controversy which ended in denying the American people an outstanding Supreme Court justice in Robert Bork he was unfortunate in his choice of words.

No doubt after the president thought it over he must have realized he could have hoped to gain nothing, but stood to lose a lot by his defiant statement to the Senate that he would try to "name somebody just as objectionable" for the seat.

In the third nominee it looks like Reagan may have come up with a man conservatives can live with and it will be somewhat difficult for the liberals to make a case against.

Essentially I am being cautious in my assessment of Judge Anthony Kennedy, but what I have learned seems to be very much in his favor, from the standpoint of Americans of my convictions.

It's going to be mighty hard for me to associate the name "Kennedy" with a "good guy". I respected the late president John Fitzgerald Kennedy, while disagreeing with him on most domestic issues, but for his two brothers I have only the deepest contempt.

Maybe Bobby wasn't quite as bad as Teddy, but it takes more than being assassinated to wipe out a miserable record.

Both supporters and opponents of any nominee for a seat on the federal bench should bear in mind one fact clearly demonstrated by history.

Nobody knows what a human being is going to do after donning the black robes and being seated.

It has been widely accepted that President Eisenhower thought he was appointing a constructionist and a conservative in Earl Warren, who proved to be the most liberal activist ever seated on the court.

Ike was quoted as saying the appointment was "the worst (expletive deleted) mistake I ever made."

On the other hand the sincerely liberal president Kennedy undoubtedly thought he was appointing a liberal in Byron White, who has made a name for himself as one of the most objective and conservative associate justices in decades.

Judge Kennedy recently scored another point with conservatives when the leadership of NOW (National Organization for Women) came out against him.

As columnist Jack Kilpatrick pointed out recently, NOW "represents a very small number of women, but it represents them very loudly."

If that group is against him, Judge Kennedy must have done something right. — LTJ

Beginning of Christmas season is time for reflection

The Christmas Advent season has begun. Advent means "coming toward" and we are certainly in a "coming toward" time. We are "coming toward" exams. It is a real time of stress with the papers to be completed, reading to be done and tests to be taken. Some are "coming toward" graduation which carries its own combination of joy and stress when jobs are not readily discovered.

But, in the main, it is the advent of Christmas, a season that takes us back to the ancient days when the Hebrew people were looking and waiting for a Deliverer, the Promised One whom they expected to bring them freedom from the stress of Roman oppression and personal hopelessness. Wise men from outside Palestine looked into the heavens for a sign of the One to come. Holy men looked into their scriptures. Common folk looked to the places of power. The anticipation of all was focused on the places of wonder and holiness and power.

It behooves us to remember that when the Delivered did come and was found, it was in the most ordinary of places. That moment, which for all Christians is the most holy because it is the intersection of eternity with human history, is a moment centered on the birth of a child to an ordinary family in a common stable in an obscure village in an occupied country.

The holiest, the most special moments of our life are often found in the most ordinary places. I hope you will not overlook them. Some very ordinary moments become transformed into times of high holiness through acts of love simply done. Find the housekeeping staff in your dorm, say thank you and see how it feels. Thank a professor when you discover that you have learned something new. Look at your friends one by one; figure out one thing you appreciate about them and tell them. Find the cafeteria staff and tell them about a meal you did like. Write down ten things you do like about yourself and celebrate. Stop a policeman and tell him that you appreciate him. If love lives in you, wrap it in swaddling clothes, the ordinary stuff of life, and give it to someone.

Every time you do, you will be taking a short, quick journey to the lowly Holy place deep inside each one of us. Such little acts of love feel good because they touch our own loving center. And, perhaps, during the stress of exams and in the midst of whatever anxiety is affecting us, we need to remind ourselves that what happened almost 2,000 years ago is irrelevant unless there is a Holy loving place within us. Let part of your advent journey be a new "coming toward" your deeper holier self.

"THIS IS YOUR CAPTAIN SPEAKING. THERE IS NO CAUSE FOR PANIC. EVERYTHING IS FUNDAMENTALLY SOUND... FUNDAMENTALLY SOUND... FUNDAMENTALLY SOUND..."

Mama's Kitchen

©1987 LTJ Features

Just recently we were traveling and stopped at a fast food restaurant for some coffee before continuing our journey. It happened that close by was a major university, and this restaurant was a favored haunt of the students.

It was filled to almost overflowing, yet was quiet. The young people were delving into books, discussing points of texts with friends, checking worksheets and drinking gallons of black coffee.

We questioned the counter person and were told that they were always busy but that this was exam week and the students had no where to go after the student union and/or library closed at 11 p.m.

Sure they had their dorm rooms or off-campus housing, but there was a need to be around people and that wonderful friend: hot coffee. This particular restaurant did a wonderful service: for a flat fee, the students could serve themselves unlimited coffee as long as they remained inside and followed house study rules.

This same type of arrangement worked well back 35 years ago, when my family joined thousands of other returning GI's on the road to an education.

Only it wasn't a restaurant where the students gathered, it was in each other's homes. But the rules were the same: company, coffee and the chance to discuss any problem as long as it pertained to the upcoming exam or class.

GI loans didn't provide for much beyond education and housing so most of us practiced sharing. If it was your house that was being used for the "study hall", others brought coffee and goodies.

It was back in the dark ages of my college days that a friend shared an absolutely sinful chocolate dessert with me. I would hate to see the cost of baking this treat now; it used real whipping cream and cost 45 cents, back then they were, at the most, 10 cents.

Study aid: notebooks, pens, paper, coffee, brownies.....

But also shared during that time was a chocolate brownie recipe which is still reasonable to bake. I share the recipe with you along with my best wishes for top grades and for those of you who will be leaving the hallowed halls of education at the end of this semester, have a great future.

You will need a large size (9 x 13 inch) cake pan, heat your oven to 350 degrees.

In a heavy pan melt four squares of baking chocolate (semi-sweet) and one cup shortening. Use any good one, but not the new whipped kind.

While this is cooling, beat together four eggs and two cups of sugar. Add 1 1/2 cups flour, 1 tea of salt, 1 tea of baking powder and 2 tea of vanilla.

Add the cooled chocolate mix and one cup of chopped nuts if you like.

Bake for 30 minutes, remove from oven and immediately pour a six ounce package of chocolate chips over the hot brownie. Cover it with a lid of some sort or a sheet of foil, to let the chips melt. With a knife or spatula, spread the melted chips like frosting, let cool and eat.

I have been told that these are the best brownies going except that they don't keep well... they get eaten too fast.

Hawks land a "Big Fish"

The 1987 college basketball recruiting season has come to a close and UNCW may have found the right piece to an almost complete puzzle. The Seahawks and Head Coach Robert McPherson went fishing and came up with a "Big Fish."

Matt Fish, a 6-9, 225-pound prep player from Washington, Iowa signed a national letter-of-intent to play with the Seahawks beginning in 1988-89. Fish chose UNCW over William & Mary, Northern Illinois and Baylor.

Fish comes to UNC Wilmington from an outstanding prep program at Washington. Coach Dave Tremmel has directed the Southeast Seven Conference member to a 32-5 record the last two seasons, including a 25-0 run to the state 2A championship in 1985-86. His 1987-88 squad is a solid bet to win the 2A championship again this season.

"Matt will be a good player in our league. We are very impressed with his competitive spirit and his potential as a basketball player. He's not going to be an impact player as a freshman, but can help us. He's capable of scoring and rebounding in double figures."

Robert McPherson
UNCW Head Coach

Fish is just the right player that is needed for the UNCW program to contend year and year out in the Colonial Athletic Association. His size at just 18 years old (he signed with UNCW on his birthday) is perfect and he has a good chance to grow even larger.

UNCW may have lost their opener, but they lost to a very experienced and talented team. Georgia Southern played Syracuse in the Carrier Dome in the first round of the NCAA's last year, losing by just six points. They returned all but one starter from that team.

Patience will be the key for the Seahawks and their fans. It will take time for all the new faces to come together and UNCW will struggle somewhat until that time. Come late January, this team has the potential to ride through a weak Colonial Athletic Association and into the NCAA's. It is just a matter of time and patience before these players mesh into a very formidable team.

Speaking of the Colonial Athletic Association, they had quite a rough opening week. Besides UNCW getting beat at home to Georgia Southern, the other CAA teams struggled.

Conference Champ Navy, in their A.D. era (After David Robinson) came from behind against Mount St. Mary's to erase a 15 point halftime deficit and win by just five. James Madison, who loves to run, got beat at their own game, failing to the faster Southern Methodist team, 121-80 in the Southwest Missouri State Invitational.

East Carolina, the doormat of the conference this year, beat Longwood College by seven points, while Seton Hall pounced on George Mason, in the Big Apple NIT Tournament.

Richmond put up the best showing, losing to 3rd-ranked North Carolina 87-76 in the Cental Fidelity Classic in Richmond. The Spiders return all five starters from last season and are the odds on favorite to win the CAA this year.

The most surprising showing was that of William & Mary under the direction of new coach and former Duke University assistant Chuck Swenson, who led the Tribe to within three points of San Belt member Old Dominion.

UNCW searches for first win

Seahawks beaten in opener

By Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

It was deja vu. The Seahawks led by as many as 12 points in the first half and six at the intermission, but a poor second half cost UNC Wilmington their season opener Saturday, a 60-53 loss to Georgia Southern, losers to Syracuse in last year's NCAA tournament.

Four of the five Georgia Southern starters scored in double figures, led by Anthony Forrest's 14 points. Center Jeff Hagans was the biggest surprise against the Seahawks, scoring 12 points and grabbing a game-high 11 rebounds.

Larry Houzer led the Seahawks 18 points, but was held to just two rebounds. Greg Bender added 13 points and led UNCW with four rebounds.

UNCW bolted out to a quick 17-10 lead behind four straight three-pointers. The Seahawks shot 60 percent from the floor, including canning six three-point bombs.

After Larry Houzer and GS's Jeff Sanders traded two baskets each, Houzer scored two more baskets and Bender added a three-pointer, giving UNCW their largest margin of the game at 28-16 with 5:46 left in the first half.

UNCW held this margin for most of the half, but Anthony Forrest canned a three-point shot with just three seconds left before intermission to cut the Seahawks lead to 35-29.

The second half was all Georgia Southern as they outscored the Seahawks 31-18. UNCW held onto their six point lead until 11:23 left in the game. Two baskets by Michael Stokes and one by Forrest cut the margin to 45-44 with 10:23 to play.

Georgia Southern took the lead for good at the 5:19 mark on a Charles Earls follow, 48-47. GS extended that lead to four when Hagans scored on the inside with 3:15 to play.

UNCW had a chance to change its momentum when Willie Williams went coast-to-coast with 1:34 left to cut the GS lead to 53-51. But Georgia Southern showed their NCAA tournament experience and Stokes calmly sank a three-point basket to put the game out of reach.

Cavs next obstacle for Hawks

From staff reports

Coach Robert McPherson is calling for a "more intensified effort" as his UNC Wilmington Seahawks meet Virginia Thursday in an important early-season contest for both clubs.

The Seahawks, 0-1, are coming off a 60-53 opening loss to Georgia Southern Saturday at Trask Coliseum. An NCAA Tournament participant in 1986-87, the Eagles came from 12 points down in the first half to topple UNCW.

"We just need to come out and play 40 minutes," said McPherson. The Seahawks also led their exhibition opponent, the Czechoslovakian Nationals, at intermission before dropping a 72-69 count.

"We've played very well in the first half of both games, but we haven't done a good job in the second half. We seem to lose our intensity. We just have to get a more intensified effort."

A bright spot for UNCW has been the play of junior college transfer Larry Houzer. The 6-8, 190-pound forward connected on 8-of-12 shots and added a pair of free throws for his game-high 18 points Saturday.

Houzer and junior co-captain Greg Bender were the only Seahawks in double figures. Bender contributed an all-around game, collecting 13 points, four rebounds and three assists.

McPherson said, "Larry has been very productive. They (Georgia Southern) did a good job of shutting him down in the second half. And Greg had a good game. He (Bender) worked hard at both ends of the court."

In Virginia, the Seahawks face a team much like Georgia Southern. The Cavaliers have one of the best guard tandems in the Atlantic Coast Conference with John Johnson (5-11, 178, Sr.) and Richard Morgan (6-3, 204, Jr.), but are still searching for the right combination up front.

Swimmers dive into the CAA

From staff reports

Although the conference championships in early February count the most, UNC Wilmington swimming coach Dave Allen says he's still putting emphasis on his club's performance in a tri-meet with Colonial Athletic Association opponents Richmond and American this weekend.

The Seahawks recently competed three times in four days as a test run for their grueling post-season schedule. The men defeated William & Mary while losing to Duke and N.C. State. Meanwhile, the women dropped all three meets.

"We swam very, very well at Duke and came so close," said Allen. "I'm not disappointed with the performance we put in. The traveling was really tough during that period. The Thanksgiving holiday are 1-4 on the season. Saturday's meet marks the halfway point on the regular campaign."

"This Saturday is very big as far as I'm concerned," he said. "It will affect our win-loss record. I consider both meets to be very important, and we'll prepare to the best of our ability."

"Obviously, I will not sacrifice the championships during the dual meet season. We won't be fully rested or shaved for the meets. But they are important because they provide motivation for the swimmers to continue to improve and show the program is working well for them."

Kris Hassell has turned in four of the top performances for the Lady Hawks so far this season with outstanding times in the 1000, 500, 200, 100, and 50-freestyle.

Phillipe Roth also has been successful for the Seahawk swimmers this season as he has swam three of the men's best times this year. Roth owns the fastest clockings in the 500, 200, and 100- freestyle events, through the first five events.

Anxious Lady Seahawks ready to open season at Coastal

From staff reports

One word describes the attitude of Marilyn Christoph's Lady Seahawks on the eve of the 1987-88 women's basketball season at UNC Wilmington.

Anxious.

Coming off a solid 19-9 campaign one year ago, UNCW is primed for its cage opener Tuesday (Dec. 1) at Coastal Carolina. Tipoff is set for 5 p.m. in Conway, S.C.

"We're ready to open," said Christoph, who brings a 130-85 mark into her ninth season in Wilmington. "We're really tired of practicing. We can't wait to play against an opponent other than ourselves."

"The freshmen have picked up our system well and our veterans have been playing well. We're very optimistic."

The Coastal Carolina trip marks the fourth time in the last five years UNCW has opened its season on the road.

"Anytime you go on the road to open the season, it's definitely a challenge," said Christoph. "It will be an even bigger challenge this year because of all the new players we have."

Christoph has seven freshmen, one sophomore and one junior college transfer who must blend with five returnees. She believes the right team chemistry and early success could help the Lady Seahawks challenge for a first-ever 20-win season.

"Our veterans will adapt quickly, but we have to have some success early to build the confidence of the young players. That will help us get through the holidays and into the conference schedule."

Speed will be the trademark of the Lady Seahawks again. Johnnie Smith (Nakina/Nakina, N.C.) leads the UNCW attack after pacing the Colonial Athletic Association with 7.0 assists per game in 1986-87.

Smith, a fleet-footed sparkplug, will have plenty of scorers wanting the ball. Returning are the nation's leading field goal shooter, senior Sharon McDowell (East Bladen/Elizabethtown, N.C.), in the post and sharpshooting senior Sissy Morse (Richmond/Rockingham, N.C.) on the wing.

McDowell led the nation in field goal percentage one year ago with a 67.7 mark. Sophomore Charlene Page (Northwood/Apex, N.C.) returns to the other wing after missing last season with a knee injury.

Most importantly, Christoph will have a deeper bench. Six-foot-two freshman center Christina Taylor (Pine Forest/Fayetteville, N.C.), crafty guard Cindy Makowski (Holy Family/Bayonne, N.J.) and newcomers Kelly Kincaid (Frank Co/Virginia Beach, Va.) and Jennifer Bennett (Union Pine/Cameron, N.C.) can all put the ball in the hoop.

In addition, junior college transfer Roslyn Flood out of Chowan Junior College in Murfreesboro, N.C., is another explosive scorer.

"We have so much more depth than we've ever had," said Christoph. "I'm going a lot of players this year, a luxury I didn't have last season."

"Because of our depth, we will be able to take advantage of our speed and play many different defenses, including more man-to-man. We lacked depth last year, and we were forced to back into a zone to protect ourselves."

After meeting the Lady Chanticleers, UNCW returns home for its home-opener against Atlantic Christian Dec. 3. The Lady Seahawks then hit the road for three games, visiting Western Carolina Dec. 5, UNC Asheville Dec. 6, and Campbell Dec. 8.

The Lady Seahawks open a five-game homestand Dec. 12 with a matchup against Baptist College. It will be the preliminary game to the men's contest with Atlantic Christian.

LADY SEAHAWK NOTES: Christoph will be going after her eighth straight winning season at the helm. Her only losing campaign came in 1979-80 when the club posted a 9-15 record. The Lady Seahawks are 6-2 in season-openers under Christoph's command. Both losses came on the road, a 71-60 loss at Campbell in 1984-85 and a 62-61 defeat to Furman in 1985-86. The Lady Seahawks tripped up Furman in the season debut in 1986-87. UNCW holds a 6-1 advantage in the series with the Lady Chanticleers, including a 107-44 romp last December at Trask Coliseum.

Boxing is no longer Howard's favorite

Thanksgiving weekend, 1987. I remember another Thanksgiving weekend, in 1982, as if it were only yesterday. A Thanksgiving weekend in Houston, when Larry Holmes fought Randy Cobb. Holmes brutalized him, punished his body, beat up his head, and in the middle of the broadcast I realized that I, like Randy Cobb, had reached the breaking point. It was an epiphany of sorts, on my own personal road to Damascus. So strong was my horror at the scene before me in the ring, so deep was my revulsion, I spoke out right on the spot. Like Roberto Duran, I said it loud and clear: No more. No more.

And with 1984 Olympic Boxing the only exception -- an exception I made for contractual reasons and because amateur boxing is an entirely different sport than professional boxing -- I ended my years as a boxing announcer. I ended the career that gave me my first real start, and my first real recognition in broadcasting.

I may have ended it, but others still think of me when they think of boxing. This past Wednesday, amid thoughts of Thanksgiving and that awful scene in Houston five years ago, I got a call from Arthur Miller, a professor of law at Harvard, with whom you may be familiar from his appearances on network television to talk, in his Socratic manner, about legal issues of the day. Professor Miller is doing a show about boxing, and he asked me to participate. I thanked him for the call. I thanked him for thinking of me. But I said, "no more."

I told him that he was bound, and understandably so to include all viewpoints on the question of boxing and whether it should be regulated, or banned. I told him he was bound to include the likes of Don King and Bob Arum, and boxing writers, and that too, was understandable. But the days when Howard Cosell appears with these people, to contest their every word, to puncture their self-serving arguments, to bombard them with evidence after evidence about the dangers of boxing, are over. No more.

But I talked with Professor Miller, who is an old friend, at length. I filled him in as best I could. I told him of the committees I have testified before, beginning in 1972. I told him that sometimes the memory of each committee is sharp and strong but at other times they blend into one huge room, with an immense table for witnesses and a dais of elected officials that stretches endlessly into the horizon. And there I sit, testifying to senators, congressmen or judicial officials, reiterating over and over and over again the same horrible tales of damage done to young men. I tell them about Benny Harjo, licensed to fight in Oklahoma with a pacemaker in his chest. I tell them about Sugar Ray Seales, beaten up, legally blind, and still licensed to fight in New York, New Jersey, Nevada and California, the four states that are supposed to be the best, the toughest, the safest, the strictest on licensing. I tell them that Ray Seales is now totally blind. I talk of Sugar Ray Leonard, licensed to fight despite surgery for detached retinas, and of Muhammad Ali, now brain damaged, punch drunk, that once-glorious man. I talk about the connection between the media and boxing and the insatiable appetite for fights that reigns supreme in every network television sports division, and now at places like HBO. How they'll put anyone into a ring, and hype it, and turn on the cameras, and let young men be destroyed for life. I talk and I talk, before federal committees and state committees.

I talk of danger, and corruption, and possible crime. I tell of FBI agents in my office, looking for information on a man named Lee, from New Jersey, who has been investigated time and time again for alleged criminal activities. This same man is the founder of the International Boxing Federation, the IBF. What is the IBF? An organization like the National League, headed by a man like Bart Giamatti? No. In boxing you can get up one morning, proclaim a federation or a council, line up fighters, get on TV, and you are "legitimate." That's the kind of sport boxing is. No safety, no standards enforceable, no controls, no unified body of reputing the sport, protecting the boxers and protecting the public. I have talked and talked and talked for a decade and a half. I have sought federal standards, a federal boxing commission, enforceable safety standards, uniform safe licensing standards. I have even sought the abolition of boxing. No supposedly civilized country should tolerate such a sport, at least in its present form. America should say no more to boxing.

The road to Damascus is a long one. I spent nearly 30 years covering boxing before that Thanksgiving weekend five years ago in Houston. Sometimes I wonder why, and how, it took me so long to say no more. The only answer I can find is that boxing, like every other business and every other sport, is composed of individuals. And in covering boxing this reporter met many people for whom I had respect and affection and admiration.

Thanksgiving weekend, 1987. Yes, it brings back those memories of a terrible time in Houston. But it also brings home, as it does every year, the things that I have to be thankful for. The opportunity to be with Muhammad Ali during those years, a witness to important history, not boxing. The luck in being born an American, in America, where much is wrong, but where much is right, and the opportunity to raise one's voice and fight for the abolition of boxing, or anything else, is my birthright. As is the right to speak out in print, on radio, and on TV, without fear of government reprisal. Sometimes you feel like you're crying down a well. But no matter. The right to cry "No more" is mine, and it remains as vital as when it was written as the First Amendment. For that I am thankful. For that, all Americans should be thankful. The public debate will always go on. And in America, there is always hope that one day, enough voices will cry, "No more" to boxing. And that will bring an end to a national embarrassment.

Veteran coach Terry Holland has 10 lettersmen returning from last year's 21-10 team that finished fourth in the ACC and advanced to the NCAA's.

"John (Johnson) had an exceptional 1986-87 season and we're going to expect him to build on last season," Holland said. "He's had the opportunity in previous years to play against some great point guards. He's benefited from those opportunities and I think is ready to step forward as one of the best point guards in the league."

"Richard can provide spurts of great play because of his ability to put the ball in the basket. He's improved his defensive significantly and has become a much more consistent player."

Virginia opened the season by trouncing Columbia, 83-58, Friday night in first-round play of its own Investors Classic Tournament. However, Rhode Island shocked the Cavaliers 76-73 Saturday for U.Va.'s first loss in the 11-year history of the event.

As expected, Johnson and Morgan led the way both nights. "They're very strong at the guard spots," added McPherson. "They'll look to run a lot and press. They probably have the best guards we'll face all year."

It will be UNCW's third trip to Charlottesville and second game vs. U.Va. The Cavaliers downed UNCW 87-42 in 1983-84, and the Seahawks competed in the Investors Classic Tournament in 1985-86, splitting games with Virginia Commonwealth and Towson State.

|      | BackcourtFor the Seahawks to contend with UVA, Williams will have to become apart of the UNCW offense or it could be a repeat of the season-opener, Williams, Gary and Howard match up well with UVA speed and quickness, but the experience of junior Richard Morgan and senior John Johnson will give UVA the better backcourt edge to Virginia.                                                                                                                                                                                     |  |
|      | FrontcourtQuestion marks abound in the UVA frontcourt, 6-11 Tim Martin anchors the center position, while combining with 6-8 Bill Bates, Mark Cooke is just another body at the other forward position until Mel Kennedy returns from academic troubles. UVA looks to be, but not a scoring threat as they constantly look for the guards to carry the score load. They will undoubtedly be the Seahawks' main target and Griffin speed at the wing, while the upstart crowd will put the Cavs away from the basket. Edge to Virginia. |  |
|      | DefenseUNCW should keep the game in the 50's, McPherson prides himself on stingy D which should help UNCW's chances. Virginia will have the height advantage and should control the boards. Yet it is the quickness of the Seahawks that will make it a tough night in Charlottesville for the Cavs. Edge to UNCW.                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |  |
|      | OffenseQuickness and the three-point bomb are the keys to UNCW's chances. If the Cavs can shoot better than their 40 percent average, they could coast, but if Morgan continues to be a gunner who his season, UNCW may have a great chance. UNCW must get production from all five players on the court. UVA's experience should be the younger Seahawks. Edge to Virginia.                                                                                                                                                           |  |
|      | IntangiblesVirginia leads this young series 1-0 and will have the luxury of playing on their home court. UNCW has played to the potential of their opponents most of the time in the last three years, so the game should be relatively close. UVA will go on a three game road trip following this game so there is a chance of catching the Cavs looking ahead and unprepared. Expect the upstart-minded Seahawks to play better than they did in the second half of their opener. Edge to UNCW.                                     |  |

Darryl Person and Ronnie Christian will see the most play, with Kemp Phillips providing some much needed depth. Anchored by Prop 48 victim, 6-9 Sam Gibson and 6-8 Jerry Holmes, the Mountaineers will have a slight edge in size. Pat Lyon and Ronnie Christian give App coach Tom Apka steady wing play. Bender should give the Seahawks an edge in the post, while House should have too much trouble with Holmes and the young Gibson. The key is who wins the rebounding war. Even. |  |

Porter could be redshirted

From staff reports

A decision on junior point guard Adam Porter's playing status will be made after the first of the year, according to second-year UNC Wilmington coach Robert McPherson.

Porter, who suffered a severe knee injury last Jan. 3 against Colonial Athletic Association rival navy, sat out the remainder of the season after undergoing surgery to repair the damage.

The Columbus, Ohio, native has been working out with the Seahawks daily but his movement is limited by the injury.

"We're going to wait until January to make a final decision," McPherson said. "After consultation with our team physician, Dr. Jim Hundley, we don't feel the leg has responded well enough for him to go on the floor without risk of further injury."

Porter, a transfer from Bennett Junior College in Kentucky, ended up starting seven out of the nine games he played in 1986-87, averaging 6.1 points and 1.9 rebounds.

A scene from "Barefoot in the Park."

'Barefoot in the Park' on campus Thursday

The Fine Arts and Lectures Committee of the UNCW, University Program Board will present the Alpha-Omega Players in Neil Simon's comedy hit "Barefoot in the Park" on Thursday, Dec. 3, 1987. The performance will be held in Room 100 of the University Union at 8:00 p.m. Admission is $1 with UNCW ID, $2 without. Coffee, tea, and a choice of desserts will be served.

One of the most spectacular successful comedies in American stage history, "Barefoot in the Park" had a Broadway run over three years. This play is the hilarious saga of a newlywed couple as they set up housekeeping in a rickety apartment, with complications provided by the bride's mother and an overly-friendly, odd-ball neighbor from the attic above them.

Joint recital next Wednesday

Saxophonist Shawn Hudson and flutist Rebecca Falor will hold a joint recital in Kenan Auditorium next Wednesday, December 9 at 8:00 p.m.

Both artists are accomplished local musicians who will bring to the recital not only the culmination of many long hours of practice in the UNCW music degree program, but also their experience from many extra-curricular honors and awards.

Shawn Hudson served in the U.S. Army Band Program where he graduated from the Army School of Music. He toured the country as 1st Tenor Sax in the 24th Infantry Division's "Viceroy's of Victory" stageband. Hudson has also toured with the groups "O.M." and "The Gathering". This year Hudson competed in Downbeat Magazine's National Finals with the UNCW Jazz Combo, received a solo award at the Chapel Hill Jazz Festival, received the A.J. Fletcher Music Scholarship and the UNCW Jazz Award. Hudson was also a winner in the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra's Concerto Competition and is currently a Junior at UNCW studying under Jamal Rossi and Frank Bongiorno.

Flutist Rebecca Falor is a senior music major at UNCW. She is the recipient of the William F. Adcock, Jr. 1987-88 scholarship for the Outstanding Senior music "Barefoot" takes its title from the scatter-brained bride's insistence that to walk shoeless through the February snow is a test of whether her young, rather proper bridegroom is sufficiently a free spirit to deserve her. Starring as the newlyweds will be Greg Hinojosa and Cynthia Wood with a supporting cast featuring Kathleen McKinney and Kevin Murray. The four actors are members of Alpha Omega Players, a nationally acclaimed touring company. In its 20-year history, the Repertory Theatre of America/Alpha Omega Players has traveled nearly 3 million miles and presented over 9,350 performances across the United States and Canada.

This merrily entertaining comedy will be directed by Drexel, producer and director of the Repertory Theatre of America/Alpha Omega Players.

major and already holds a Bachelor of Science degree from UNCW. She is a member of the Wilmington Symphony, a winner of the W.S.O. Concerto Competition for 1988, certified in Suzuki Flute and Piano Instruction, and is currently a faculty member at the Wilmington Academy of Music. She has also been a member of the 1984 N.C. Honors Band and the N.C. Southeastern All-District Band from 1981-84, attended the N.C. Governor's School in 1983, and was a 1984 Honors graduate of South Brunswick High School. Ms. Falor is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe C. Best of Leland.

Accompanying Hudson and Falor will be guitarist Kevin Winegar, pianist Jeff Lewis, Rob Morphy on Drums, and Randy Barnhill on Bass. The ensemble will perform contemporary and jazz selections such as Alexander Glazounov's Concerto in E-Flat, Les Treteaux by Pierre Max Dubois, and Hudson has dedicated his original up-tempo Jazz Samba San Juan to his friends and the memories he made while in the U.S. Army.

The joint recital featuring Shawn Hudson and Rebecca Falor will be held in Kenan Auditorium Wednesday evening at 8:00 p.m. The program is free to the public and students are invited to attend.

Arts Director attends NCAAE Conference

Recently, the North Carolina Alliance For Arts Education met in Raleigh to set an agenda for 1987-88. Plans which emerged from this meeting included a public awareness campaign for the importance of arts education for every age. The NCAAE is part of a national network of 53 states and territorial committees, funded in part by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Washington, D.C. It attempts to develop, promote, and maintain quality arts education programs throughout the nation.

In attendance at this NCAAE conference was Amy Brannock, Executive Director of The Arts Council of The Lower Cape Fear. Ms. Brannock expresses this:

"... Arts education is vital to the cultural health of our community. It builds our audiences of the future. Furthermore; The Arts are basic, and should be available to every school child. The schools and The Arts Council are working together to provide a variety of experiences to the children of New Hanover County."

The Arts Council of The Lower Cape Fear would like to extend an invitation of membership on The North Carolina Alliance For Arts Education to any individual or group with an interest in arts education. For further information about the NCAAE write to NCAAE, c/o TRAC, P.O. Box 521, Spruce Pine, N.C., 28777; call Susan Larson, Chairperson, (704) 765-7351, ext. 210 or call The Arts Council of The Lower Cape Fear at 763-ARTS. THANK YOU.

Sarge Parsons

Jazz concert Sunday

The UNCW Jazz Ensembles, directed by Frank J. Bongiorno, assistant professor of music, will present a concert at 8:00 p.m., Sunday, Dec. 6, in Kenan Auditorium on the UNCW campus. Admission will be $2. UNCW students free.

Featured ensembles will include the Jazz Fusion Group, Jazz Combo and the 7 o'clock Jazz Ensemble. The Jazz Fusion Group will perform popular compositions by Spyro Grys such as Morning Dance and Cafe Amore, followed by the awarding winning Jazz Combo with their renditions of Ms. B.C., I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face and Billy Strayhorn's Chelsea Bridge.

The second portion of the concert will be performed by the 7 o'clock Jazz Ensemble with special guest tenor saxophone soloist, Sarge Parsons. Parsons began playing tenor saxophone at age 12 and was performing professionally by age 15. During WW II he played in the US Navy Band aboard the troop carrier the USS Monticello.

After the war Parsons played in back-up bands for artists such as Pat Boone, The Four Lads, Florian Saybuck and Kitty Kallen. In the late 50's and early 60's he moved to New York City where he played various club dates and performed in the "pit bands" for many show personalities including Johnny Carson and Bob Hope. In 1958, the saxophone player also collaborated with fellow Big Band player Jack Olsen on the first recording of "Cool" from West Side Story.

Parsons moved to Wilmington in 1977 and has been an active performer in the jazz community. He can be heard frequently on radio broadcasts, local concerts, and in night clubs with his own group, the Swing Quartet. He recently recorded an album for Suma records, in Cleveland, Ohio which will be released in the near future.

Sarge will be featured on arrangements of Just Friends, Misty, and See Me with the 7:00 Jazz Ensemble. In addition, the 7:00 Jazz Ensemble will perform Cute by Neal Hefti, featuring Les Cross on drums, Greetings and Salutations, and special holiday compositions.

Editor's Note: Those who care to whet their appetites for the concert can catch Parsons at the Riverboat Landing this weekend. He'll be making a special appearance with The Jack Olsen Trio. Parsons and Olsen toured throughout the country together 40 years ago, and still appear together often. Showtime is at 9pm.

Theater company opens first play on Friday at Jacob's Run

A new theater company has opened in Wilmington and is scheduled to produce their first play December 3-4, and 5 at Jacob's Run. The play will be Sam Shepard's "Fool for Love". According to the play's producer and star, Joe Maggard, this is the first Sam Shepard play done in Wilmington. Maggard feels this sort of show is aimed at the college audience and "students will eat it up". He feels that Wilmington needs a change of pace and this is it.

Kay Joyner will play May, Tony Pender is cast as Martin, Tommy Hull is the Old Man, and Joe Maggard is Eddie. Lou Criscuolo will direct and Rheta Stone will be stage manager. Jim Marx will design the sets and Cynthia Miles will construct costumes.

Curtain time for the shows is 9:30 p.m. at a cost of $5.00 in advance and $6.00 at the door.

Barbara Bailey Hutchinson

In Concert Wednesday: One-Woman showcase

The Coffeehouse Committee of the University Program Board presents Barbara Bailey Hutchinson in concert at 8 p.m., Wednesday, Dec. 2, in room 100 of the University Union.

The program is free and refreshments will be served. The public is invited to attend.

Barbara Bailey Hutchinson is entertainment personified. She is an accomplished musician, offering a variety of music in a contemporary acoustic to light rock vein. She has delighted audiences from coast to coast with her sense of humor and sparking stage presence.

Hutchinson has performed in numerous clubs and hundreds of colleges throughout the country with return engagements to most. In the summer of 1985 she completed her first tour outside the continental United States, which included concerts in Hawaii, Korea, Japan, and The Philippines. Hutchinson has shared the stage with the likes of Billy Crystal, Lee Greenwood, Gary Morris, Asleep at the Wheel, and many others. She has also been invited to perform on various radio and television programs across the country including P.M. Magazine.

Having released three albums on Dakota Records, consisting primarily of her own material, Hutchinson has started recording on number four. Her albums have received airplay and critical acclaim. You may also have heard her voice featured on various national radio commercials for United Airlines and others.

In her first year of participation with the National Association of Campus Activities, Hutchinson was chosen to showcase at the 1983 national convention in Baltimore. There she received more bookings than any other musical act in any category. Her increasing popularity on college campuses has resulted in her selection as the 1985 and 1986 Coffeehouse Entertainer of the Year by N.A.C.A.A.

Hutchinson's music touches many bases including her own original material. She also performs many popular songs by well known artists and several lesser known selections by talented songwriters who have not yet reached national recognition.

Hutchinson chooses such a wide variety because, as she says, "I thought I had chosen music as my career, but I've since come to realize that my greatest love is entertaining and music in my avenue. It's those people that shake my hand, smile at me, and tell me I've touched a part of them, that keep me reaching out. So many have commented about my high energy on stage. The energy that an audience gives me is just supercharged into what I give back to them. We need each other for a good show."

"Just a guitar, a piano, and a woman—that is all. But what a combination it is when Barbara Bailey Hutchinson hits the stage!"

'Walk in Messiah' concert on Monday

The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra presents the annual "Walk in Messiah" on Monday, December 7, 1987, at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of UNCW.

Under the baton of guest conductor Joe Hickman, the orchestra will be joined by six area soloists and a chorus of volunteers performing portions of Parts I and II of Handel's great oratorio Messiah. While orchestra and soloists will have rehearsed for this performance, the chorus is open to anyone who wishes to sing. Sections of the auditorium will be designed for the four voice parts. Seating for the audience will be on the main floor and the balcony.

Soloists for this performance are Beth Bell and Alice Pierce, sopranos; Susan Braziz, mezzo-soprano; Jerry Cribbs and Michael Rallis, tenors; and John Pierce, bass.

This most popular of all oratorios contains familiar choruses such as "And the Glory of the Lord" and "O Thou that Tellest Good Tidings." The performance will conclude with the "Hallelujah" chorus. The tradition of a "sing-along" chorus began in Wilmington in 1979.

Admission to the concert is by season ticket or single tickets available at the door for $5 for adults (including seniors) and $3 for seniors and students. Performers should also bring a vocal score.

Auditions for the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra—Tuesday, Jan. 11, 7:00 p.m., Kenan Hall. Contact Pamela Minor at 343-1459 for audition time and info.

Gallery celebrates 10th year

In December, 1977 THE GOLDEN GALLERY became a part of the Wilmington arts community and The Cotton Exchange. John and Mary Golden set up the gallery studio after they moved to Wilmington from Charleston, South Carolina. It is a showcase for Mary Ellen's watercolor paintings and John's guitar music.

"John and I would like to thank all the people who have supported us with their interest and encouragement during the ten years we have been in Wilmington. We'd like all of you to join us Dec. 6," said Ms. Golden.

Since 1977, Ms. Golden has given twelve solo exhibitions. Her work includes twenty-seven Wilmington and surrounding landmark prints, sixteen limited edition prints, and many, many originals. Her work has won numerous awards. She won "Best of Show" in the Wilmington Arts Association's Spring Exhibition during this year's Azalea Festival and the "Masters Award" in the Wilmington Art Association's Fall Exhibition during this past Riverfest.

2:00-4:00 p.m. at its Cotton Exchange location at 317 North Front Street. At that time Mary Ellen will, for the first time, offer for sale some of the original's of her limited edition prints; officially introduce her latest limited edition print entitled "Ghosts of Summer," and in keeping with the tenth anniversary spirit, she will feature gift ideas for $10 and under during the entire holiday season.

SGA and paper in printing standoff

By Alise Ellis
Staff Writer

The Seahawk's editorial page and the Senate floor have doubled as battlegrounds between Jefferson Weaver, editor of the Seahawk, and Lee King, SGA President. The 1987-88 battle has resulted in only one terminal injury—the Seahawk.

The newspaper has gone over its yearly budget of $30,000 by $13,171 and is operating in the red.

Lee King stated that "He (Weaver) requested a large budget but was given a small budget—he disregarded it and over spent by about $13,000."

Although the Seahawk staff has been trying to collect $4219.00 in past due ad fees, it will still leave the paper with a large deficit.

Jeff Weaver stated, "There has been a concerted effort to get me out because of my critical views of Lee King."

Weaver contends that the

Seahawk editor Jefferson Weaver being interviewed by a news team from WECT-TV6 after the Senate's decision to close the newspaper. (Photo by Wes Perry)

Finance Committee was biased in allocating the Seahawk budget because King appointed three members of the committee, wall of whom are King's fraternity brothers.

Weaver stated he felt pressure from the students to put out a good newspaper and that meant exceeding the budget. Weaver met with a local TV station Jan. 26 to discuss the possible closing of the Seahawk.

King said, "My opinions toward the Seahawk have never been based on my feelings toward Jeff."

He maintains that he wants the Seahawk to continue to print, but is not sure if the money is available. Jeff Silverman, a senator and member of the finance committee, stated the SGA must consider future clubs and the money they will need.

Silverman was the author of a motion to close down the Seahawk that was presented in this past Monday's Senate meeting.

Members of the SGA will meet informally Jan. 29, to discuss alternatives to closing

Senate passes motion to close down paper

By David Rouse,
Staff Writer

At the beginning of Monday's Senate meeting a motion was made to go directly to new business in order to take up the issue of the "Seahawk's" debt problems. The motion passed and Senators Jeff Silverman and Ed Reiley then made the following motion:

"That the 'Seahawk' cease publication until such time that they raise sufficient funds to remove the negative balance in their account or July first.

When they commence publication they will operate under a procedure manual that is being formulated by the MPB and will be approved by the Senate.

The SGA will publish a final Seahawk with an acting editor.

Question was called, objected to, and debate began.

Senator Reilly said that he regretted the decision, but felt that it must be done.

As to the reason why the "Seahawk" was in its predicament, Reilly felt that it might be partially a fault in management, and partially because that the "Seahawk" staff didn't do a good enough job. Senator Reilly acknowledged that the SGA could not remove the editor but the Media Publications Board can.

Senator Jeff Silverman entered the debate at this point to reveal figures supplied by President Lee King that showed that "Seahawk" salaries were more than their entire budget.

"We cannot allow the mistakes of one club to take money away from the other clubs," said Senator Silverman. Silverman also said that he regretted the decision, but "we have no choice but to close the paper."

In negative debate Senator Robert Smith questioned the wisdom of the proposed action.

Smith asked how the final paper would be financed, how the back ad sales would be collected without the "Seahawk" in operation, and gave the opinion that the money lost by the clubs because of the University Administration froze some accounts to make up for the "Seahawk's" debts wouldn't be that important.

Senator James Earl Jones also entered negative debate. He suggested the possibility of taking a percentage from all of the funds to clear up the "Seahawk" debt.

In the second round of positive debate Senator Reilly explained that a final paper would be published to allow the SGA to explain the fate of the "Seahawk" and to allow the Staff to make any final comments.

The executive fund would cover the production of the final paper. To Senator Jones's suggestion he said that none of the other clubs were willing to support the "Seahawk's" debt.

"We don't have time to wait two months to audit the system" said Senator Silverman, to explain why he felt it was necessary for the SGA to shut down the Seahawk.

Responding in the second round of negative debate Senator Kris Solomon disagreed with Senator Silverman.

As a member of the MPB she said that she felt that the MPB can arrive at a solution. She made the point that the University has already lost its yearbook, and it would be bad to lose the paper, too.

Also she felt that it was important that the "Seahawk" be able to collect its ads.

Senator Smith agreed with Senator Solomon, saying that more time is needed before a decision is made, and that if the Senate made a decision at that time it would be made in "ignorance."

Senator Solomon concluded the second round of negative debate by saying again that the MPB's investigation needs more time.

In the third round of negative debate Senator Silverman, also a member of the MPB, disagreed with Senator Solomon's point of view.

He said that not enough work has been done, the "Seahawk" is losing staff members and that the Editor of the "Seahawk" has not yet held a staff meeting.

Senator Gina Matthis said that as the SGA has promised the clubs the money that has now been frozen, it would be wrong to let those funds be taken away from them.

"That's not fair, it's not their fault, there's not worried about the Seahawk," said Senator Matthis. She also reminded the Senate that the paper would not be shut down permanently.

Senator Brian Holler said, "We have a responsibility to the clubs that they were responsible for themselves."

In the third round of negative debate Senator Smith again stressed the point of the continuing MPB investigation, "let those qualified to make a decision make a decision"

Residence fees to go up in '88

By Barry Bryan,
Staff Writer

The Board of Trustees is increasing on-campus residence fees by 5% according to the Vice Chancellor of Business Affairs, Robert Walton Jr.

Current minimum fees are $1275 per semester. The cost will rise to $1335, a $60 increase in students' bills.

The additional money will allow the university to continue providing the level of services it does now," said Walton. "Inflation has driven up prices and subsequently, it costs the university more to operate at the same level."

In order to construct a budget for the year, UNCW asks the service companies such as power, water and cable television if they are having rate increases. If the companies are planning any increases, the extra costs are added into the residence fees.

The revenue the university receives from room and board payments is the only source it has to construct a budget for housing and meals. Mortgage payments take up a large portion of the fees.

Room and board fees are the major source of revenue for the construction of new buildings.

Tentative plans have been

New option offered on campus

All UNCW students who wish to live on campus for the 1988-89 school year must register for the residence hall/apartment lottery by February 4.

Students may sign up from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Jan. 28—Feb. 4, in the housing office in Belk Hall.

New to the housing lottery process is the option of guaranteed housing.

Students who are selected in the lottery have the option to sign a contract which guarantees them housing for the remainder of their enrollment term.

The contract will only be valid only if the following criteria are followed: the student has no break in enrollment at UNCW; there is

Black History events slated

By R. Cockerell,
UNCW News

A number of special events including displays, concerts, films and lectures, have been scheduled throughout the month of February at UNCW in special observance of Black History Month.

The first program of the full events calendar begins at 3:30 p.m., Feb. 1, in room 100 of the University Union. Dr. Lloyd V. Hackley, chancellor of Fayetteville State University, will be keynote speaker. Hackley will focus his remarks on the importance and significance of black history month.

Also on the program will be artist Robert Hall and Rev. Keith B. Wiley, pastor of Ebenezer Missionary Baptist Church in Wilmington. The UNCW Gospel Choir will present several musical selections.

This program is sponsored by the UNCW Office of Minority Affairs. It is free and the public is invited to attend.

Other activities include:

A presentation on "The Influence of African

Influenza can be prevented

By Carla Garrison,
Staff Writer

The 1988 spring semester is now well under way, but the cold weather is just setting in. The onset of cooler weather means flu season.

There is no 'generic' flu; different types need different treatments.

First of all, everyone should know that influenza is a contagious respiratory disease, caused by a virus. If a person suffering from the flu coughs, sneezes or even talks, those nearby can be exposed to the virus.

The key signs for the flu are acute onset of fever (usually 100 degrees or more), body aches and headaches, cough, weakness and loss of appetite.

These may seem like vague symptoms which could accompany many illnesses, but there are specific hints.

The abrupt rising of fever is the most detectable sign. Another sign is the lack of enough energy to get out of bed.

Victims of the common cold can usually continue to function.

Recommended self-care consists of plenty bed rest, lots of liquids, and Tylenol (not aspirin).

If a student recognizes these symptoms immediately and can get to the student health center within the first 24 hours an anti-viral flu treatment can be prescribed.

This treatment only works if administered within the first day or so of the illness.

If self-care does not help within the first few days

THE WILMINGTON REVIEW

THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AT WILMINGTON
Volume 1, Number 1 and 2, 1987

The Wilmington Review: A Dream Come True

by Heidi Berge

This is part two in a three-part series on Charles Fort and The Wilmington Review.

The Wilmington Review is an exciting new national literary publication that is a compilation of poetry, short stories, scholarly essays, and artistic works of first class caliber. The idea for The Wilmington Review was conceived in 1982 when Charles Fort came to teach at UNCW and dreamed of producing a national literary art journal. Through hard work and determination, Fort received a grant from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation to launch a project that would encompass a variety of artistic styles and be bound and produced with the highest quality materials available.

The Z. Smith Reynolds Trust was established when the youngest son of the founder of R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company died, and his relatives decided that their share of his inheritance would be used to benefit the people of North Carolina. The trust's concerns focused on the strengthening of grassroots advocacy groups, youth programs, cultural activities, rural programs, cultural activities, rural life, the handicapped, minority and women's issues.

In keeping with those concerns, as Fort states in the Editor's Notes, "The pilot issue of The Wilmington Review called for submissions to focus on crucial themes: blacks, womanhood, and the south. This focus is presented in many of the works of the writers, artists, photographers, and scholars in the Wilmington and others from Washington State to New York City."

Students and faculty can open the heavyweight coffee-table pages of The Review and find names of some of the best writers who ever attended UNCW. When perusing the pages, you may as I did, find yourself enveloped for hours in the depths of the artists' thoughts.

Somehow said, but appropriate is the fact that 95 year old world-renowned artist and contributor Minnie Evans died on the day that Fort hosted a kick off reception for the project at Front Street News last December.

Evans was an internationally known, self taught artist who "saw angels" and portrayed them in her works. "My art is as strange to me as it is to others," she once said. Her paintings are compelling, and two can be found in the publication.

The next issue of The Wilmington Review will have a more scientific theme. Editor Fort says he's "interested in things that are controversial, provocative, plausible; as well as implausible ideas and notions... writing that attempts to redefine who we are, how we live and think, and how we feel... and how we want to live." He's looking for things that are readable yet compelling - essays similar to "Radical Novelty" found in the pilot issue and authored by UNCW Professor Dr. Patricia Turrisi.

The reality of Fort's dream of publishing The Wilmington Review has finally come true. At its release, he sent out 600 copies and has received accolades and praises from around the nation.

A few of those responses are as follows:

Thomas W. Lambeth, Executive Director of the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation calls the magazine "...beautiful..." John Evans of the UNCW English Department says, "Nothing about it says novice or fledgling. It has emerged clean and wholly adult. The Wilmington Review is an outward sign of a less obvious kind of growth (for UNCW)... a metaphysical growth."

Author Candace Flynn calls it "stunning" and says she was "agog." Others call it "spiffing," "...handsome and fine reading," noting that "...the production of the magazine is first-rate."

Shelby Stephenson, author of Middle Creek Poems says, "The best local - the best national! I hope it gets to places and people who know."

Approximately 3,000 copies of The Wilmington Review have been printed; 2,000 of them are being sent to public and high school libraries, and the magazine is indexed in the MLA International Bibliography.

If you would like to obtain your own copy of The Review, it may be purchased for $10 (well worth it) at Front Street News downtown or through the English Department at UNCW.

UPB Talent Show Campus Comedy was a real success

by Rick Cairns

Last Friday saw the illumination of much talent that exists on and around our campus. The University Program Board hosted a talent show that attracted eight acts, and a wide range of artistic styles were offered as entertainment to the audience and judges.

Overall winners were vocalist Lisa Cash (first place), vocal duo Ray Boney and Sherita Brown, and the rap/scratch/dance group headed up by Ron Hamm, Karen Jenkins, and Tiawana Hill.

The show kicked off with a nice piano/vocal performance by Lee Foy and Rodney Ingle, who performed a tune that I think is entitled "Won't You Be With Me Tonight." They were followed on stage by Eric Wheelis on synthesizer, who performed two original pieces. The first, which had other-worldly sound effects that reminded me of the supernatural, prompted one of the judges to remark that "I know on that song I saw God two or three times." Wheelis' second number, another original that he penned for his girlfriend, was a thoughtful, very melodic, almost Japanese sounding piece.

Third on stage was Dorian Jamison, who performed two acoustic guitar numbers, the first being "All Along the Watchtower." Jamison has the makings of a charismatic stage presence - I would love to hear him after he's had a few years to develop his vocal control and polish his stage manner. Jamison undoubtedly has a strong desire to explore the fretboard of his axe, and it's a sure bet that something good will come of it.

The next act to take the stage was the multi-member rap/scratch/dance group headed up by UPB's own Karen Jenkins. The group was bubbling over with high energy and taunts for the crowd. "I ain't never seen such a dead crowd," mourned Jenkins. "What is this, some type of funeral?" She badgered the crowd until they responded, and the result was a great audience experience.

Lisa Cash had undoubtedly made up her mind that more aggression was in order for this year's show. Cash, who won third place last year, performed several rousing, high energy numbers that were obviously intended to enlighten the crowd about her vocal and dancing abilities. Renditions of "If You Can Do It" and "Just Can't Go On" won the hearts of the audience, and won the show for her.

Cash was a hard act to follow, but Ray Boney and Sherita Brown did it with style. They both have absolutely beautiful voices, and it's a sure bet that we'll be hearing more from them. The tastefully performed "It'll All Be Over In The Morning" really illuminated the talents of both.

When Diendra Prentice took the stage, she made it clear who her audience was. "There's just so many fellas and so little time," she cooed. "I'm ready when you are." She followed that remark with a suggestive rendition of "You're The Best I Ever Had."

Dancing to "Object of My Desire" was Lynn Spencer's talent, and she did it well. She flowed smoothly and gracefully across the stage.

All in all, the talent show was well worth seeing, and the standing-room-only audience had a ball. We've a wealth of talent here at UNCW, and I for one am glad to have been exposed to what I saw.

Hats off to all who competed! You did a great job!

National Battle of Bands registration continues

The National Battle of the Bands contest started on a high note in Panama City Beach, Florida, December 3, 1987, and will continue on for the next few months.

Radio stations, clubs, shopping centers and colleges all over the nation will hold local auditions beginning February 1, 1988 for the Seventh Annual Battle of the Bands. The search is on to find the hottest bands in the nation. They will compete for over $500,000.00 in cash and prizes. Winning bands in each local competition will go on to compete in the national Battle of the Bands at Panama City Beach, Florida during Spring Break, March 11 through March 30.

Winners in each local competition will receive one Kramer F-6000 Guitar with original Floyd Rose Tremolo and case valued at over $1,000.00 and provided by local Karmer music stores. Those local winning bands will also receive transportation to compete in ten semi final competitions on the warm sandy beaches of Panama City Beach, Florida.

Battle of the Bands officials are talking with such nationally known headliners as Sting, Lynyrd Skynyrd, Hall and Oates, Heart and Fleetwood Mac to arrange for performances during each of the ten semi-final shows.

The ten semi final winners will receive a Karmer Custom Guitar personally autographed by one of the following: Edward Van Halen, Jon Bon Jovi, Richard Sambora, Elliot Easton, Lisa West, Paul Wiser and Dweezel Zappa as well as $500.00 cash and a position on the grand final TV show.

The grand final winner will receive $5,000.00 cash and a record produced with the supervision of Capitol/EMI America. The second place band will receive $2,000.00 cash and the eighth third place finalist will receive $1,000.00 cash.

The grand final will be produced for TV broadcast syndication release during May and June 1988. Last year's show was carried by 185 television stations across the nation.

This year over 3,000 band from across the United States and Canada have registered for Battle of the Bands. Inc. This year's competition will open to all types of bands from country to rock n' roll. Bands and radio stations interested in participating should contact Mr. Abernathy at Battle of the Bands, Inc., 50 Lindsley Avenue, Nashville, Tennessee 37210.

Arts Council Update:

The Arts Council Of The Lower Cape Fear is proud to announce the first visiting Affiliate Artist residency in the 1988 year. Within this year, the Arts Council presents, and General Electric sponsors three visiting Affiliate Artists of the following disciplines: a harpichordist, an actor, and a choreographer. January 25th through to February 5th, William Volker, a fine harpichordist from Texas will be our guest here in New Hanover County.

During his two week stay, Will is scheduled to perform throughout the community in schools, centers for the aging, public art centers, and libraries. As a harpichordist, Will Volker's talents are much welcomed in this area. The general public may hear William Volker at King Auditorium on the UNCW Campus, on Sunday, January 31st. This public performance has limited seating. Please contact Lisa Wells at The Arts Council Of The Lower Cape Fear at 762-9312 for ticket information.

Grassroots Arts Program

The Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear is New Hanover's local distributing Agent for Grassroots Arts Programs Funds which are allocated to us by The North Carolina Arts Council. The 1988-89 Grassroots Grants applications are available now at the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear's office which is located at #20 Market Street, and the staff will be on hand from 9:00 - 5:00, Monday through Friday to assist in filing applications.

Your organization must have an artistic purpose, be a non-profit, tax-exempt organization, and be able to match the amount applied for with funds other than funds which have been acquired by this

Where were you Thursday night, Jan. 21, 1988? If you weren't at the Union watching top-notch comedians for a buck—you were in the wrong place. You should be ashamed if you were vegging out in front of the boob tube. Oh oh, I don't think I can say boob in this paper any more—I meant breast tube. Live entertainment is where it's at—it's cool, it's rad, it's today, it's now.

I wasn't home watching the breast tube; I was cool. Besides, I taped Cheers, Night Court, and LA Law. I had it all! I've never reviewed anything before, but comedy is something I sort of study, so why not have me review it. I must say that I have respect for anyone that has the guts to perform for an hour in front of a live audience. Can you imagine making a living reviewing things? I'd like to review movies like Siskel and that fat guy with the glasses. What a tough life they have; they watch movies all day and trash them on television for big bucks.

Farrington

About Thursday night. We were treated to almost two full hours of comedy. Originally Lionel Norman was supposed to perform, but didn't for some unknown reason. From what I've heard, we got the best of the deal when Glenn Farrington replace him. Todd Yohn (pronounced yawn) was the main attraction, and don't be fooled by his last name.

I decided my rating system would be as follows: D—dud—a comedy act that is equivalent to watching a ninety-three year old woman climb three flights of stairs. Humorous—a comedian that can keep my attention through most of the show, but nothing to write home about. Funny—a good solid performance with many lines worthy of remembering, and no lulls. Finally, Damm Funny—so good and unpredictable that it brings tears to my eyes. I actually have another rating, F—f—ing Funny—but only one comedian ever earned that, Sam Kinison, but he's in a class by himself.

Glenn Farrington was the opening act. I understand that it was the first time in three years that he performed in front of a "cold audience." That means "opening act" in show biz lingo. So we actually had two headliners here at UNCW. Not bad for a buck, and only 180-200 were there to enjoy it.

Glenn is from New York City; he has a New York look—big and kind of tough looking. He presently resides in Raleigh, and has performed all over the country.

The deadline for applications is Monday, February 15th at 5:00 p.m. Should you have any questions concerning these state funds, please call Amy Brannock, Executive Director of the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear at 763-ARTS.

Know someone who's appearing in town to play music, do a comedy show, or the like? Give us a call at the Seahawks!

He has been on PM Magazine, and has appeared with Rodney Dangerfield. If you're thinking, "big deal", where have you appeared lately?

I gave Glenn a rating of "Funny" he delivered a 40 to 50 minutes of solid comedy which covered a wide variety of subjects from Moosehead to severed heads. He definitely kept me interested and gave me a few chuckles. He ad-libbed well, especially when our photographer would get a shot of him. Wes loves to catch them with their fingers in their nose, and in Glenn's case, with a gun pointed at the audience. I felt that Glenn held back a little because he was in Wilmington, North Carolina and the audience was drinking Sun Drops. He practically apologized for using God's name in vain. (Does God have a name?) I bet in NY he is even funnier. The only lame moments were when he referred to Lloyd the barber on The Andy Griffith Show, Lloyd? When he set the stage for Todd Yohn, he said John Yohn. Overall, I found him quite entertaining, and he got a good response from the audience.

Now, Todd Yohn gets a "damm funny", from this novice reviewer. You talk about a character; I can see why he won the North Carolina laugh off two years in a row. I can't imagine anyone being a close second. This guy even looks funny. His uninhibitedness impressed me the most. His facial expressions and little boy silliness cracked me up. Todd doesn't care about making himself look like a dork, or acting "unmanly". He was just being himself.

He is a multi-talented guy who can play a mean guitar. You could tell he could really jam, but he always held back. He certainly didn't hold back any comedy. With a last name pronounced "yawn" he must really feel the pressure to be funny. I know that nobody could have been yawning. I don't think anyone could laugh and yawn simultaneously. The songs he came up with on his guitar were the best part of his act. The audience would do anything he asked; he had us eating out of his hand. I really can't believe that he hasn't made it big nationally—yet. I found him to be much funnier, than say, Stephen Wright, because of his many talents and his unpredictability.

Todd is from New York City, (aren't they all?) He resides in Chapel Hill though, so he may be around again, so watch for his name. Next month will bring more top-notch comedy to campus. You'd be a fool if you miss it.

Film show planned

John Biddle, "the world's foremost yachting cinematographer," sails into Wilmington Sunday, February 7, at 3:00 P.M., at Kenan Auditorium on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, with Sailing Connection, the best of 1987 sailing adventures. The event is sponsored by New Hanover County Museum Foundation.

Admission is $4.00 in advance and $5.00 at the door. Students can purchase tickets for $3.00 and children under 12 will be admitted for $2.00. Tickets are available at New Hanover County Museum, Bell-Beery Department Store (Customer Service Department), and the University Union Information Center.

Announcements and events

On Jan. 29th the last of the film series "Love and War In The Sixties" will be presented at The New Hanover County Library. This last selection is entitled "Alice's Restaurant", and is a film version by Arlo Guthrie of his song of the same title.

The film will begin at 7:00 p.m. in The Main Meeting Room of The Main Library. Admission is free. For more information, call the library at 763-3303.

Jan. 30th, the Creative Link, a one day Shell Wreath Workshop will be held. This workshop will be taught by Betsy Norton. For specific times and registration information, call Ethel Hoffman at 251-8443.

On Jan. 31st, Visiting Affiliate Artist/Harpisichordist William Volker will give a public performance at 5:00 p.m. at King Auditorium on the UNCW campus. Seating is limited to 200 and advance tickets are on sale at the Arts Council Of The Lower Cape Fear at #20 Market St.

This Affiliate Artist program is sponsored by The General Electric Company and presented by the Arts Council Of The Lower Cape Fear. Admission is $3.00 but Members of the Arts Council, students, and Sr. Citizens are all admitted free. For more information, call Lisa Wells at The Arts Council at 763-2787.

The Wilmington YWCA is offering several programs to help take away those mid-winter blahs.

Classes in European knitting will be available starting January 22. This style uses two needles and all the work is done with the left hand. The yarn is never dropped, so the process is faster.

European knitting is good for both left handed people who want to learn knitting and for experienced knitters who want to learn a faster method.

Cost is $15 for YWCA members and $20 for non members.

"Art for the classroom teacher" begins Jan. 25 and will meet

Mondays through Feb. 20.

The class will discuss the use of bulletin boards, stages of a child's artistic development, and understanding the fundamentals of art.

Georgann Haas will conduct the course. Ms. Haas has worked as an art teacher in public schools and is also an active artist. She has a masters degree in Art Education and is a certified teacher (K-12).

Elementary and preschool teachers can gain 1 hour of certificate renewal credit for taking the course. Those interested should call the YWCA at 799-6820 or come by the Y at 2815 S. College Rd.

Cost for this class is $22 for members/$30 for non-members.

Call the Wilmington YWCA at 799-6820 for more details about these and other programs.

John Biddle, "the world's foremost yachting cinematographer," sails into Wilmington February 7, at 3:00 P.M., at Kenan Auditorium on the campus University of North Carolina at Wilmington, with Sailing Connection, the best of 1987 sailing adventures. The event is sponsored by New Hanover County Museum Foundation.

Sailing Connection, Biddle's 32nd annual film-show, features: "Nonesuch Catboat World Champion," takes viewers on a ten-day cruise and race aboard a comfortable catboat to Newport, Rhode Island.

"Formula 40 Multihull Racing Circuit," captures the excitement of 40-foot multihull machines racing off the coast of Cherbourg, France.

"White Water Rafting: Utah/Arkansas," follows the adventures of the reckless rafters barreling down the Colorado and Arkansas Rivers.

"Women's International Keelboat Championship," shows a series of championship races drawing forty-four all-female teams from seven countries to Narragansett Bay for spirited competition.

This will be Biddle's only North Carolina appearance in 1988. Admission is $4.00 in advance and $5.00 at the door. Students can purchase tickets for $3.00 and children under 12 will be admitted for $2.00. Tickets are available at New Hanover County Museum, Belk-Beery Department Store (Customer Service Department), and the University Union Information Center.

no break in the housing contract (excluding summers); and the student must have good social and academic standing.

The contract can be renewed annually as long as the student lives on campus.

The drawing will be held Feb. 5 and results will be posted in residence halls as soon as possible.

made for a new cafeteria and a new housing area near Hall '85.

"UNCW's residence areas are quite new, compared to other schools," said Asst. Dean of Students/Residence Life, Charles Maimone earlier this week. "The oldest structure, Galloway Hall, opened in 1971 and has just been paid off."

Four more halls and an on-campus apartment complex have been built since Galloway. Interest rates were quite high during construction, in turn increasing mortgage payments—and student fees.

According to Ms. Margaret Robison, Director of Auxiliary Services, energy conservation can possibly lower fees.

In 1987, utility costs were approximately $300,000 and in 1988 could jump to $350,000. Conservation could show a difference for the better.

Question and answer session with Warren Robbins. He will be available to address questions related to African art and cultures from 12 - 2 p.m., Friday, Feb. 5, in the Hawk's Nest, located in the University Union.

Lecture on the contributions of Charles Houston to the development of constitutional law. Houston was one of the legal experts who developed the court-room strategy of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund which eventually resulted in the outlawing of legal segregation in the 1954 Brown vs. the Board of Education case. Dr. Genna Rae McNeil will lead this presentation at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 15, in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall.

A financial aid workshop on the topic "The Early Bird Gets The Financial Aid" will be presented by UNCW financial aid office director, Joe Capell. The session is scheduled for 2:00 p.m., Feb. 10 in room 201 of the University Union.

A reading by Charles Fort, director of the creative writing program and professor at UNCW, will be held at 3 p.m., Feb. 14, at the New Hanover County Library.

The drama presentation entitled "1001 Black Inventions" to be presented at 8 p.m., Feb. 23, in room 100 of the University Union. Admission is $1.

A civil rights forum will be held from 3 - 5 p.m. and a panel discussion at 8 p.m., both on Feb. 24. The forum, which will include participants from UNCW students, will be held in room 201 of the University Union. The panel discussion, entitled "The Civil Rights Struggle: '60s vs. '80s," will take place in room

Ralph Parker, director of the UNCW office of minority affairs, explained that the purpose of the UNCW black history observance is "to create a realization as to what black history month is all about and its significance."

Parker noted in particular community groups such as the Human Relations Commission and several churches who have coordinated activities with the UNCW Office of Minority Affairs.

"We also hope that through these activities, more of an appreciation will be realized for achievements of blacks then and in the present time," Parker said.

Senate

and the idea that the ad money might not be collected without the staff.

He also suggested that it might be the Senate's fault for not keeping track of what is going on.

After this Senator Matthis forced an end to debate, an attempt by Senator Smith to have a secret ballot failed, and the motion went to an immediate hand vote. The motion passed with overwhelming support.

In the Vice President's report Karla Alston made a suggestion that would help with the Senate's problems with Senators leaving the meeting before it is over.

She suggested that the Senate adopt either a 7:30 mandatory end of quorum, or change the schedule to have executive reports last. Senator Matthis made a motion to do both, and it passed.

At this point there a discussion started about a new editor; who would hold the position and who could appoint him. Jeff Steinmiller was allowed to speak to the Senate about the matter.

Steinmiller said that he felt that the SGA could not run the "Seahawk" because of separation between government and the free press. Steinmiller added that if the SGA wanted his position stated it could write a letter to the editor.

Senator Reilly replied that he did not want to take over the paper. He just wanted to insure that the SGA's position was printed.

Steinmiller said that if the Seahawk was closed the SGA could not print it, as it has no power to print a campus newspaper.

Senator Reilly then asked if a Senator could run the paper privately.

Steinmiller replied that the editors must be approved by the MPB, the SGA could print a paper, but they couldn't call it "The Seahawk."

After that a motion was put on the floor to reconsider the motion concerning the "Seahawk."

The motion passed. The motion is then changed to allow the "Seahawk" to publish their own last issue, and added a request to President Lee King to write a letter explaining the SGA's position.

The first three votes were confused.

The Vice President ordered one more vote, which ended in a tie. Vice President Karla Alston broke the tie with a vote in the negative, and the motion failed.

Returning to the Vice President's report Alston raises the issue of using the so called "La-La Land Fund" (the Fund Balance), to help the Seahawk out.

In the treasurer's report Louis Dicello announced that $2,000 dollars from the executive fund had been given to the clubs that had their funds frozen.

On the subject of the Fund Balance money Dicello said that there was indeed $19,000 in that account intended for emergencies.

However he noted that the University Administration has final say on using the Fund Balance, and that the accounting office is presently against the idea.

The MPB report was given by Kris Solomon, who said that she was hopeful that a decision on the "Seahawk" matter would be reached by next week.

The Finance Committee Report was given by Senator Silverman who said that further time was needed to look at the the "Fledgling's" new budget.

At this point further business was impossible for a lack of quorum, and in ending announcements various senators, and the Vice President voiced disappointment with the inability of the Senate to maintain quorum for a whole meeting, and V.P. Alston gave her thanks to those Senators who did stay until the end of the meeting.

Is this the last Seahawk? It's up to you.....

"This is the last cowboy song...." Willie Nelson and the boys just finished singing that on my radio up here.

I guess I won't get to tell you about the last half of my traumatic bus ride.

The Seahawk newspaper is, from all appearances, coming to a close as you read this. The SGA's best efforts against us, from the crippling red tape to the politics of the finance committee last spring, have succeeded.

My business manager, who knew little if anything about that name when she started that job, turned in her resignation tonight. Ditto for my ad manager. These are the first of the "large numbers" of resignations Mr. Silverman referred to in Monday night's senate meeting. They have made it clear that they resigned because of the SGA's activities and attitudes.

They can't handle the stress anymore. Neither can we.

Those resignations didn't come in until today. Silverman to the Senate Monday — two days before they and I knew they were resigning — that lots of my staff was leaving. Wonder when he became psychic?

My cartoonist is still here, along with all my reporters, my forever dependable photog man and friend, and my production man. We're going to stick it out, waiting for a miracle.

The Senate voted the other night — at one of our dear president's fraternity brother's suggestion — that the senate essentially take over the newspaper in order to put out a 'fair' newspaper, one that would show all sides of the issues.

We had a reporter at each of their meetings; being college students, they should be literate enough to write to the Student Forum. Many of you have written us when you disagreed; why can't they?

There are little notes all over everywhere. Hemingway once said the most amazing thing about the dead was the amount of paper they leave lying about.

There are notes from Sherry, from Alise, from Carla, from Wes, from Angel. There are thank you notes and go to hell notes and a few we aren't yet sure of.

There is an excerpt from Red Storm Rising tacked to the wall. It is really unprintable in its entirety, but the contributor took the words of a cabin-fever ridden wartime submarine crew and altered them for the Seahawk office at three a.m. And they fit.

Colorful notes from my entertainment editor.

Smiley face. "Cheer up, we love you!" notes from Angel and Brenda.

A letter from "An Amused Reader," who chided us for misspelling the word receives in a headline. That letter has been above our layout boards ever since the day we RECEIVED it, Amused Reader, and thanks.

A message scratched into the surface of one of the layout boards: "GOD RULES." A magic marker putting GOD in parentheses under the written word EDITOR over which someone has scratched "politics."

Lisa is purring away in the corner. The original desktop publishing device, we didn't know what to do with her when we updated our systems. She is still, as one of the on-campus computer wizards put it, a "damn good machine." We almost always thought so.

Notes from the Media Pub Board meeting saying I'm not doing my job right. Letters from you saying I am. Letters from the SGA planning to take my job away entirely.

I grew up in two newspaper offices, the Sampson Independent and the Dunn Dispatch. My daddy left the Independent to work for the Dispatch when I was a very small child, so I really only remember the Dispatch office.

It was a musty, dark, fascinating place. It was built of wood and plaster and brick. It smelled of leather and ink and old wood and coffee and tobacco smoke.

I was almost old enough that my mamma could go back to work, so she also worked at the Dispatch. I used to want to play with the keys of her typewriter.

I remember standing in the pressroom, holding my hands on my ears, watching the huge printing press spit out hundreds and hundreds of newspapers.

I remember my daddy grabbing off the first paper of a run, ripping it open, and yelling at the technician to "Stop the Presses!"

This is getting hard to write. When a story was finished back then, the editor would write —30— at the bottom. The last editorial cartoon of the Dispatch was a piece of stationary with —30— written across it.

I hope that's not our fate. There were all kinds of great things for a curious six year old in his daddy's cast off fedora hat to do at the Dispatch office there were literally thousands of old newspapers (PEACE IN THE TRENCHES was my favorite — November something 1918 was the print date.)

I have talked about losing friends, being apart from loved ones, great persons, famous and not-so-famous, and I hope we've laughed together a few times at what I've written.

You all have shared in some really tragic moments with me, including when I buried an old yellow dog who used to sleep under a counter in that old newspaper office when he and I were both young pups.

Now, we can do one of two things — we can all go have a beer and cry together, or we can all get mad as hell and keep SGA from taking away the paper that I believe we all love.

Call SGA. Call Lee King. Call any of the senators you know, and raise hell three bricks high with them.

Don't let'em be smug in the supposed knowledge that they can do what they want with no consequences from the students.

Without a Seahawk, or with an SGA run Seahawk (no real difference), do you really expect to find out how much of your money is being spent on trips to conventions in Texas?

Call us at 395-3229 or 395-3789. Call the SGA at 395-3553 and raise hell.

Its all we can do.

If all this fails, thanks to all of you who have helped us, who have written for us, stood by us, worked for us, and have written us nasty letters. The list of all these categories is too long to print, but thanks.

Especially to the best staff ever to curse in the face of a Macintosh at four a.m.

Goodbye. I don't like that word.

—30—

HA! HA! HA!
STEP ONE IN MY PLAN TO USURP THE SEAHAWK
AND CONTROL THE PEASANT STUDENTS!!!

Register to vote? Why me?

We wanted to take this opportunity to urge all of you to register to vote if you have not already done so.

Many students don't realize that if they wish, they can register to vote in New Hanover County, even though they are students from somewhere else.

As long as you have lived in the county for more than thirty days before an election, you have that right.

In the past, it seems that on occasion some county election board officials tried to dissuade UNCW students from registering and voting in this area, even to the point of allegedly telling some that they could not vote here.

With the impact that our student body has on this area, especially in the sheer numbers of dollars used in the community, it seems that more of us should be involved in local politics.

In some larger cities that play host to universities, professors — and in at least one case, even students — have been elected to town and city councils.

You could look at it this way; there are more than 50,000 people in Wilmington. Over 6,000 of those are students at The University at North Carolina at Wilmington. Only about 1,600 of us live on campus. Figure maybe (these are not scientific figures) 800 of the remaining 5,000-plus students commute from some distance away.

That still leaves more than 4,000 people — 12% for the entire population of Wilmington — basically unrepresented in town and county decisions.

To be fair, many of us (this editor included) are registered to vote in their home counties and prefer to keep it that way, voting by absentee ballot during each election. It is easier to do that until graduation is over and you have a better idea about where you will be living for the next several years.

But still.

You pay sales tax; you are affected by whatever is done with the streets in the city. Your garbage is picked up and carried away, and you use the water and sewer lines.

Those of you that live at or near Pinewood and over on Randall Drive — you want sidewalks? Ya'll want to know how to get them?

Make the students on this campus a political force in town by registering and voting for the candidates that will look out for your concerns.

We know you are tired of hearing us pout the old line about get involved. But outside of Commissioner Albert Corbett, who is on the UNCW Board of Trustees, who speaks for UNCW in town and county government?

Nobody that we know of. And that's wrong.

Dear Sir,

This is to protest the freezing of the SGA General Fund by the University administration as well as the closing of the Seahawk. If KING Lee thinks the students are going to allow his acceptance of an obvious University administration power grab, he had better think again.

The Constitution of the SGA state ("SGA")...is an organization comprised of all students enrolled at UNCW. That Constitution grants the students the right of self government and cannot be usurped by the University administration.

The SGA is funded through STUDENT FEES. The SGA is responsible for appropriating its portion of student activity fees to approved University organizations. The DISTRIBUTION is at the discretion of the Student Senate. The funds allocated to SGA from student fees cannot be controlled by the University administration. The formation and powers of our SGA is different from those on other state campuses. Our SGA possesses AUTONOMY. As the official newspaper for UNCW students, the Seahawk must not allow the administration to dictate the Seahawk's role in the SGA. King Lee has tried in the past to control the Seahawk. You were correct to resist his effort. Now he has joined forces with the University administration to do what he was unable to do alone. YOU MUST REFUSE TO STOP THE PRESSES.

The students will not realize the facts unless you continue to get a paper out each week. If you have to, ask for donations, try a fund raising drive, get the students to hold rallies and demonstrations.

KING Lee has succeeded in getting a lot of students angry at you and the Seahawk. Don't allow this to continue.

The freezing of the SGA general fund was ALLOWED to happen by KING. The students should get an INDEPENDENT legal opinion. After all, the SGA rights should never be decided by a University or State controlled lawyer.

It appears the only fighter for student rights is the Seahawk.

Finally, if the Seahawk is really in the red, it is probably due to the SGA not sending notices to your advertisers, and that only amounts to a normal business condition known as "cash flow."

Signed: ONE DAMN MAD SENIOR, CAMERON SCHOOL OF BUSINESS

Don't let them stop the presses!

Club wants to know why they were frozen

We of the UNC-W Historical Society were quite surprised to read in the Seahawk that our club assets were frozen. It is a good thing that we read the Seahawk, for that is how we found out we have no more matching funds. Apparently, since the Seahawk is "flat broke", the University has frozen our and several other organizations' funds to ensure that Seahawk debts will be paid.

I would rather not comment on where to place blame because I would be woefully inadequate in doing such, and it is not my purpose. Instead, I would like to inform the readers of something I do know about: the effect of freezing our club funds. The Historical Society members accepted, in good faith, a generous sum of money from the SGA to use for activities in the 87-88 school year. We understood that we had to match twenty percent of this sum by April 88, or forfeit these funds. Through several fundraising activities, we are proud to say that we are short of this goal by approximately twenty-five dollars (we have the twenty-five dollars, but dare we place it into a frozen account?). We have spent some of our money already on a trip to D.C. for a conference, on a guest lecturer, and on the Adopt-A-Family program this past Christmas. But now, we are in kind of a limbo. Without the funds we were allotted, we cannot participate in the activities that we have been working and saving for during the Fall semester. Our plans for the rest of the year are on hold, and I guess if the Seahawk cannot trim its budget, we'll lose most of our funds. President Lee King has been good enough to find money for us from somewhere, but it will not come close to our previous fund total.

Communism by any other name is still.....

Communism is a dirty word in the United States. Just about everybody hates Communism — with a capital "C" that is.

Never have I called anyone a communist unless that person was an avowed member of that party.

I have, however, often warned against non-communism, who seem to think like Communists. There are thousands of them.

The late Nikita Khrushchev made many comments on the future course of the free world, but two of them are especially noteworthy.

The Russian leader said that when (he did not say if) communism comes to America it would come under the guise of anti-communism.

He also said that the grandchildren of Americans of his generation would live in a socialist state and would wonder why we resisted socialism.

Hopefully, history will contradict those predictions, but that is by no means certain.

We have good, patriotic Americans who love their country and hate communism as much as I do; the difference is, they hate the word. I hate the philosophy, whether the advocate claims to be a "laborite", "progressive liberal" Democrat or a "moderate" Republican.

More and more people are heard to say, in any one of a number of situations, "the Government ought to do something about it." They almost always mean the Federal Government. Most of them have forgotten there is any other government, if they ever gave a thought to such a thing.

Sweden is an anti-communist country.

Admittedly the Swedes have a higher living standard and better conditions than the Russians or other openly communist countries.

But they don't have very much more freedom of choice or action.

"The Government" does everything for them, and to pay for what is "given them" they pay perhaps 80 to 90 percent of their tremendous salaries in taxes.

I think the average American would still rather decide how and when the things that affect the everyday life are going to be done, even though in our system nothing is guaranteed.

When otherwise intelligent people laugh at the allegation that the major media is extreme-left-biased they are helping discredit the truth, and paving the way for collectivists, under whatever label, to take over. It can happen here.

As far as I am concerned, to paraphrase Romeo, that which we call communism by any other name is just as bad.

"Give Me One Good Reason Why I Should Go To The 1988 Colonial Basketball Championship."

1. It's on a weekend. Mostly March 5, 6 and 7. Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Four games Saturday starting at noon. Semi-finals Sunday at 2 p.m. Championship game Monday at 7:30 p.m. You can see six games without taking time off work. And if your team plays in the final, you can call in sick.

2. It's convenient. The Hampton Coliseum is right on Interstate 64. It's an hour and a half drive east of Richmond. Half an hour from William & Mary. Four hours from American, George Mason, JMU and Navy. Three hours from East Carolina and five from UNC Wilmington.

3. It's economical. A ticket book for all seven games is $25. That's $3.57 per game—cheaper than a movie. A ticket for a two-game session Saturday or Sunday, and for Monday's championship game, is $10 (85 for college students.) Tickets are available at member college ticket offices and at the Hampton Coliseum.

4. There are hotels and restaurants galore near the Coliseum. Rush out for some fast food, or sit down to a famous Chesapeake Bay seafood buffet.

5. The Coliseum is a great place to watch basketball. There's not a bad seat in the house.

6. There's plenty of post-game nightlife for the night-owl in you. "Party hearty" and celebrate your team's victories.

8. You can visit the NASA Visitors Center and learn the history of the space program. Or visit Fort Wool and Fort Monroe and learn Civil War history. Or visit Kecoughtan Village and learn Indian history. (Hampton was founded in 1610, by the way.)

9. You can go shopping between games. Coliseum Mall (130 stores) is just down the street, and world-famous outlets are just up the interstate.

10. You'll see great college basketball. Eight teams fighting for the conference title and a bid to the NCAA tournament. Last year's championship game was a 53-50 nail-biter between Navy and UNCW (the Mids won). This time—who knows? You'll have to be there. Mark your calendar now for an exciting weekend.

Beware of junk mail, says our writer —it might be insincere!

WARNING !!! Don't open your mail until you have read this. (How's that for an attention getter?) My trash is collected twice a week, but it is delivered six times a week. Of course, I'm referring to the garbage that our proud civil servants (aka mailmen) shove in our boxes. As if that isn't bad enough, they brag about it! Through ice, rain or snow, they will get those Clearing House Sweepstakes and assorted crap to you, and about ninety percent of it is crap.

What I want from the mailman is, letters from friends or family, magazines, and of course—A CHECK! I guess I have to accept bills, but everything else is an insult to my intelligence. Remember, I'm a college student.

I can't sleep nights because I, Richard Cairns, may have already won four trillion dollars. Now listen Ed, you fat, no talent, laughter of anything Johnny says, over exposed, Carson parasite, if I have already won a fortune—give it to me, dammit! I could be collecting interest on it. I don't want to send a bunch of BS—just give me my money! I know that I didn't already win Jack Diddle, because some old lady with pointed glasses has already won, she always wins.

What about the contests where you can win your dream house? I don't know about you, but the houses that are in my dreams are a nightmare. They always have doors that won't close completely, which enables the maniac with the butcher knife to slip through and make shredded wheat out of me. It also has floors which slant upward, making me too tired to run, and the pack of pit bulls chasing me, treat me as a slab of meat. No sir, they can keep my dream house.

Last week I received an ad from an insurance company which said—this is no lie—“give your child the most special gift of their life: life insurance.” I could picture it, “remember that bike that you were dying to get for your birthday? Well, we got you something much better—life insurance. Doesn't it make you feel wonderful to know that if you die, Mommy and Daddy will get five-thousand dollars?”

If my Father ever told me that, when I was a kid, I'd have been paranoid as hell. Any time my parents were short of money I'd have definitely made myself scarce. Many parents would tend to teach their child to look one way while crossing.

What about those ads for your own burial plot? I could see some old geezer wanting it, but a young person? I could see me squeezing those payments into my budget—selling my stereo to make the down payment. All for some worthless real estate, and “total peace of mind.” As far as I'm concerned, they can throw my dead ass in a dumpster. I wonder how much that costs? Hey, I can start my own business. Can you picture it? The “we will throw your dead ass in a dumpster for fifty bucks plan.” Just think of the trouble, and money you would save your loved ones.

The worst mail has got to be those buy-by-mail ads. They're worse than Ronco.

They always offer free gifts.

Did you ever buy a gift? Get a coin and rub the ink off of eight-hundred circles, and if they match, you will have a chance of winning it. They always say “car.” That's quite ambiguous, what kind of car—Matchbox? There are all kinds of gimmicks and numbers to be scraped off. I can imagine all the poor schmucks getting excited, and thinking they're going to win something great. Everything ordered turns out to be the size of your thumb nail, and the “free gift” worth twenty dollars is a tiny cookbook with 101 things to do with a dead chicken! Beware of anything that is “not sold in stores.” I figure if K-Mart won't sell it, then it must really be a piece of crap.

If you get any mail addressed to occupant, or has your last name, followed by Family, pitch it in the circular file immediately, if not sooner. Better yet, if they enclosed a postage paid envelope, give them a taste of their own medicine; send them some trash like the entertainment section of the Star News. See how they like it.

The only thing worse than receiving this junk would be delivering it. Can you imagine being the poor sap who delivers it? If I were a postman, (God forbid) I would go to a dumpster and chuck it all, and only deliver the important mail. What a difference it would make. I'd have an extremely light bag, and only have to go to a quarter of the houses while I dream about my impending retirement in thirty years.

Lessons to be learned from the cinema

I went to see the film “Wall Street” last weekend and found it to be a highly entertaining and thought provoking experience. Among many things that it was, I found it to be a 1980's morality play depicting the struggle between good and evil for the soul of the young hero.

Charley Sheen played a young stockbroker on his way up in the world of high finance. His hero and, eventually, mentor was a financial wheeler-dealer named Geko played by Michael Douglas who was the personification of greed. On the other side was an older stockbroker who was much concerned about integrity and Charley Sheen's father in real life who also played his father in this film and who was likewise concerned about living with love, loyalty, and integrity. The portrayal of the young stockbrokers struggle between these two forces, which I chose to perceive as good and evil, is worth seeing.

Paul Tillich a knouted German theologian defined God as that “which is our ultimate, concern”. In other words, whatever it is that we discover at the center of our being that controls our understanding of ourselves, our relationships and our interaction with our word, that is our God.

It is easy in our culture to hold people like Geko and others like him who live at the top of the corporate and political power pyramid in high esteem and to project on them our fantasies of what the good life is all about. At one point in the film Geko gave an incredible sermon on the value of greed at the corporate board meeting and received a standing ovation. He epitomized the person that has given himself over to absolute self-centeredness and that, for me, was demonic. The young stockbroker's father demonstrated what it meant to live out a whole other set of values in a very real world, values that include concern for the welfare of others including his son and his union and his company.

He knew what his values were, lived them and considered his life to be good.

We are all motivated by some fundamental commitment. It is important for you that are in the process of seeking an education to become aware of values that you are being taught through your classes and are being modeled for you by the institutions that have significance in your life right now. There is some central value central values to which you are giving your allegiance and allowing to control your life.

I happen to be an advocate of serving the God of love and peace and justice and work hard at trying to allow that force to dominate the choices I make in my life. In our society, which seems to value upper mobility highly and defines success and happiness in terms of the level of affluence attained, it is not easy to keep our values in line with the worship of that God.

What I covet for you is the determination to become aware of your values, to explore what it is that motivates the choices about significant issues in your life and realize that you can choose the God you will serve and in whom you place your hope for finding meaning in your life.

Crimes are up just into semester —be careful

The semester is only two weeks old, and already the Campus Police have responded to over 65 criminal incidents or injuries on the campus. The hot item for larceny this semester so far has been parking decals.

We all have to be reminded that the campus is not an island free of crime and hazards. We all tend to get into a routine, where nothing ever happens to us. With the residence halls only open two and one-half weeks, we have already seen a high number of larcenies from residence hall rooms. We are seeing a large number of book thefts, not from secured areas but, from unsecured areas.

Over and over again, we must emphasize that students, faculty and staff need to be alert. They need to be aware of their surroundings and need to take some basic precautions.

The first precaution that you can take to prevent yourself from becoming a crime victim is to lock your doors. Whether you are inside a space or outside, a locked door provides a good deterrent from someone who would want to break in to steal from you or to assault you.

We have an excellent record of not having assaults on this campus and one of the ways that record stays as good as it is, is the lighting here on the campus and some of the services that are provided for you.

The Seahawk Express runs nightly, making a loop through the campus, concentrating on the Library and the residence halls.

There are Night Receptionists, who help to screen out unwanted visitors entering the residence halls.

There are managers and supervisors in the buildings that you frequent at night who help to look for those persons that might be here to cause trouble.

As always, the Campus Police provide a twenty-four hour patrol on the campus. The Police Officers are supplemented by several Security Guards, who are stationed in the Library, the athletic facilities and the residential areas.

All of these people are here to protect you but, you must take the first step yourself in being alert and aware of your surroundings and keeping those doors locked.

We want to remind everyone that engravers are available for checkout any time and now is the best time to engrave the new stereotypes and televisions that you brought back from Christmas.

We wish everyone the best of luck for this new semester.

Ho-Ho combo sparks UNCW

Call it chemistry or call it ability. In either case, Antonio Howard and Larry Houzer have become vital parts of a constantly improving UNCW Seahawk basketball team.

Howard, a 6-3 guard, has been a big spark on offense shown by his 16 second half points at William & Mary. The 59 percent shooter has been one of the most consistent players for Head Coach Robert McPherson.

He is a very consistent player," said McPherson. "Antonio played outstanding as of late. His points against George Mason (15) were very tough because of the tough defense he drew."

The speedy Howard, a transfer from Emmanuel Junior College (Ga.), has teamed with point guard Willie Williams to give the Seahawks one of the most potent backcourts in the Colonial Athletic Association.

While Howard gives the defense something to worry about in the backcourt, teammate Larry Houzer has been outstanding on the frontline.

Houzer and Howard gave the Seahawks consistency it needed to keep their heads up until things began to click.

The 6'8", 190-pounder may not have the size of most big men in the country, but he plays with as much desire, intensity and sheer ability as most. Through 15 games, Houzer was averaging 17.2 points and 7.3 rebounds, while continuing to have one of the best shooting percentages (60%) in the Colonial.

"Larry is a true competitor," said McPherson. "He is a very intense player that can score real well and play great defense."

Now that the Hawks are finding a way to put two halves together on the road, McPherson and crew may just be the team to watch out for in the conference. With the Ho-Ho combo of Howard and Houzer, the Seahawks may have the spark it needs to surprise the rest of their Colonial Athletic Association foes.

Richmond wins 1st place

RICHMOND, VA. — Peter Wolfolk scored 17 points to lead the University of Richmond to a 73-66 victory over UNCW and sole possession of first place in the Colonial Athletic Association Wednesday.

The Spiders are now 5-1 in the CAA and 14-3 overall, while UNCW falls to 4-2 in the conference and 9-7 overall. UNCW jumped out to an early 4-0 lead but Richmond, behind guard Ken Atkinson's 10 first half points exploded out to a 13 point lead at 31-18 with four minutes left in the first period. From there, the spiders coasted into the intermission with a 35-24 cushion. In the second half, UNCW took advantage of Richmond's decision to play a semi-stall offense and cut the lead to 6 points with 5:35 left to play. The Seahawks pulled to within three on a Larry Houzer jumper, 63-60 with 1:53 left. After three free throws by Wolfolk, Scott Tierney hit a three-pointer with 29 seconds to play, cutting the lead to 66-63.

However, Richmond was able to convert eighty straight free throws to hold off the Seahawk Charge.

"Richmond played great defense on Houzer, and applied a lot of pressure on the perimeter," said Head Coach Robert McPherson. "Richmond did the little things to win, and their free throw shooting really surprised us."

Saturday night, Willie Williams led the Seahawks to a 76-67 win at William & Mary by scoring a career-high 23 points.

Antonio Howard added 18 points, 16 of those coming in the second half, while Greg Bender controlled the boards, grabbing 7 rebounds.

William & Mary took a one-point lead into intermission on a free throw by Mark Batzel with 22 seconds left in the period, but that was to be one of the last hurrahs for the Indians.

The second half was all Williams and Howard as they combined for 29 of UNCW's 40 points. It was what the Seahawks needed as Trout held Houzer, UNCW's top scorer, to just two shots from the field, both misses.

The Seahawks took the lead for good with 14:43 left in the game at 47-46. William & Mary could get no closer than 53-50 before the Seahawks put the game away. Clutch free throw shooting down the stretch by Bender and Williams gave UNCW a share of first place in the CAA — for the first time since the school became affiliated with the conference.

Williams earns CAA honors

UNCW guard Willie Williams was named Colonial Athletic Association Player-of-the-Week for his performance at William & Mary Saturday.

Williams, a junior from Ft. Walton Beach, Fla., scored 23 points in the Seahawks 76-67 win over the Tribe. He combined with backcourt mate Antonio Howard for 29 of UNCW's 40 second half points.

Taylor helps UNCW women squash Spiders

UNC Wilmington's women's basketball moved one step closer to improving its Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) record to the five hundred with a victory against the University of Richmond. UNCW needed a buzzer-beating shot to send the Lady Spiders packing with a 67-65 win.

The win raised the Lady Seahawks record to 11-4 overall and 2-3 in the CAA.

The Lady 'Hawks were led by Krystle Taylor's 18 points. Charlene Page and Sharon McDowell also scored in double figures with 14 and 10 points respectively. McDowell was the force for UNCW on the boards, grabbing a team high nine rebounds.

Taylor, a freshman, received a pass inside with the score knotted at 65 and turned on UR's Laurie Governor for the winning basket.

The Lady Spiders (9-6-3) were led by their guard tandem of Pam Bryant and Dana Pappas. Bryant finished the night with a game-high 21 points while Pappas tossed in an additional 16 points. Governor led Richmond with 13 rebounds.

On Saturday night, UNCW faced William & Mary. The Lady Seahawks entered the contest in search of their first Colonial win of the season after dropping their first three CAA games. The Lady Seahawks got the win by waxing the Lady Indians 69-53. Taylor also controlled the W & M contest, leading UNCW with 18 points and 11 rebounds. Junior guard Johnnie Smith also played an important part scoring 10 points while dishing out eight assists.

In the Lady 'Hawks only other game of the week, Sharon McDowell engineered a 63-59 win at North Carolina A & T with 21 points and an impressive 18 rebounds.

Golfers ranked high nationally

IN THE BLEACHERS

From staff reports

UNCW's women's golf team is ranked 45th overall and individuals Paige Cribb and Sandy Chester are among the leaders in the NCAA's mid-year golf rankings. The Lady Seahawks and veteran coach Lea Dudley were rated according to their performance in three fall tournaments.

Cribb, a sophomore, is 39th in the rankings after excellent tourney appearances. She set a new school record for lowest 9-hole total with a 33 at the Longwood Invitational in September.

Chester, a senior, has played No. 1 the last two seasons for Dudley and is No. 163 in the rankings. She was voted the team's most valuable golfer last year.

They have outstanding outside shots that should give ECU's guards, Reed Lowe and Jeff Kelly a fit throughout the entire game. Lowe is the guard that gives the Pirates a hot hand as well as a threat from the outside. Quinones is the factor. Edge to UNCW.                                                                        |  |

Forward Gus Hill leads the Pirates in scoring with average of 18.1 points per game. While Kerry Murphy completes the frontcourt for ECU that may be quicker than UNCW, although the Seahawks will have a definite height advantage. ECU will have to neutralize UNCW's inside strength in order to give themselves a chance at a win. Even. |  |

ECU is going to want to slow the game in their pace so that they will be able to execute against the faster Seahawks. Patience is going to be the strategy for ECU, but the Seahawks are going to have the ball every chance that they get. Edge to UNCW.                                                                                       |  |

If Bender and Gray can light it up from the outside then Houzer will have a big night in carrying the Seahawks to another victory. The Seahawks have had solid defensive outings for the past two weeks and against ECU they should have another. Edge to UNCW.                                                           |  |

Who should be the most excited about the season in front should be a Seahawk since ECU has no more than 10 wins in the CAA. The Seahawks will be looking to come home after two games on the road in their 2nd 10 games. Edge to UNCW.                                                                                                           |  |

Paper to print bi-monthly

SGA helps keep Seahawk afloat

The Seahawk has received this communication from the Media and Publications Board for distribution to students, faculty, and staff of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington:

Following receipt of the resignation of Seahawk Editor-in-Chief Jefferson Weaver, effective February 4, 1988, the Media and Publications Board called a meeting of the Seahawk staff and asked for a show of interest in the position of interim editor. Former Seahawk Managing Editor Celeste Bulley expressed interest in the position. Upon recommendation from Seahawk advisor Stephen Sher and after a strong show of support from the staff, she was interviewed by the Media and Publications Board and selected to serve as the interim editor for the duration of the spring semester.

The Board will be following its regular selection process beginning February 15, 1988 to fill the position of Seahawk editor for academic year 1988-89 along with other positions of fledgling editor, Atlantis editor and WLOZ Station Manager. The interim editor of the Seahawk may apply for this position as well as staff members and other interested students. Applications will be accepted from February 15 through March 4 with appointments being made the last week of March.

Because of the already well-publicized financial difficulties faced by the Seahawk, the Student Senate imposed the following restrictions which will allow the Seahawk to continue printing on a bi-monthly basis with close budgetary supervision for the remainder of the semester. It is important to note that neither the SGA nor the Student Senate asked for control over the editorial content of the Seahawk. That will continue to be the responsibility of the Seahawk staff.

The following is a proposal that has been prepared by the President's Commission on the Financial Situation of The Seahawk. This report is based on per issue costs of the paper.

Printing
8 page paper with 5000 copies being printed $399.83
Wages
30 man hours per issue at $3.35 per hour $100.50
Salaries
$300 per issue to be divided at the discretion of the Editor-in-Chief.

The photographer will be paid $7.50 a picture for each picture published in the editions. A maximum of four per edition will be allowed.

AD revenues The Seahawk has been projected $600 in revenue per issue. (no payment for file photos)

This commission further recommends that The Seahawk go to a biweekly publication.

COST PER MONTH AT 2 ISSUES PER MONTH

|                   |           |
|-------------------|-----------|
| TOTAL COST        | $1660.66 |
| MINUS AD REVENUES | $1200.00 |
|                   | -$460.66 |

This deficit will be handled by the SGA by taking $5000 out of the fund balance account. A portion of this figure, $3222.31 will go to the Seahawk for the publication of 7 more papers over the rest of the semester. The remainder of the money will be placed against the $14,000 that the paper is currently in debt. The rest of the debt will be taken from next year's allocation.

COMMISSION MEMBERS: Lee King, Karla Alston, Lou DiCello, Jeff Silverman, Stephen Reilly.

These are stringent measures, but the Media and Publications Board anticipates cooperation from all parties. We are pleased that the Student Senate saw fit to allow the Seahawk to continue publishing. The newspaper is an important service to the entire University community and we appreciate the cooperation of the Senate, the Student Government Association and the administration in dealing with this budget crisis.

The Media and Publications Board is continuing its investigation into the financial mismanagement of the Seahawk to find out exactly what happened and to recommend measures to prevent its happening again. Any questions regarding this situation should be directed to the Media and Publications.

Cynthia Zeiher, Chairman
Senate Media and Publications Board

Homecoming weekend set

By Ray Cockrell,
UNCW Bureau

(UNCW News) — "UNCW and YOU! — Reaching for the Stars" is the theme of the 1988 observance of UNCW's Homecoming to be celebrated with variety of events Saturday, Feb. 20.

Kenan auditorium presents "The Lark" in February

Alisse Ellis
Staff Writer

The scene opens dramatically as Joan of Arc, portrayed by Lynette Ashby, is escorted down the aisle of Kenan Auditorium, housed in chambers to be used by the peers, front stage center.

The UNCW University Theatre presents the gripping and poetically poignant drama "The Lark" by world-famous playwright Jean Alonouilh Thursday, Feb. 18 through Saturday, Feb. 20 in Kenan Auditorium at 8 p.m.

The play takes her (Joan of Arc) from a peasant girl, to a warrior, to a sublime saint, and we are able to see her in each stage," said Dr. Terry Theodore, the director.

Theodore, who is also a professor in the Creative Arts Dept. at UNCW, said he will present the two-act play uninterrupted, allowing the powerful characters to unfold before the audience.

The 32-member cast has worked diligently since the beginning of January, and the production is running smoothly, according to Theodore.

"The Lark" is sensitively adapted for the American stage by famed dramatist Lillian Hellman with original music especially composed by Leonard Bernstein. The play captures an intensely-dramatic moment from history and exalts it for the stage.

UNCW students are admitted free, and tickets for the general public are $4.

For more information on group rate discounts and ticket reservations, call 395-3440.

UNCW to have new cafeteria

By Chad Adams,
Staff Writer

Three separate interviews confirmed the construction of a new cafeteria on the UNCW campus tentatively scheduled to begin in August of 1988 and open in August of 1989.

According to Margaret Robison, Director of Auxiliary Services, "the plans for the new cafeteria were approved by the North Carolina legislature this past year."

The cafeteria will be built to remedy the problems of feeding the current enrollment as well as meeting the anticipated growth of the school.

It will be located next to the current parking lot by New Hall. The parallel sidewalks that presently lie in front of the library will be extended to run by the new business building and anchor at the new cafeteria.

David Long, Director of Food Services, indicated that the new cafeteria will be of immense proportions, stating that, "it will have 43,000 square feet. The current cafeteria has 18,000 square feet."

"The kitchen alone in the new cafeteria will encompass 11,000 square feet," said Long.

Long also said that the new cafeteria will seat 650 people at one time allowing it to feed three times as many people than the current cafeteria. He made note of the fact that the current cafeteria is already trying to feed 300 more people per meal than it was originally proposed to handle.

The new cafeteria will also add approximately 65 more people to the food service staff. Although no definite cost has been established, Long did estimate a figure of $4.2 million dollars to get the new system in place.

"It will be able to service students far better than current facilities allow," Long said.

According to Robison, the new building will look very much like the bookstore in design, but having much more archwork. The building has also been designed for easy expansion on either side, should the need arise to accommodate even more students. She noted that the new cafeteria will be "much more casual."

Both Robison and Long made it clear that the new cafeteria will not have the line problems that the current cafeteria does. At the new cafeteria card will be checked at the door, but there will be no serving line. The building will have a grill area, a deli, a salad bar, and vegetable bar where each student can serve himself.

When asked if the meal card system was planning to undergo any changes due to the new building, Long made it clear that there were no plans for change at this point, but that change was possible, should the need arise.

Kim Muriell, Assistant Food Service Director indicated that present difficulties in accommodating students are being met by being more lenient with the current cafeteria hours.

"Our biggest problem with accommodating students are the Sunday lunch hours," said Muriell.

When asked if she felt there were any definite solutions Muriell responded, "Expanding the current hours is the only feasible solution at this point."

UNCW to sponsor national condom week

By Carla Garrison,
Staff Writer

In order to further inform sexually active people about condoms and the importance of their use UNCW is sponsoring NATIONAL CONDOM WEEK February 14-21.

Deborah Haywood, who is helping coordinate NCW along with the Student Health and Wellness Center and SGA, explained that, "We've decided to support NCW this year to better address growing public concern on campus about unintended pregnancy, AIDS, and sexually transmitted disease."

Maybe you're tired of hearing about AIDS, condoms, and other health concerns. Maybe you feel all of this stuff is being run in the ground. These issues are obviously important, and have not been heeded by people or NATIONAL CONDOM WEEK would not be necessary.

The aim of NCW is to not only educate people about condoms, but also to lift the stigma associated with them. With the rise of sexually transmitted diseases (STD) and AIDS condom manufacturers have gotten on the ball (so to speak). Condoms now come in many textures, colors, and styles. There is a style or brand to suit everyone's needs.

Maybe you don't care about new developments, and simply feel they are too much trouble. Here are some current statistics that may make the trouble worth while. People under 25 constitute half of those treated for STDs each year. The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) reported that 33,000 people are infected with STDs everyday. (That is 12 million new cases a year.)

As of September 1987 it was estimated by the CDC that approximately 1.5 million Americans are carrying AIDS. In the year 1991 alone 54,000 Americans are expected to die of AIDS.

Talk about condoms and sex in general has been taboo in the past, but attitudes are changing on these subjects. Condoms are being pushed so vehemently all around because they are 1) the best protection against AIDS and STDs for sexually active people. The AIDS virus along with other Sexual Diseases CAN NOT penetrate condom latex. 2) They are a good means of birth control with no side effects.

Next week during NATIONAL CONDOM WEEK tables will be set up in the union providing pamphlets and brochures on AIDS and safe sex. A 10 minute film, Condoms: A Responsible Option, will be showing. There will also be a contest with prizes and ballot boxes for specific responses concerning condom issues.

"Safe Sex" is the word being used for guidelines stressed in order to avoid transmission of disease. UNCW wants to stress how important "safe sex" is as well.

As Deborah Haywood commented, "We want students to take responsibility for their own sexuality."

President of A.M.A. to appear

By Celeste Bulley,
Editor-in-Chief

(UNCW News) — Dr. William Hotchkiss, president of the American Medical Association, will discuss national health issues at 12 noon, Feb. 17, in room 100 of the UNCW Union. The presentation is free and the public is invited.

The campus presentation will be the only public speech during his visit. Hotchkiss will spend two days in Wilmington at the invitation of the New Hanover-Pender County Medical Society Auxiliary and the Medical Society. His campus talk is sponsored by the UNCW School of Nursing.

Hotchkiss, a thoracic surgeon from Chesapeake, VA., was elected president of the American Medical Association at its annual meeting in June, 1987. The AMA is a nationwide voluntary association of physicians whose purpose is to uphold standards and practices of good medical care.

Prior to his election to the AMA Board of Trustees, Hotchkiss was president of the Medical Society of Virginia 1971-72. He was elected to the AMA Board in 1978. Prior to assuming the presidency, Hotchkiss held a number of positions on the AMA Board including vice chairman and secretary-treasurer.

After earning his doctor of medicine degree at the University of Texas Medical School in Galveston, Hotchkiss completed his residency in general surgery at the Henry Ford Hospital. He trained in thoracic surgery and later completed his residency at the Veterans' Hospital in McKinney, TX. Hotchkiss is a Diplomate of the American Board of Surgery and the American Board of Thoracic Surgery.

When asked to comment on Hotchkiss' talk at UNCW, Dr. Mariene Rosenkoetter, dean of the School of Nursing, replied, "The nursing shortage is one of the most crucial health care issues in the nation today. I'm confident he will speak to this issue."

The School of Nursing at UNCW offers a program leading to the Bachelor of Science degree with a concentration in professional nursing. UNCW's nursing program currently has 41 enrolled students, 11 full time faculty members and 2 adjunct professors. Rosenkoetter added, "We are looking forward to his comments."

Amy Harrel, president of the freshman honor society, Phi Eta Sigma, presents Jill Laskey with a thesaurus. Laskey, a freshman majoring in elementary education, received the book in recognition of having the highest grade point average of any freshman at UNCW this fall. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Laskey of Winston Salem, Laskey was a 12988 graduate of R. J. Reynolds High School.

Seahawk mascot assaulted

By Elizabeth Peacock,
Staff Writer

The Seahawk mascot was assaulted at the ECU-UNCW basketball game last week. Two onlookers struck the mascot in the head. As officers tried to detain them, one assailant tried to hinder the officers' attempts to control the scuffle. Both assailants were removed from the game.

In an unrelated case, a female student filed charges of assault. Officers responded and the attacker was cited to the Residence Life Committee and the case was closed.

There were two citations given for violation violations in the same dorm. In both cases, the subjects were reported to the Dean of Students.

In other reports two bicycles and two decals were stolen from students.

Stillpoint

With Bob Haywood—Campus Minister

On Being Attentive

Words, words, words, how many we use. Talk, talk, talk, how much we speak. Conversations bounce back and forth like a non-stop tennis match. Yet, how little we listen. Words fly and ears catch the sounds but where is the real hearing?

It seems that we are always waiting for the end of the other person's conversation, patient at best, but waiting for them to end so I can begin. "That's neat, John, and it reminds me of when I...," or "let me tell you...," or "you think that's bad? I remember the time when..."

We even start conversations by asking someone else a question that relates to what we want to talk about. For example, if we've had a really super weekend with friends at the beach, we'll ask our roommate, "How was your weekend?" Then we'll sit back and wait for them to stop talking so we can get on with telling them about our great experience. Wait the questions you ask and see if this isn't so.

One of the great acts of love is being attentive, really choosing to listen to another person. Our value as persons is related to feeling worthwhile. One of the major sources of feeling worthwhile is having the kind of friend who we know wants to listen and hear us. Real listening shows real caring and is one of the most fruitful avenues to the deepening of relationships. Being heard is something we all need and giving the gift of listening is a potential that we all have. Those who are involved in counseling will tell you that listening itself provides healing. Parents know that children discover their self-worth through feeling valued and that feeling valued comes from being heard. Think, who listens to you; who is attentive to the things that you want to share?

You want to be heard, we all do.

Learn to listen. Learn to listen behind the words to feelings. Reach out with your ears through the barrage of words to the joy or the pain behind endless sentences or behind silence. Behind all the verbiage, if you listen carefully enough, someone simply, haltingly, fearfully, may be trying to say "I care for you," or "Please care for me". It may only be a comment about the weather or a question about class, but if you listen, you might discover that these words are a tentative reaching out to touch, to see if you are listening to them, to learn if you are truly present to receive the gift of deeper words and thoughts.

Most conversations are coded messages that we send out seeking to find those who are willing and want to hear and know us. Break the code and you will find friendship and love. But you must be attentive, you must listen.

Students vs. ARA: Bookbags a Problem

There is a security problem on campus that not many of the off campus students know of. That is because commuting students do not often eat at the school cafeteria.

The cafeteria has recently posted a policy that requires students to leave their book bags in the lobby (on the same sign they state they will not be responsible for lost or stolen property).

When the cafeteria manager talked with me about this rule, he told me it was not a new rule it just hadn't been enforced lately. He also stated that he didn't like it but it was a university policy. It seemed ridiculous to me that the university could require a policy like this without proper protection of student property. So, I called Margaret Robison of Auxiliary Services to find out if this was true. Ms. Robison told me it was not a university policy but an ARA food service policy. She supported the policy in order to cut down on theft but was concerned with the protection of student property.

The bookstore has a similar policy but they provide places to lock up your bookbag. The lockers they have cost a quarter and you get the quarter back when you return the key. I also support the wisdom behind not bringing books into the bookstore. It is hard to tell if the student picked up the book off the shelf or brought it in with them. I, however, do not make it a practice to carry food, silverware and plates in my bookbag. I do not mind showing them the contents of my bag on the way out, just so I can take the bag in with me. I like to study over breakfast and don't want to put my textbooks on a wet tray and ruin them.

In addition to this I dislike leaving my money, checkbook, identification, credit cards, personal photos, books, and most of all my class notes in a place where anyone can pick them up and walk off with them.

In fact campus police 'questimate' that about 4 bookbags were stolen from the cafeteria last semester. I knew one of these people and he said the hardest thing was losing his class notes in the middle of final exams.

Needless to say many other people are uncomfortable leaving their belongings unattended.

The cafeteria staff will let you put your bag in the office but when they are busy the office is often empty and do they really have time to see that the correct person picks up the bag. Since this is a food service policy I feel it is their responsibility to come up with a method of securing student property left in their care.

I understand that ARA is trying to cut back on theft in the cafeteria but they don't need to let their paying customers like untrustworthy thieves. Even though they have my money up front and will have my money as long as I live on campus, I still expect to be treated as a valued client who is paying for a service.

My final word on the subject is I think they need to adjust their policy to protect their customers as well as themselves and until then I refuse to leave my bookbag unprotected in a public place.

Thank you for your consideration
Laura Lee Wright

Concerned student tired of all the mud-slinging

To: Editor, Seahawk

For two years I have watched the battles of SGA, the SEAHAWK, the GREEKS, and the HAWK. I, for one, am tired of all this. Like two dogs chained at opposite corners of a yard, the SGA and the SEAHAWK have been barking at each other over trivial matters such as GREEK representation on the party to all of this by telling the two groups to settle their differences by dealing with the SEAHAWK debt.

The SEAHAWK is heavily in debt. This is unacceptable, both on the part of SGA and the SEAHAWK. Now the SGA wants to temporarily stop publication of the SEAHAWK. This could prove to be a bad move. The best move would be to stop blaming each other and get this matter settled. A restructuring of both SGA and the SEAHAWK would be a good place to start.

SGA obviously perceives themselves as a fair representation of the entire student body and what they believe is the consensus of what the student body believes. This is rarely true. Now they want to shut down the SEAHAWK. No matter how good or bad it actually is, the SEAHAWK is the only source for the majority of the student body to know what is happening in SGA and across campus. The SEAHAWK editors are paid over three hundred dollars a month. No other student working on campus is paid that much. Resident assistants, who are employed by RESIDENCE LIFE and are responsible for overseeing up to seventy-one students on a daily basis, are paid almost half of that month. Yes, the editors are working to produce the only newspaper on campus, (which I feel it is important to have a student newspaper), but where do they deserve to see their salary so high?

I suggest for the good of UNC-W that student government realize that they are a small portion of the student body and before they close the only press on campus to consider the full effects and how the majority of students feel.

The SEAHAWK needs to do something immediately about its debts, and find a way to insure that they will never find themselves in such a debt. So gentlemen, shake hands and face facts: The SEAHAWK may not be the best school paper, it may be opinionated, since it is the only free press on campus, to shut it down is to deprive students of a first amendment right; the SGA needs the SEAHAWK to inform the student body of their activities, and they need to learn to consider the majority of the Senate over such matters of major importance.

The SEAHAWK and SGA need to use their role as Student Organizations to channel their power, settle this problem, and stop the verbal abuse; otherwise, this separation could prove to be fatal for both organizations as far as student support.

Black history observance continues

Yoga series offered by parks and recreation

(UNCW News) — As part of the observance of Black History Month at UNC-W, Dr. Genna Rae McNeil will present a lecture at 7:30 pm, Monday, Feb. 15, in Bryan Auditorium, located in UNC-W's Morton Hall.

Chairperson and associated professor of history at Howard University, Washington, D.C., McNeil will lecture on "Constitutional Interpretation and the Struggle for Civil Rights."

Included in her talk will be a discussion of the contributions of Charles Houston to the development of constitutional law. Houston was one of the legal experts who developed the courtroom strategy of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund which eventually resulted in the outlawing of legal segregation in the famed 1954 Brown vs. The Board of Education case. Dr. McNeil is the author of a biography of Charles Houston entitled Groundwork.

Admission is free and the public is invited to attend.

Nine Nursing students, Ruth Barlow, Pat Falvey, Tracey Gobbie, Kim Leiner, Sophie Schimmer, Donna Shoun, Karen Singletary, Renee Tookoo, and Carol Williams, attended the North Carolina Association of Nursing Students Convention in Greensboro, NC on February 4-7th. Congratulations are in order to Ruth Barlow, a senior, as she was awarded the "McLean" Scholarship for her involvement and dedication to the Association of Nursing Students at UNC-Wilmington.

- *Professional Time Management—Thursday, March 3, 9 a.m.-Noon, Harper;
- *Effective Delegation, Thursday, March 3, 1-4 p.m., Harper;
- *Motivating Yourself Effectively—Monday, March 7, 8:30 a.m.-Noon, Vann;
- *Management By Objectives—Tuesday, March 8, 9 a.m.-Noon, Harper;
- *Performance Appraisal and Development, Tuesday, March 8, 1-4 p.m., Harper;
- *Decision Making and Problem Solving, Thursday, March 31, 9 a.m.-5 p.m., Vann;
- *Effective Communication—Thursday, April 14, 9 a.m.-5 p.m., Vann;
- *Motivating the Average Employee—Friday, April 29, 8:30 a.m.-Noon, Vann.

Fee for the half-day workshops is $45 but will be discounted to $39 for early registration. Full day workshop fee of $71 also will be discounted to $71 for early registration. Special package fees are also available. Call the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195, for more information.

Jewish Influence on Bible

How did Jewish writers influence the works of the Bible? A four-part course, "Between the Testaments: Works Surrounding the Bible" will feature four instructors who will examine the writings, history and culture of the Hebrews between the years 250 B.C. and 70 A.D.

The course, offered through UNCW's Office of Special Programs, will meet on Mondays, 8-9:30 pm in Room 207, Social Behavioral Sciences Building and will be divided as follows: Greek version of Daniel and Wisdom of Solomon, Feb. 8 and 15, featuring Dr. Frank B. Hall, retired chairman of the department of philosophy and religion, UNCW; "The Maccabees and Jubilees", Feb. 22 and 29, Rabbi Robert Waxman, pastor of B'nai Israel Synagogue; "Letter of Aristeus and the Ezra Cycle", March 14 and 21, Dr. James Megivern, chairman, department of philosophy and religion, UNCW; and "I Enoch and II Enoch", March 28 and April 11, Dr. Gerald Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion, UNCW.

On April 18, all four instructors will join in a panel discussion.

Fee for the entire series is $24 but will be discounted to $19 for registration by Feb. 5. Individual classes are priced $15 each but will be discounted to $10 for enrollment by Feb. 5.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Foreign Film Series to Continue in Feb.

The Department of Modern Languages at UNCW is sponsoring a foreign film series which begins with the first showing on Jan. 17, 1988. All films will be shown in the original language with subtitles (unless otherwise indicated). Showings will be on Sunday afternoons at 3 p.m. in the Randall Library Auditorium. All are free of charge.

Feb. 14 - SUGAR CANE ALLEY (RUE CASE NEGRES) (Euzhan Palcy, Martinique, 1984, 107 minutes) An outstanding performance by Darling Legitim as the grandmother who sacrifices everything so that her grandson can escape the fate of most children living in Martinique in the 1930s. An award winning film.

Feb. 21 - LES COMPRES (Francis Veber, France, 1983, 92 minutes) Gerard Depardieu and Pierre Richard are called by a former girl friend to help her find her son who ran away from his parents. They bicker, compete with each other, and become friends. A gentle comedy.

Feb. 28 - MADO (Claude Sautet, France, 1979, 130 minutes) Sautet's characteristic touch of realism is applied to the complex inter-relationship of love, friendship and the business world.

Ottavia Piccolo stars as the mysterious woman who belongs to no one. Also starring Michael Piccolo as the businessman who is down, but not out. A unique style, and a unique cast of characters. Rated R.

Mar. 20 - A SUNDAY IN THE COUNTRY (B. Tavernier, France, 1984, 95 minutes) An aging impressionist painter spends his usual Sunday afternoon with his family running over life's small pleasures and inevitable disappointments until his daughter arrives. She is a whirlwind of activity and completely changes the mood. The film is to be noted for its beautiful hues and feelings which make it resemble an impressionist masterpiece.

Mar. 27 - RASHOMON (Akira Kurosawa, Japan, 1951, 89 minutes) A brilliant study of truth and individual perception. Four people witness a rape, but each retains a different version of the event and retells it differently. Best foreign film of 1951.

Apr. 10 - EL NORTE (Gregory Nava, USA, 1983, 139 minutes) The powerful story of a brother and sister who must leave oppression in Guatemala and make the hazardous journey through Mexico to the United States, only to find themselves living as illegals. A captivating account of a certain social life. Another American dream.

Apr. 17 - CAMILA (Maria-Luisa Bemberg, Argentina, 1984, 90 minutes) A young Catholic socialite from Buenos Aires falls in love and runs away with a young Jesuit priest. The two find temporary happiness in a small village but their story does not end there.

Apr. 24 - CARMEN (Carlos Saura, Spain, 1984, 99 minutes) Antonio Cades and Cristina Mayas star in this evocation of Bizet's famous opera done in flamenco. A joy! Academy Award nominee for best foreign film.

For information, contact Dr. Lapaire, assistant professor of the modern language department, at 395-3825.

'Brigadoon' opens on February 19th

The Opera House Theatre Company will open Lerner and Lowe's enchanting musical "Brigadoon" on February 19th. The music and dancing of this production has been said to be "some of the most delightful ever conceived for the modern musical theater"; it's based on the magical Scottish village of Brigadoon.

Jenny Wright (last seen as Eliza in "My Fair Lady") will star with Robin Robertson ("Camelot's" Lancelot), Rhessa Stone, Tony Pender, Alan Hayes, Linda Jewell, and Marc Francis. Jim Martz is Director, Lou Criscuolo - Executive Producer, and Cindy Miles is Costume Designer.

For a night of kilts, highland flings, romance and excitement - catch the production of "Brigadoon" at 8:00 p.m. February 19 - 21 and February 24 - 28 at the Scottish (how appropriate) Rite Temple, 1415 South 17th St. Student discount tickets are $6 and can be reserved by calling Opera House at 762-4234.

Interpersonal Communication

(UNCW News) — The UNCW Student Government Association is sponsoring a discussion called "Up Close and Personal" with Randy Harrington at 8:30 pm, Tuesday, Feb. 16, in the Hawk's Nest of the University Union.

Harrington, an instructor if interpersonal communication at UNCW as well as co-host of "Live at Five" on WKLA-TV 26, will address topics such as developing intimate relationships in the 1980s and 1990s, knowing when to get married, and learning how your identity is influenced by your relationships.

"The discussion will focus on real world problems and solutions in the development of positive intimate relationships," Harrington said. "Regardless of your current relationship status, 'Up Close and Personal' will offer you clear and practical information about your experience of intimacy." The discussion is free and open to the public.

(UNCW News) — "Confronting the Problem of Evil" will be the topic of a series of Thursday night lectures this spring sponsored by the UNCW philosophy and religion department.

All lectures will be held at 8 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium of Morton Hall. They are free and open to the public.

The series opens on Feb. 11 with a presentation by Dr. James J. Megivern on "Evil and the Bible." Megivern will examine the ways in which evil is accounted for in the texts of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, identifying various stages of understanding that have been proposed in the reconstruction of modern scholarship.

Part of his treatment will be an attempt to separate these elements in the Biblical texts from the wealth of other materials that have passed into popular beliefs about evil from extrabiblical legendary sources.

Love confession from an anthemaniac.

As you know, anthemaniacs like myself just go crazy around flowers. So what does my Valentine send me on Valentine's Day? The FTD® Love Note Bouquet!! Well, let me tell you, when I saw those beautiful flowers in that fine porcelain bowl it drove me wild. Besides, this glorious bouquet also came with a note pad and pencil with which I've written my Valentine every day. And smart Valentines know it doesn't cost much to send us anthemaniacs into this flower frenzy. Just ask your florist to have FTD send one for you.

Alumni spirit at its best

No UNCW home basketball game is complete without two persons in attendance.

If you ever get the opportunity, stop by Section 3, Row E, Seats 5,6,7 and 8 in Trask Coliseum. There you will find the two alumni that are a pillar in this University. Junior and the Professor.

Ronald Cleveland Choate (Class of '72) and James Carl Fugate (Class of '71) are two of the most devoted and fun-loving people you could meet. They are so devoted to the Seahawks that at least one of them has been in attendance of every UNCW home game since 1974.

Choate and Fugate are both Jacksonville, N.C. residents. Choate, was nicknamed Junior during college because he was a year behind the Professor. Fugate is called the Professor because he is a junior high school history teacher.

"We love the team and the game," said Fugate (but call him Professor). "It is our hobby that is an obsession now. It replaces in some ways what we didn't have when we went to school here."

But pride in UNCW and the basketball team doesn't tell the whole story about Junior and the Professor. They take their hobby of supporting the Seahawks to the ultimate level through so-called moral and immoral support.

In 1980, they both decided to hit the road with the Seahawks. Since that fateful trip to Baltimore and the Crab Cake Basketball Classic that the Seahawks played in, road-tripping has been redifined.

Ask anyone who knows these two and you will be told that you haven't been on a road trip until you have traveled with Junior and the Professor.

"We are pretty ruthless," said Choate. "We don't forget anything. We follow the Code-of-the-Road which means you know and say nothing outside of a road trip. Every man protects the other. We take great pride in the fact we have never been arrested. It is all in the name of fun."

"Only a few are ever asked to be apart of the Junior and Professor Hospitality Room," said Fugate. "But one mistake or one violation of the Code and it is all over."

Some would say that alumni like Junior and the Professor sometimes get in the way of a basketball program. But it is the knowledge and trust that they have built up in the UNCW athletic department that makes them so special and such an integral part of the program.

"We don't offer advice to the coach," said Fugate. "We are there to support the team. If the coach asks, we will help, but we don't interfere with the team in any way. We just enjoy associated with the program."

But there was a time when things weren't so rosy in following the Seahawks.

"It has been lonely at times pulling for the Seahawks," said Choate. "We were a limited number with pride in this place at one time, which I can see why. Up until 10 years ago UNCW was just a glorified community college."

Both agree that if the Seahawks had beaten Wake Forest, then ranked in the Top 20 nationally, to open Trask Coliseum, things would have been different. Not only in success but in attitudes.

"We (the University) don't get the respect from the people of Eastern North Carolina because of the shadow of the Atlantic Coast Conference schools," said the Professor. "It was so gratifying last year when we almost upset Indiana because as when we left Assembly Hall, their fans were so complimentary of our efforts, where as people down here are very condescending and would have probably said we just got lucky or it was a fluke."

"We also could use more support from our faculty and administration at games. How many times have you seen Chancellor Wagoner in the stands."

As the University grows, there will be other alumni like Junior and the Professor, but none that have meant so much. They are the foundation that this school will grow from and nothing would make these two men prouder than to see UNCW among the nation's best.

To follow the school from its WILCO (Wilmington College) days to the growth it has seen lately, is very gratifying to these men. To help it grow to even greater heights is what they are committed to.

So the next time you happen to walk by Section 3 in Trask Coliseum during a basketball game, stop by Row E and meet the Junior and Professor. They are to UNCW what Naismith is to basketball. CLASSICS!

Loss drops UNCW to second

UNCW gets lit up by Patriots

by Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Monday's clash between league-leaders UNCW Wilmington and George Mason was to be a barn-burner. It turned out to be two games within one.

The Patriots of George Mason won the battle as they captured a decisive 84-70 triumph over the Seahawks to claim sole possession of first place in the Colonial Athletic Association.

The first half was all UNCW as they stormed out to a 40-33 halftime advantage behind Roy Walker's 12 points on offense and splendid defense on one of the CAA's top players, Kenny Sanders. The game could have been over at intermission if not for Patriot sophomore Steve Smith who lit up the nets for 16 of his career-high 27.

In the second half, George Mason took Smith's lead and quickly turned a nine-point deficit into a 40-33 halftime advantage behind Roy Walker's 12 points on offense and splendid defense on one of the CAA's top players, Kenny Sanders. The game could have been over at intermission if not for Patriot sophomore Steve Smith who lit up the nets for 16 of his career-high 27.

The Patriots earned 63 percent from the field in the second period as the Seahawks connected on just 31 percent, most of the errant shots coming from three-point range in an attempt to make a comeback.

Walker finished with 20 points, while teammates Larry Houzer and Greg Bender contributed 16 and 12 points respectively.

GMU improves to 15-6 on the season and 7-2 in the CAA. UNCW is now 11-10 overall and 6-3 in conference play.

On Saturday night, UNCW avenged an early season loss to James Madison with a 74-53 trouncing of the Dukes.

Larry Houzer led the Seahawks with 17 points, Antonio Howard had 16 and Roy Walker finished with 13.

The Seahawks blew an early six point lead in the first half and led by just one, 26-25 at the intermission, as JMU interim coach Tom McCorry had his team playing with desire.

Earlier in the week, James Madison's Head Coach John Thurston resigned when the UNCW continued to struggle until 14:35 left in the game. James Madison jumped out quickly in the second period, taking a 32-27 lead when Benny Gordon swished a three-pointer from the top of the key with 17:03 left in the game.

But the Seahawks woke up and outscored the Dukes 40-11 during the next 13 minutes and 36 seconds to take the Dukes out of the contest. JUM contributed to the run by shooting just 29 percent from the floor.

Howard got going in the second half when the game become more of a running contest. He scored 14 of his 16 markers in the period, the last finishing off the huge Seahawk run with 3:27 left.

The UNCW bench got to see some playing time late and freshman Major Wiggins delighted the crowd with his first three points of the year. Wiggins collected five points on the evening, including a nifty baseline jumper and a giant slam before time ran out.

James Madison was led by Kennard Winchester's 12 points, Benny Gordon and Ralph Glenn each added 10 points each.

The loss dropped JMU to the CAA cellar at 6-13 and 2-6 in the conference.

Richmond loses

WASHINGTON -- American University upset conference favorite Richmond 68-63 to knock the Spiders from first place.

The Spider came into the contest needing a win to keep pace with the Patriots of GMU.

George Mason leads the conference at 7-2, followed by Richmond and UNC Wilmington at 6-3. American is now 5-4, Navy is 4-5, William & Mary and East Carolina are both 3-6 and James Madison trails at 2-7.

UNCW's Tim Brewer (42) gets a pass inside against Navy during the Seahawks win over the Midshipman. UNCW and Head Coach Robert McPherson face Navy and American this weekend in key Colonial Athletic Association contests.

"Give Me One Good Reason Why I Should Go To The 1988 Colonial Basketball Championship."

1. It's on a weekend. Mostly. March 5, 6 and 7. Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Four games Saturday starting at noon. Semi-finals Sunday at 2 p.m. Championship game Monday at 7:30 p.m. You can see six games without taking time off work. And if your team plays in the final, you can call in sick.
2. It's convenient. The Hampton Coliseum is right on interstate 64. It's an hour and a half drive east of Richmond. Half an hour from William & Mary. Four hours from American, George Mason, JMU and Navy. Three hours from East Carolina and five from UNC Wilmington.
3. It's economical. A ticket book for all seven games is $25. That's $3.57 per game—cheaper than a movie. A ticket for a two-game session Saturday or Sunday, and for Monday's championship game, is $10 ($5 for college students). Tickets are available at member college ticket offices and at the Hampton Coliseum.
4. There are hotels and restaurants galore near the Coliseum. Rush out for some fast food, or sit down to a famous Chesapeake Bay seafood buffet.
5. The Coliseum is a great place to watch basketball. There's not a bad seat in the house.
6. There's plenty of post-game nightlife for the night-owl in you. "Party hearty" and celebrate your team's victories.
7. You can show your school spirit by competing in the "Old College Try" Fun Run Sunday morning at the Coliseum. Or you can play golf and tennis. Or take a stroll along Buckroe Beach.
8. You can visit the NASA Visitors Center and learn the history of the space program. Or visit Fort Wool and Fort Monroe and learn Civil War history. Or visit Kecoughtan Village and learn Indian history. (Hampton was founded in 1610, by the way.)
9. You can go shopping between games. Coliseum Mall (130 stores) is just down the street, and world-famous outlets are just up the interstate.
10. You'll see great college basketball. Eight teams fighting for the conference title and a bid to the NCAA tournament. Last year's championship game was a 53-50 nail-biter between Navy and UNCW (the Mids won). This time—who knows? You'll have to be there. Mark your calendar now for an exciting weekend.

Women falter on road

by D. Curtis Nichols
Assistant Sports Editor

The UNC Wilmington women's basketball traveled to Virginia for the weekend to face two Colonial Athletic Association foes. GMU dropped the Lady Hawks with a resounding 88-75 victory.

George Mason's Cindy Baruch crushed UNCW's thoughts of victory with a game-high 27 points. Baruch was not alone as Veronica Holland came off of the bench to pump in an additional 17 points. Other Lady Patriots finishing in double figures were Annnette Battle and Susie Walton both with 10 points.

The Lady Seahawks never led in the contest. UNCW was down by as much as 16 points in the first half but were able to close the margin to only a 10 point at the half, 43-33.

The Lady Seahawks were paced by sophomore guard Charlene Page's 17 points. Sharon McDowell and Johnnie Smith assisted in the scoring department by adding 13 and 10 points respectively.

UNCW's other conference match of the week was against conference-leading James Madison. The Lady Seahawks were winless in 12 tries against the Lady Dukes. This weekend proved to be no different as they were waxed, 87-67.

Lady Hawks freshman Cindy Makowski came off Coach Marilyn Christoph's bench to score an inspired 19 points. In route to scoring a career high 19 points, she canned all four of her three point attempts, a school record.

McDowell finished the contest with 16 points but more importantly grabbed 14 rebounds.

The Lady Seahawks completed the road trip with an overall record of 13-6 and a CAA record of 3-5.

Junk mail of the TV air waves

When I wrote about junkmail last week, I immediately thought of television commercials for some strange reason. Television itself is bad enough sometimes, but some commercials cause my large bowel to ache. I realize that advertisements are a necessary consequence of network television, but I wish that they wouldn't be so obnoxious.

I hate serious, boring commercials; I hope that the makers of commercials aren't taken off the air. They could go the way of cigarette commercials if MADD (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers) have their way. I used to be a member of DAMM (Drunks Against Mad Mothers) and I enjoy beer commercials. They are too funny to be axed. Can you imagine no Spuds, Lysol, or Bob Uecker?

My favorite commercial these days is for "Freedom Rock". That old hippie cracks me up with his "well turn it up man!" I can't recall any other good commercials, but I have no problem thinking of lousy ones.

Commercials that advertise products that are actually harmful to the consumer are the worst. They make it sound like an asset though. I'm not referring to alcohol ads; we all know the evils of alcohol. I'm talking about products such as deodorant tampons. There is no reason to have a deodorant in a tampon, and they cause infections. What about feminine sprays? I wonder what advertising genius thought of that product? They also cause infections and they taste terrible too. I really hate the ad that has a teenage girl telling her mother, "sometimes I just don't feel completely clean." I think most mothers would reply, "then take a bath, dammit!"

At one point the makers of sanitary napkins must have decided that they weren't making enough money. Women weren't on their period long enough. Presto, the puffy shield that should be worn every day, to feel "fresher". The same as Midol, they weren't making enough money so they started the "before, during and after" campaign. This translates: every day.

They'll show all those "feminine" commercials, but networks are afraid to run condom ads! It's probably for the best, considering what could happen after some ads exco get a hold of it. I could just see it. Some dweeb holding a tray, busted condom and a high voice comes out of nowhere.

chanting, "wimpy, wimpy, wimpy". Then they would show a man with an inner-tube, and a husky voice would bellow, "hefty, hefty, hefty". When the condom companies want to start making more money, they can start a "before, during and after" campaign. It makes me squirm to think about that.

Networks have some strange rules that their ads must follow. A tampon cannot be shown, and they can't say what it is actually for. Toilet paper can be squeezed or caressed across someone's face, but it can't be shown on a roller near the commode. People might realize what it is for and be repulsed. Nobody can drink a beer on a beer commercial. That's what I like to do with beer, watch it sit and get warm.

Weekdays have a glut of pain reliever ads. If you are hurting before the commercial, you'll certainly be hurting afterward. They all show a man or woman with an excruciatingly pained look on their face as they explain their pain as constant, throbbing and/or growing, and rub their face or head. It's enough to put you into a migraine fit.

The funny thing is that all these analgesics are the same thing. Medipren, Advil, Naprin, Midol and Haltron are all Ibuprofen 200mg. Motrin is 800mg of Ibuprofen, which by the way, is excellent for a hangover.

The networks know where to put their ads. It's no coincidence that "feminine" needs and pain relievers dominate day time television, and beer and financial companies rule football. Can you imagine feminine spray ads on football telecasts? What about beer ads during soccer?

Castling for commercials is definitely important. You will never see Dick Butkus pushing tampons, or Christy Brinkley dipping Skoal; it just wouldn't be the same.

Public Service Announcements can be very into a coma. "This is drugs; this is your brain on drugs." I'm sure that ad put an end to any drug problem in America. It could be that many druggies are now trying to get fried on eggs.

If you want commercial free television, you have to watch HBO, but how many times can a person watch Little Shop Of Horrors? The only real alternative is to sell the tube, or tape everything and fast-forward the commercials when you watch it, except beer ads of course. The choice is yours.

"Seahawk Should Cut the Crybaby"

Dear Rick Cairns (of the other side):

You recently scribbled an "article" about the mail, in your usual boring unprofessional way. In this article you attacked the "poor sap" who delivers the mail. Well, as usual, you've made a perfect ass of yourself. Anyone who has taken the time to meet Doris, the woman who is in charge of mail delivery at UNCW, realizes that there was absolutely no research put into this adolescent attempt at journalism. She is a dedicated caring woman, who is always willing to go out of her way to help. Rick said that he was tired of junk mail, and wanted letters from family and friends. I find it hard to believe that he has any friends, and his family probably doesn't want to run the risk of him writing back. Ricks attempts at humor are truly adolescent, constantly using vulgar language, to try to get a cheap laugh. If the Seahawk is looking for ways to save money, try saving the publication costs of "the other side." You'll be doing us all a favor. Signed, Christopher Daniel

Barry Drake concert tonight

Barry Drake, often called a walking encyclopedia of music, presented a lecture last night and will hold a mini concert at 8 p.m. tonight, Thursday, Feb. 11. The event will be held in room 100 of the University Union.

The topic of the lecture was "60's Rock - When the Music Mattered." The admission for tonight's concert is free.

The decade of the 60's was one of the most interesting periods in American history. Through all of the good and bad times, it was the music that brought us together and sometimes tore us apart. The political turmoil, the social upheaval, the Hippie Movement, the Vietnam War and the Generation Gap were all reflected in the popular music of the day.

The Beatles, Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix, The Supremes, The Beach Boys, Simon & Garfunkel, The Rolling Stones, Otis Redding and yes, even The Monkees, were the sounds filling the airwaves throughout those turbulent years.

"60's Rock - When the Music Mattered," a multi-media presentation by Barry Drake, is intended to celebrate, examine, clarify and put into perspective one of the most exciting ten years of our music history.

Barry Drake has often been called a walking encyclopedia of music. A graduate of Manhattan College, he has been totally involved in the world of the New York City area, Barry went everywhere there was music to be heard. He saw everyone from Buddy Holly and Chuck Berry to The Brooklyn Paramount in San Francisco exploded with the "Summer of Love" in 1967. Barry was there hanging out on the streets with The Grateful Dead and The Jefferson Airplane. There is even a rumor that he once danced on American Bandstand.

In the middle 60's Barry became a performer and songwriter, and was soon signed to Capitol Records. Since then, Barry has recorded three albums of his own music and has toured The United States and Europe for the past Twenty years.

Not content to be just a performer, Barry has successfully started his own record company, booking agency and management firm. He is also a respected collector and dealer of rare records. Most recently he has been called upon to share his knowledge of music and enthusiasm for Rock 'N' Roll at colleges and music business conventions across the country.

Combining his extensive knowledge of music and his abilities as a dynamic stage performer, Barry has succeeded in making his lectures among the best and most inspiring in the business. See you at the concert.

Valentine concert on Sunday

A Valentine Poupouri, a program of Love songs, featuring faculty from the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, East Carolina University and area artists will be presented on February 14th at 3 p.m. at the First Baptist Church, 520 North 5th Street, Wilmington. Admission is free.

The program will consist of Avies for Four Solo Voices by John Dowland, Carissimi's Jedhe, a 17th century oratorio, and the Love Song Waltzes. Op. 52 by Johannes Brahms.

The program will feature East Carolina University faculty member Donna Dease, University of North Carolina at Wilmington faculty members: John Gilmore, (University Foundation Visiting Distinguished Professor), Alice Pierce, John Pierce, Rob Nathanson, Sherrill Martin, and Clair Rozier. Also area artists Mike Rallis, Kathy Meyer and Randy Barnhill. Joe Hickman will conduct the UNCW Chamber Singers.

Pierce to attend Met Opera finals

Soprano, Alice Pierce, Assistant Professor of Music here at UNCW, will compete at the Regional level for the Metropolitan Opera Auditions in Atlanta on February 27.

Winners from the Regional Competition travel to New York for extensive coaching and a chance at being a finalist, winning a large cash award. Occasionally, singers are considered for a contract as a solo artist.

During the District competition, John Gilmore - Metropolitan Opera Tenor and Visiting Distinguished Professor here, said, "Ms. Pierce sang beautifully, expressive while dazzling with fast passages and razzing phrases."

Pierce is not only expecting a win in the Regional Finals, but also a little singing in August. We wish her good luck with both.

Big Band in concert Friday

The UNCW Jazz Ensembles, directed by Frank J. Bongiorno, assistant professor of music, will present a Big Band Extravaganza featuring the music of the late great band leader Woody Herman at 8 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 12 in the Hawk's Nest of the university union.

Woodrow Charles Herman, the man they called "Road Father" and one of the last surviving leaders of the big band era, died Oct. 29, 1987. Herman was born May 16, 1913 in Milwaukee. As a child he toured in vaudeville as "the boy wonder of the clarinet." In 1934 he joined the Isham Jones band. When Jones retired in Colorado in 1936, some of the musicians reorganized and voted Herman their leader. His various organizations dubbed with such appellations as the Band that Played the Blues, the First, Second, and Third Herds, and ultimately, the Young Thundering Herd--and helped talents like Stan Getz, Zoot Sims, Al Cohn, Shorty Rogers, and others gain a wider audience.

Herman made stylistic shifts no other Swing-era bandleader ever attempted as boldly, going from bebop in the late 40s to hard bop and gospel-ish funk in the 50s, to Coltrane and fusion in the 70s and 80s. This concert will be somewhat of a musical retrospect of Herman's bands' development through the years. Selections to be performed include Woodchoppers Ball, Early Autumn, Four Brothers, La Fiesta, and others.

Admission will be free for UNCW students, $2 for students and senior citizens, and all others $4. Refreshments will be served at no charge. For more information contact the Division of Music at 395-3390.

All of February, "Passport to Downtown" will be held every Thursday night. This fabulous February event includes the final tours of Thalian Hall, The Burgwin-Wright House and the Laitner House Open guided tours and carriage rides are at two-for-one prices, and restaurants will offer discounts. Come, discover the historic beauty of downtown Wilmington. For more information call the Community Box Office about "Passport to Downtown" at 763-9328.

On Books: Urban on Urban

by Scott Urban

Who is this guy and why is he reading all these weird books?

If you read the book reviews in last semester's Seahawk, you encountered an odd array of titles: King's Misery, Chesbro's Beasts of Valhalla, Miller's Dark Knight Returns (a comic book, for crying out loud!), among others. These books might seem unusual to begin with -- but to think that someone actually read them and cared enough about them to write a review might seem fantastic. Most of the books I'm going to take a look at in this semester run in the same vein and you deserve at least a partial explanation as to why.

Obviously, I review what I enjoy reading. And I enjoy reading and collecting what is commonly referred to as genre fiction. These include the fields the New York Times book reviewers don't like to admit exist -- science-fiction, horror, fantasy, and mystery fiction.

What do I see in the works in these fields that keep bringing me back? First, no matter how inflated the prices are, books (of any description) offer an inexpensive form of entertainment. They last longer than a movie, they can be shared with others, and they can be selected to fit your mood and taste.

Next, genre fiction is noted for offering escapism. I can only believe that after a day of taking notes, listening to tedious lectures, fighting with your girl -- or boyfriend, and hunting for a UNC-W parking space (aren't more valuable than diamonds), the last thing you want to do is read about someone with similar problems. Science-fiction, mysteries, et al., can take you far beyond this world (or at least beyond Wilmington, which is a blessing in itself) and

Minstrel shows revisited Saturday

On Saturday, February 13, 1988, at 1 P.M., Alex Albright will present "Silas Green Minstrel Shows: Wilmingtonians as Entertainers," a slide-lecture at New Hanover County Museum of the Lower Cape Fear.

The program will emphasize local residents who performed in the Silas Green Shows. These traveling shows were the primary source of entertainment and contact with the outside world. They spread jazz and blues throughout the countryside, and many of the performers who got their starts in minstrel and traveling vaudeville shows of the period are familiar names today, e.g., Bessie Smith, Ma Rainey, W.C. Handy, and Louis Armstrong.

Katie Abraham and Dicie Pettiford, chorus line performers who married musicians from the Silas Green Orchestra, will attend the program. They will be available to discuss their careers as entertainers.

Mr. Albright, a professor at East Carolina University, has done extensive research on the history of minstrel shows and black audience cinema. He has written and produced a sixty minute documentary titled, "Boogie in Black and White" which will premiere at 10 P.M., February 19th, on UNC Public Television.

This free program is in conjunction with Black History Month.

Saturday, February 13th, there will be a Slide-Lecture presentation entitled, "Silas Green, Minstrel Shows: Wilmingtonians As Entertainers," by Alex Albright of East Carolina University. This presentation is at the New Hanover County Library. For more information, call 763-0652.

Sunday, February 14th, The 3rd Annual WHQR Winstetaster Fundraiser will be held at the Wilmington Hilton Inn. This fundraiser will be held from 4:00-7:00 p.m. Tickets are available in advance or at the door. Come on, SUPPORT PUBLIC RADIO!!! For more information call WHQR at 343-1640.

show you people, places, and possibilities you hadn't dreamed existed.

Perhaps most importantly, some of the most innovative and original creative writing takes place in genre fiction. True, it sometimes seems prove hacks and Harlequin romancers make up the majority of writers in these fields. But it is worth the search to encounter that one author who takes the conventions of a branch of literature, molds them in his or her distinctive style, and then adds something totally unique, something never attempted before. To stumble across someone like Dennis Etchison in dark fantasy, George Chesbro in mystery, or Lucius Shepard in science-fiction can be more than a pleasant surprise -- it can be consciousness -- expanding experience (and I mean that without the idiotic "New Age" trappings).

Is there a way you, as a UNC-W student, can realistically benefit from reading for fun? Sure. No matter what you read -- even if the book is pulp-dreck -- you can still learn something (even if you learn what not to do in writing). I don't think there's a student in any major who graduates without writing one or two research papers and creative pieces. "Mass Market" books can expose you to a variety of topics, let you see what you enjoy, introduce you to characters you'd like to expand on, inspire plots you want to see worked out on paper.

That's a hasty and incomplete rationale for why I read, and review, the works I do. But if I can turn a single person on to an author or book that person enjoys, I'll feel I've done my job. Now, let's get to some books. Next: Stephen King's T.S.G. Tommyknockers.

AMAZING!

Craig Karges

Psychic returns to campus

Mentalist Craig Karges makes a return trip to UNC-Wilmington for a show at 8 p.m., Monday, Feb. 15, in room 100 of the University Union. Sponsored by the University Program Board Special Events Committee, Karges promises a mystifying and entertaining evening.

Admission is $1 with UNCW ID, $2 general public.

Walking blindfolded through city traffic, predicting a newspaper headline days in advance or piloting a motorcycle while blindfolded through an obstacle course is all in a day's work for Karges.

Karges is a mentalist, an ESP showman, but he just doesn't look the part. He's young, clean cut, wholesome looking. Who could picture this likable guy as a master of illusion, extrasensory perception as mind over matter? Anyone who sees him in action.

Tables "walk" onstage and then levitate into the air; three finger rings are borrowed from members of the audience and linked together; blindfolded Karges is able to call off the serial number on a dollar bill; minds are read and predictions are made and verified during a typical performance. In a special demonstration Karges risks his fee, the money being returned to the sponsor if he fails. Karges' show is a fantastic display of illusion and psychic happenings that is presented over 150 times a year on college campuses, for major corporations and conventions and in night clubs from coast to coast.

Even Karges' peers find his work fascinating. He has been featured as an entertainer at the international Psychic Entertainers Association convention and he has authored a book, available exclusively to other performers, which has been sold in 11 countries.

Since the age of twelve, Craig has been mystifying and entertaining audiences. He started as a magician but later became fascinated with the world of ESP. Karges studied under his uncle, a former vaudeville mind reader, for one year, spent another year polishing his skills and in 1974 combined his magic and ESP talents into the incredible performance which is now known as the Magic of The Mind Show. Karges' work has been the subject of newswires, radio and television interviews carried in the United States as well as other countries.

On television's "PM Magazine" Karges not only duplicated a drawing being thought of by the show's host but was also able to locate the one hotel room that the host was hiding in, amongst 200 such rooms.

Karges has co-produced and starred in two half hour television programs for PBS in his home state of West Virginia as well as a live, ninety minute cable broadcast.

Although Karges refers to himself as a mentalist he claims no supernatural powers nor does he try to convince his audiences to believe in anything. Karges sees his role as an entertainer and that is his primary purpose once he walks onstage. If Karges' performance goes beyond entertainment, he hopes that it may motivate people to explore their own minds and face the possibility that there might be more to the human mind than is usually thought possible. So, is he tricking us? Who knows? Most people seem to think he's too fascinating to care.

Review:

The Fantasticicks:

A little less than...

by Heidi Berge

Jake's was a fantastic place to see a play; the play was fantastic (in the surreal sense); but some of the singing in the Thalian Association's production of "The Fantasticicks" last weekend could have been better.

1988 marks the 28th year "The Fantasticicks" has been performed on theatrical stages. The Romeo and Juliet take-off (complete with feuding fathers-in-law) has a simple storyline with a few unbelievable twists and characters that make the play a little hard to follow but very up-to-date. It is similar to Moonlighting in that the audience is never quite sure what is real and what is the character's imagination. For some this is fun, but more classical theatergoers can be put off.

Boy (Thom Clements) notices Girl (Linda Carlisle), they court, while they think their fathers hate each other -- we find out later they don't -- and the whole time El Gallo (the other guy) el diablo (the narrator played by Doug Dodson) looks on. Another interesting character that lurks around is the mime/mute/wall apparently symbolizing outside forces which threaten to step in. At one point, an old actor and his companion are brought in to carry out a scene for el diablo. Very interesting, tricky twists.

Linda Carlisle made her leading stage debut as the ingenue and this is where the performance lagged. Although her performance was natural and believable, her movements smooth and graceful, she lacked confidence when she sang and that, unfortunately, brought the performance down. Carlisle's acting was at times captivating, especially as she changed from innocence to calculating cold with the aid of a mask. She'll surely blossom as she continues in leading roles.

Fantastic performances were given by the two fathers (Paul Mixon and Robert Melton) who were a perfect duo as they reveled in their scheming plan to get their children together. A dance scene with them made everyone roar. Doug Dodson was well-hated as El Gallo and had some shining singing moments. Donn Squires looked as if he'd stepped out of a Shakespearean theater as dust flew off his costume but not out of his brain. Squires majored in theatrical make-up in college and it was well displayed in his old man transformation.

Other highlights included a great death scene by Thomas McDonald and excellent choreography by Susan Sullivan.

But...what do I know..?

Film competition announced

The Streisand Center, in cooperation with the West Valley Kehillah, California, invites applications for its Sixth Annual Awards for Student Film Makers. The Awards comprise a $1,000 prize for the best completed student film on a Jewish theme and a $1,000 prize for best student film proposal on a Jewish theme.

Students in either category must furnish proof of college enrollment in a currently accredited University program and must provide a resume (in triplicate) together with references. Guidelines and application can be obtained by writing to the Streisand Film Awards, c/o the Streisand Center, 900 Hilgard Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90024.

The West Valley Kehillah is also pleased to invite applications for the 2nd Annual Recognitions Awards. These awards for the best film by an independent film maker on a Jewish theme comprise a guaranteed screening of the winning film(s) in the forthcoming Streisand Center and West Valley Kehillah seasons and the presentation of an Awards certificate at a public ceremony to be held in January 1989.

The Recognition Awards are open to all independent film makers in the United States, Canada, the U.K. and Israel.

For further information on the Recognition Awards please contact the West Valley Kehillah at 22622 Vanowine St., Canoga Park, CA 91307 (818) 346-5962 & (818) 346-8940.

The Streisand Center was established in 1981 with an endowment from Barbra Streisand. Its aim is to illuminate the Jewish arts by highlighting the best in Jewish creativity.

The West Valley Kehillah, California, is a communal organization established to strengthen the vitality and bonds within the larger Jewish community.

King Not Seeking Re-Election      B. Frank Hall Day Declared

By Chad Adams
Managing Editor

Lee King, current president of the SGA, announced at the weekly SGA meeting that he intended to finish out his current term, but that he would not seek re-election for the 1988-89 school year.

"I have evaluated my reasons for running and weighed them against the requirements I need to graduate and have decided, in the event that I would have won, that I would not have been able to devote the necessary amount of time to do the job adequately," King said.

King has been president of the SGA for the 87-88 school year. He has also served as an SGA senator for two years, Senator Speaker Pro-Tempore, Chairman of the Finance Committee and Parliamentarian.

"This decision to withdraw from the election has absolutely nothing to do with any Greek organization or the recent Seahawk editorial comments. All reasons were personal," King said.

In the recent past King had been scrutinized on the editorial page of the Seahawk written by ex-editor in chief Jefferson Weaver. In those editorials King had been accused of playing favorites with his fraternity brothers using the system to his best interest and not those of the student body.

King wishes to work on his graduation requirements more intensely in the coming year so he can graduate on time.

He is working toward a BA in history and will also be qualified to teach social sciences in high school.

"I was originally going to run to prevent the current Vice-President, Karla Alston, from becoming the next President," King said.

"In my opinion she would be a detriment to the SGA and the student body of UNCW as a whole because I feel that Karla [Alston] actions over the past year have been to pro-administration and that with her as president the SGA.

"I further feel that she would not have the ability to turn down the administration should it propose something that would not be in the best interest of the student body," King said.

"I am currently registered and will run for the position of Senior Class President to continue my affiliation with the SGA," said King.

Applications for SGA president and other positions may be picked up at the SGA office and must be filed no later than 4 p.m. on March 4 in the SGA office to document candidacy. These applications apply to the 1988-89 school year and, with some exceptions, all who plan to be registered students for that year are eligible for registration UNCW Chancellor William H. Wagoner has designated Friday, Feb. 26, 1988, as Professor B. Frank Hall day on the UNCW campus. Wagoner issued the proclamation on the occasion of Hall's 80th birthday to honor him for his contributions to the university. Three main events have been planned to celebrate the day.

Kicking off the Feb. 26th observance of Hall's birthday will be a private reception (by invitation only) at 4 p.m. at Kenan House, the chancellor's residence. That evening, there will be a Dutch treat dinner, $10 per person, by reservation only, at 6 p.m. in the Hawk's Nest on the UNCW campus.

Following dinner, Professor Ashely Montagu, who is "one of the world's best-known anthropologists" according to a write-up in Contemporary Authors, NRS55, will be presenting a lecture on "Religion, Science and Human Life" at 8 p.m. in King Auditorium. The public is invited to attend the dinner and the first lecture. For dinner reservations call 395-3406 or come by the philosophy and religion department to purchase tickets by Feb. 25.

Hall, a Wilmington native founded UNCW's philosophy and religion department in 1963 and chaired the department until 1975. Hall is a graduate of New Hanover High School, Davidson College and Union Theological Seminary in Richmond.

During his career, Hall served as minister of three Presbyterian churches. He also wrote a Sunday column and more than 1,000 articles for the Wilmington Star News. In 1978, a collection of his favorite and most popular articles was published as The Word of B. Frank Hall.

B. Frank Hall, founder of UNCW's Philosophy and Religion Dept. will be celebrating his eightieth birthday Friday, Feb. 26th.

(University Advancement Photo)

In the same year, his excellence as a teacher was recognized when he became the first recipient of the UNCW Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award. Hall received the Distinguished Citizen Award from the UNC-Wilmington Alumni Association in 1985 in honor of his achievements as a minister, newspaper columnist and professor.

In addition to commemorating Hall's eightieth birthday, Chancellor Wagoner cited Hall's "long tenure and eminent scholarship" as reasons for his declaration of B. Frank Hall Day. "The university owes him so much," said Wagoner.

Also on Friday, Feb. 26, at 2 p.m., B. Frank Hall will meet informally with students and other interested individuals for reminiscing in room 212 of the Social and Behavioral Sciences Building. He will reflect on his 25 years with the university and highlights of the development of the department of philosophy and religion.

Miss UNCW Crowned

Wanda LouAnn Witherspoon was crowned Miss University of North Carolina at Wilmington on Jan. 23, at the 1988 Scholarship Pageant. The awards included a $1,000 scholarship from the UNCW Alumni Association and gifts from many local merchants. She is the daughter of Col. (Ret.) and Mrs. Ronald L. Schule of Wilmington.

The first runner-up was Natalyn Jane Shipp, a junior from Wilmington, who received a $500 scholarship. The second runner-up was Carla Jill Williams, a sophomore from Wade, NC, who received a $300 scholarship. Both of these scholarships were awarded by the Student Government Association at UNCW. Kelly Michelle Rodney, a sophomore from Burlington, NC, received the newly-created Dr. Betty Jo Welch Congeniality Award.

Witherspoon is a 25-year-old senior seeking a bachelor's degree in psychology, with plans to pursue a master's degree in child psychology. With these degrees, she plans to seek a career as a child psychologist. Her honors in college include qualifying for the dean's list and being named in Who's Who Among American Students in American Universities and Colleges. Some of her public service activities include participating in the Big Buddy Program, acting as a speaker for United Way, volunteering as a Crisis Line counselor, and serving as a hostess and emcee for charity events.

Witherspoon enjoys music, vocal training and dancing, and hopes to someday become a professional entertainer. She recently auditioned for the show "You Can Be a Star."

HMS Bristol Comes To Wilmington Student Involvement Encouraged

The HMS Bristol will dock at Wilmington's Northwind dock on February 26 at 10:30 a.m., the sixth visit of the ship to Wilmington. It is, however, the first time the Bristol will have docked downtown and the first visit in which the crew is on a training mission.

A welcoming ceremony is planned to begin as the ship comes into view, about 9:30 a.m. It will include performances by the Hoggard Marching Band, Hoggard Jazz Ensemble, pom-pom girls, bagpipers Kirk Rose, and Miss UNCW. The public is urged to join.

Captain Alan W.J. West commands the crew of 514 which includes 105 cadets from the Britannia Royal Naval College Dartmouth. Bristol's peace-time mission is the training of these cadets who have been at Dartmouth for about a year. Many will return there after their tour on the Bristol.

A guided missile destroyer, the 55-foot long ship has a beam of 55 feet and a standard displacement of 6,000 tons. She is the sixth vessel to carry the name "Bristol", the first having been a 48-gun battleship in 1653.

As with past visits, the Dial-A-Sailor program is available. The phone number until docking is 395-6360. After docking it will be 763-9067. Residents who wish to entertain one or more sailors while the ship is in port are encouraged to call Dial-A-Sailor.

Bristol will open to the public for tours on Saturday, February 27, 1:00 to 4:00 p.m. and again on Sunday from 1:00 to 4:00.

The long-standing rivalry between Cape Fear Rugby Club and the Bristol's team continues with matches on Sunday, 1:00 p.m., at UNCW and on Monday night at 7:00 at Legion Stadium. Bristol currently "holds the shield". Admission is free, but donations will be accepted for, and concession proceeds will go to, the New Hanover County Sheriff's Department Benevolent Association.

Soccer competition between Michelob Soccer and the Bristol is set for 9:00 p.m., on Monday at Legion Stadium. Admission is free.

By Deborah Goodman
Staff Writer

In an effort to promote cultural exchange and friendship between the United States and other countries, several UNCW organizations will be sponsoring a light brunch on Sunday, Feb. 28 for the midshipmen of the HMS Bristol, which will be docking in Wilmington on Feb. 26.

The Museum of World Cultures, SGA, IFC, and the Panhellenic Council have invited the cadets from the Dartmouth Naval College to the brunch, which will be held at 11 o'clock a.m. in the Hawk's Nest of the University Union. The brunch will cost $1.50 for UNCW students and will allow the students and cadets to spend time getting to know one another in an informal atmosphere.

In a related effort, students are being encouraged to participate in the Diabla-Sailor program, helping to entertain the crew members during their stay in the city. Interested students can call 395-6360 until Friday at 10 a.m., and 763-9067 after that time.

Other activities over the weekend that will involve the Bristol include the welcoming ceremonies in Riverfront Park on Friday morning at 9:30 a.m., and then guided tours of the docked ship on Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

AIDS Testing On College Campus

(CPS)—U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop wants to test every student of a major American university this spring to determine the prevalence of AIDS on campuses, but many students and several college health officials think it's a bad idea.

"Why?" asked Dr. Richard J. Schuch, the University of Illinois-Chicago student health director. "Why would he want to do this? I'd rather deal with the risks at hand. We should be worried about getting decent condom ads on television and addressing issues of safe sex. Why waste money of this stuff?"

The tests, other critics say, wouldn't reveal much about college AIDS.

Testing students at a California university, they say, tells you little about the University of Alabama. I don't think you can generalize," said Rutgers University Health Education Director Fern Goodhart.

Health officials warn that college students, because of their general sexual promiscuity, are prime risks to contract AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome), a fatal virus spread through intravenous needles, contaminated blood products and sexual contact with an AIDS carrier.

But the money to test students, Schuch said, "would be better spent on educational purposes. I'm offended that kids are exposed to thousands of hours of violence and sex on television, and we can't get the networks to run a decent condom ad or safe sex spot."

Koop, who announced the plan Jan. 27 at a London conference on AIDS, has yet to choose a university, but wants a 25,000-student urban campus where the mass testing would be part of a 1-day "gala" on AIDS prevention.

Testing would be done anonymously, Koop said, and those taking part would not be told the results. Students who did not wish to participate in the testing would not be required to do so, he added.

While Schuch admires Koop's past anti-AIDS efforts, this one "doesn't make sense."

Testing all students on a single campus "raises a lot of questions," said Goodhart.

She is "troubled by questions of privacy that could arise from such testing and the public ramifications of testing one school."

For instance, fears that the chosen school might have students with AIDS could drive some students to transfer and others not to apply there, Goodhart said. The college could also have trouble getting insurance.

Few students, added Goodhart, would be willing to participate in a testing program. "I'm not sure you gain as much as you lose."

UNCW Adopts Expanded AIDS Policy

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has adopted an expanded policy dealing with AIDS in the university community. The eight-page document essentially elaborates on the policy that was established in spring 1986 for the 16-campus UNC system.

In addition to advocating education about AIDS, the UNC system policy states that "Students and employees of the University who may become infected with the AIDS virus will not be excluded from enrollment or employment, or restricted in their access to University services or facilities, unless medically-based judgments in individual cases establish that exclusion or restriction is necessary to the welfare of the individual or of other members of the University community."

Dr. Richard Mullendore, associate vice chancellor for Student Affairs and chairman of the UNCW Chancellor's Standing Advisory Committee Regarding AIDS, announced Monday (Feb. 8) that Chancellor William H. Wagoner had signed the committee's report on Feb. 1, thereby adopting the document.

Wagoner had previously consulted with the UNCW Board of Trustees regarding the expanded policy. The UNCW statement elaborates of the need for a regular program of education for students, faculty and staff, which is done through distribution of brochures, special activities sponsored by the LivWell Alternatives Center, and other educational programs.

It also mandates that the campus community be informed that "known AIDS victims will be permitted to remain enrolled and employed on the basis of case-by-case judgments, using the policy statement below."

Unless there are compelling and medically relevant circumstances reflecting the specific medical condition or specific behaviors of particular AIDS victims, which indicate that the student or employee should not remain enrolled or employed, either for the welfare of the victim or the welfare of the other members of the community, such persons will not be excluded. Thus, students and employees of the University may be in contact with persons who have AIDS or who are infected with the AIDS virus within the University community.

Of particular interest in a campus setting is the question of how to deal with the issue of AIDS victims and shared living quarters. The UNCW policy suggests counseling and discussing the situation with any roommates involved, with the university working with the victim to relocate the victim or the roommate depending on the wishes of those involved.

The policy re-emphasized the necessity for high quality counseling and great sensitivity in dealing with AIDS victims on campus. It also calls for "extreme attention to be paid to protecting the privacy of the victim."

Storyteller will appear Thursday

Steven Henegar, storyteller and visiting artist at Cape Fear Community College, will tell "Truth and Lies: Stories For Adults And Families" in a free concert on Thursday, March 3rd. The 7:30 pm telling will be in the Cape Fear Community College Auditorium with parking available in the college lots on Water Street.

Henegar grew up in a family that told stories, some more truthful than others. He shares tales "Old as the hills, new as the grass; soft as the moss; hard as rocks!" Henegar draws his tales from experience, family, tradition, and fancy: truth and lies for all occasions.

Henegar trained in acting and directing and worked in theatre for ten years, but he returned to story telling seven years ago. During that time, he has told stories and conducted workshops in schools, libraries, meetings, folk and storytelling festivals, and in concert. His work often follows the path of a wandering storyteller, though he has participated in the cultural enrichment program for the Washington State Arts Commission and The Mountain Arts Program in Western North Carolina, as well as his current work with the N.C. Visiting Artist Program.

Henegar is completing work on his M.A. in Folklore at UNC-Chapel Hill, with particular interest in family stories and personal experience tales. He draws stories from the various places he has lived, from his family's oral history, and from traditional tales in a number of cultures. He tells original tales as well, and passes on the stories of people that he meets. Henegar enjoys listening to stories as much as telling them.

On Stage...

by Tamara Drew

There's lots and lots of high-energy music planned for the area in the next few weeks, and it sounds like there will be a lot of excitement in the air!

Three Hits is hot stuff....

Lots of hot rock and roll will be floating through the air when Three Hits, a multi-talented band from Cary, makes a return appearance at Front Street News. The band, fronted by mesmerizing lead vocalist Sheila Valentine, has recently had material included on an upcoming Epic Records compilation album, "Unsigned Vol. II." An accompanying video was shown on MTV's "120 Minutes" and will be shown again on Night Flight in March.

I was truly delighted when I happened to wander into Front Street during the band's December appearance, and definitely must label this gig a MUST CHECK OUT. The band is tight, the material is hot, and Valentine's vocal ability has won my interest for a long time to come.

Daniels, currently on the road promoting his Powder Keg LP, says that he is looking forward to playing his home stompin' grounds and has a surprise in store for the crowd - the band will perform a number of the cuts that will be featured on the next (as yet untitled) LP.

Charlie Daniels

Daniels has long been a favorite of country, rock, and other fans, since his music crosses over all of the genres and remains uniquely his. The Leland native, whom I last heard live at his annual Volunteer Jam, is sure to give local music fans something to remember for a long time.

Opening the show will be Sawyer Brown, the high-energy country rock band that surged to the forefront of the national music scene when they won $100,000 on Star Search in 1984. The group signed with Capitol Records and met immediate success with their first singles, "Leona" and "Step That Step." In 1985, they won the prestigious Country Music Association's Horizon Award and were named Best New Country Vocal Group by both Billboard and Cashbox.

The band is currently on the road promoting their latest album, Somewhere In The Night.

Tickets for the concert are on sale for $11.50 and $13.50 at Camelot Music, Boseman's Sporting Goods, Wednesday's Deli, School Kids Records, and the campus Athletic Department.

Coming up- Charlie Daniels Band and Sawyer Brown in concert at Trask

Next weekend promises some hot jammin' when hometown favorite Charlie Daniels and his band blow into town to play their Saturday (March 5th) concert at Trask Coliseum.

The University Foundation Visiting Distinguished Professor Program will offer a master creative writing class in fiction to be taught Spring 1989 semester at UNC-Wilmington. The course will be taught by Novelist Charles Johnson, the recipient of a 1989 Guggenheim Fellowship, who has written two novels Faith and the Good Thing and Oxherding Tale. The Sorcerer's Apprentice, a short story collection and Being and Face: Black Writing Since 1970, a collection of critical essays. Charles Johnson is Fiction Editor of the Seattle Review. The course is open to any writer of fiction. Manuscripts will be screened by Charles Johnson. Submit prose manuscripts (a maximum of fifteen pages) to:

Charles Fort, Director
Creative Writing Program
UNC-W
Wilmington, N.C. 28403
Deadline: June 1, 1988.
Students will be notified of their acceptance into Charles Johnson's fiction class by October 1, 1988. For information call: Prof. Fort, UNC-W, 395-3329.

University Short Story Awards (Jessie Rehder)

On separate cover sheet only, list the student's name, address, phone, and the title of the short story. The competition is limited to one short story, double-spaced and typed, with a minimum of ten pages.

Prizes are $50 for first place, $30 for second place, and $20 for third place.

Submit to: Professor Fort's Mailbox in the English Dept., Morton Hall/Deadline: Friday, April 15, 5:00 p.m.

The members of the Cape Fear Musician's Association and other local players will host an open jam session starting at 3pm this Sunday at Front Street News downtown.

The jam session will be held in conjunction with this weekend's visit by the crew of the HMS Bristol. Area musicians are hoping that there will be at least a few players among the crew of over 500 sailors, and planned the jam so that musical interaction between them would be possible.

Local players are invited to bring their axes down to the jam, which is free.

TAKE LEADERSHIP

If you have the spirit, the ability, the desire to lead, we can help you develop it. To give you the confidence, pride, respect and teamwork that go with leadership.

You'll train in an interesting skill, serve one weekend a month (usually), two weeks annual training, and earn over $1,225 a year to start.

Bill McCarty

Comedians appear in concert tonight

The University Program Board Concerts Committee presents Bill McCarty and Barry Sobel in a comedy show at 8 p.m., Thursday, Feb. 25, in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of UNC-W. Admission is $2 with UNC-W ID and $4 for the general public.

McCarty has appeared on USA Cable Television's "Night Flight" sixth anniversary specials as the host and featured performer, and he has also featured on MTV's "Funny Papers" comedy special. He performs comedy on the Playboy Channel, as well as providing the live studio audience warmup for "Saturday Night Live" and "Comedy Tonight."

Sobel stars in the HBO presentation/Eddie Murphy production of "Uptown Comedy Express." He also appears in the upcoming Columbia feature film "Punchline" with Tom Hanks and Sally Field. Sobel is a regular guest on the "Tonight Show," appears on NBC-TV's "It's Showtime at The Apollo," and will be appearing this fall on Fox Television's "21 Jump Street."

On Books:

Stephen King, Knocking at Your Door

by Scott Urban

Here's a recipe for a bestseller: take a dash of SPOON RIVER ANTHOLOGY, stir in a little LONG NIGHT'S JOURNEY INTO DAY and mix with a large portion INVASION OF THE BODY SNATCHERS. Stir well, and you'll come up with something close to Stephen King's new novel, THE TOMMYKNOCKERS ($19.95, available at Walden Books on Oleander Drive in Wilmington).

This is King's first venture into book-length science-fiction (unless one calls such works as The Stand or Firestarter tangential science-fiction). But King has lost none of his power to build a suspenseful mood or to churn out nasty details about dying. (At 500-plus pages, however, the novel is too wordy. It would have benefited from some serious editing, particularly in the middle section fleshing out the town of Havenand and its inhabitants.)

The novel opens with Roberta "Bobbi" Anderson, a writer of successful westerns, stumbling over a metal protrusion in the woods behind her isolated Maine home. Curious, she begins to dig around the metallic outcropping. The novel's second major character also stumbles onto the scene of the action — James "Gard" Gardner. Gardner is an alcoholic poet who goes off the deep end at a post-poetry-reading party and nearly winds up drowning himself. He seeks refuge from his one-time lover and only remaining friend, Bobbi. Together, the two begin excavating the curious object in the woods — and it becomes rapidly apparent that what they've found is a mellenia-old alien spacecraft.

The central third of the book puts Bobbi and Gard in the background while King describes what is simultaneously happening to the residents of nearby Haven. They begin to develop telepathic abilities, they start to lose their teeth, their flesh becomes transparent, and they can make things like boxes that will transport you to another world or beams that send you into another dimension. They are, in a word, "Becoming."

The rest of the novel revolves around Gard's struggles against the transformed townsmen and his own debilitating alcoholism. This final third achieves a tension and compulsion-to-read that sags in the central portion. What is the nature of the Tommyknockers, and what is their goal? Can Gardner stop their plans? Will anyone in the outside world discover what is going on before it's too late?

As with all of King's books, there are multiple sub-plots and concerns running through the book. The chief of these involves Man and his relation to technology (particularly nuclear power). King also looks at sibling rivalry, the nature of friendship, and the ultimate question of Death.

Bobbi and Gard are intriguing, believable characters. Gardner is an ambivalent protagonist at best: he realizes his own sickness, but cannot heal himself; he rejects our world, but not himself with the intruders. He is always a man apart, and by the novel's end, he undergoes the ultimate separation from our world. King spends a lot of time trying to make Haven come alive in our eyes, but for all of his efforts, I can still more clearly picture Derry (the setting of King's IT, also prominently featured in this book).

TOMMYKNOCKERS is a good adventure tale and an affectionate nod-of-the-head to the "Space Invader" films of the 1950's. The novel's wordiness and sometimes convoluted character rationalizations make it take a second or third place ranking in King's overall oeuvre, however. It's worth noting that this book incorporates and somewhat explains an earlier, mystifying King tale, "The Revelations of Becca Paulson," originally published in Rolling Stone magazine.

Film competition announced

The Streisand Center, in cooperation with the West Valley Kehillah, California, invites applications for its Sixth Annual Awards for Student Film Makers. The Awards comprise a $1,000 prize for the best completed student film on a Jewish theme and a $1,000 prize for the best student film proposal on a Jewish theme.

Students in either category must furnish proof of college enrollment in a currently accredited University program and must provide a resume (in triplicate) together with references. Guidelines and application can be obtained by writing to the Streisand Film Awards, c/o the Streisand Center, 900 Hilgard Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90024.

The West Valley Kehillah is also pleased to invite applications for the 2nd Annual Recognition Awards. These awards for the best film by an independent film maker on a Jewish theme comprise a guaranteed screening of the winning film(s) in the forthcoming Streisand Center and West Valley Kehillah seasons and the presentation of an Awards certificate at a public ceremony to be held in January 1989.

The Recognition Awards are open to all independent film makers in the United States, Canada, the U.K. and Israel.

For further information on the Recognition Awards please contact the West Valley Kehillah at 22622 Vanowine St., Canoga Park, CA 91307 (818) 346-5962 & (818) 346-8940.

The Streisand Center was established in 1981 with an endowment from Arbra Streisand. Its aim is to illum. the Jewish arts by highlighting the best in Jewish creativity.

The West Valley Kehillah, California, is a communal organization established to strengthen the vitality and bonds within the larger Jewish community.

Artists To Attend Gallery Open House

Four artists of national and international acclaim will be on hand March 12, 1988 at Fidler's Gallery at The Cotton Exchange from noon-3:00 p.m. for an open house in honor of Fidler's Gallery's tenth anniversary.

The slate of "Who's Who in American Art" will include Sallie Middleton, Alan Cheek, Ward Nichols and Ray Ellis.

Sallie Middleton is a nationally acclaimed artist from Asheville, North Carolina. She is acknowledged as one of the leading wildlife artists in the country. She began her study of art and wildlife as a child in the mountains of Western North Carolina. Her watercolors are noted for meticulous, lifelike detail. Her reputation as a conservationist has made her the recipient of wounded or motherless birds and animals which she has nursed back to health. She gets to know the wild creatures and her paintings of them capture the personality of individual creatures, not just a representative of a species.

Alan Cheek, mostly a self-taught painter, was born in Graham North Carolina. After receiving a Bachelor of Fine Arts from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, he continued his personal study of art at Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts for three years. He currently has a studio in Beaufort, North Carolina where he now paints mostly on wood panels in an acrylic medium. In a detailed, "photo-realist" style, he paints "moments," usually under uncommon lighting, in an effort to offer visual stimulation of an environment to his viewer. One almost feels drawn into his paintings because of their vivid and graphic lifelike qualities. Alan Cheek's most notable achievements have been Best-in-Show 1977 at Martha's Vineyard All Island Art Competition; Best-in-Show 1981 North Carolina State Fair; Finalist 1982 Bernhardt Exchange Awards, and in photography, Finalist Kodak is an interpretive realist who, through clarity of detail, transforms the commonplace into a work of art. He is represented in numerous private and public collections most recently added the Gutenberg Museum of Mainz, West Germany to his growing list. His accomplishments have been acknowledged in "Who's Who in American Art," "The International Directory of the Arts" of Cambridge, England, the Italian "Accademia Italia Annual" and "La Revue Moderne" of Paris, France and many other prestigious publications here and abroad. His one-man shows have been presented in seventy-four galleries in twenty-one states, along with twenty-six National and International group exhibits.

Ray Ellis has lived in Savannah and on Hilton Head Island since 1974. He was born in Philadelphia and attended the famed Philadelphia Museum School of Art. He is widely recognized for the originality of his watercolors of seascapes, landscapes, marshlands, hunting scenes, horses and intriguing old houses. The watercolors of Ray G. Ellis, by Twin City Press was his first published book. He collaborated with Walter Cronkite in South by Southeast and North by Northeast. Cronkite says the reason for these books is Ray Ellis' nautically. Historic Savannah Foundation recently published a book of thirty-two of his watercolors entitled "Behind Those Garden Walls." His work hangs in the permanent collections of the Farnsworth Museum of Art in Maine, the Morris Museum of arts and sciences in New Jersey, and in the Telfair Academy Museum of Georgia. He has received the Medal of Honor of the National Arts Club, the Winsor and New Medal, and the Gold Medal of Honor of the Hudson Valley Art Association.

Sallie Middleton, Alan Cheek, Ward Nichols and Ray Ellis will bring samples of their great talents to Wilmington when they come to Fidler's Gallery's tenth anniversary on March 12. Come meet the artists!

"1001 Black Inventions" Presented On Campus

Allise Ellis
Staff Writer

The overhead lights dimmed as people shuffled in and were seated at small candlelit tables lined with refreshments. Buzzing conversations quieted as a tall black man came on stage and introduced Pin Points Theatre in "1001 Black Inventions".

The theatre group from Washington, D.C., was invited to UNCW to perform Feb. 23 in Room 100 of the University Union, by the University Program Board.

The theatre group combined humor and drama to show the black man's innovative discoveries and accomplishments in society.

"I want blacks to be known for their intellectual contributions instead of more stereotypical contributions, such as athletics," said "1001 Black Inventions" playwright Ersky Freeman.

Pin Points consumed the bare stage as a 4-part human machine which acted out various inventions, from a fire extinguisher to a toaster. The human machine disbanded and imitated a Motown group singing, "these things were made by a black man."

The group went on to do 5 skits, starting with Dr. Daniel Hale Williams. Williams was portrayed as the first man to perform open-heart surgery and to found an integrated hospital.

The next skit is introduced by a woman who shares the stage with a basketball player, a singer, and a drunk. She states, "We (blacks) are constantly being portrayed as athletes, entertainers, and delinquents. Who put shoes on your feet? A black man..."

The man was Jan Ernest Matzinger, who is humorously shown as a poor drunk who was not allowed to share in the profits of his invention. Matzinger created a machine which was able to stretch leather and sew it to the sole, enabling mass production of shoes.

George Washington Carver's achievements were then shown through prosecutors who charge him with being a witch, because they could not believe so many accomplishments could be done by just one man. Carver is credited with saving the southern economy through his work with soil, peanuts, and potatoes.

The 3 male members of Pin Points then came on stage in dresses to commemorate the achievements of black women, which ranged from advanced technological discoveries to motherhood.

The final man honored was Benjamin Banneker who created America's first clock. This skit showed Banneker's strong love for Anola, a slave, who was never freed and allowed to be with him. This powerful portrayal showed man's deep need to learn is only matched by his need to love.

The Second Act, entitled, "The Twilight Zone" displayed an ordinary family's struggle to survive without the presence of inventions by black men.

Freeman founded Pin Points in 1975 and describes the group as an "educational theatre company" which wants the audience to learn something from their productions.

"People retain more through humor," said Logan Johnson, a member of the cast, which is the basis of Pin Points ideology. The 5 member cast of Pin Points includes: Ersky Freeman, Logan Johnson, Dietra Kelsey, Roderick Garr, and Melody Givens.

The award winning troupe has been busy throughout Black History Month and will appear next in Savannah, Georgia. Freeman's next play is tentatively titled, "The White and Black History," which discusses the white man's contributions to black history.

Karen Jenkins, vice president of University Program Board, and Ronald Hamm, Minority Arts chairperson, scheduled "1001 Black Inventions" and were pleased with the large community and University attendance. UPB will be sponsoring a visit from comedian Barry Sobel, Feb. 25 at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

Non-Trad Students

By Theresa Mallon
Staff Writer

A study conducted in association with the office of the Dean of Student Affairs, in the Fall of 1986, reported that 25% of the collective student body at UNCW, 1638 people, is made up of a diverse group of students aged 23 and older. To meet the growing needs of this population, an organization has been set up to help non-traditional students adjust to the many new roles they take on when returning to, or beginning university life.

The primary goals of this organization, which began as a support group out of the Student Development Center, are educational as well as social. Mary Ann Maimone, from the office of the Dean of Student Affairs, said that although the original support group "did help to meet certain needs, there are many more" that need to be addressed.

The group meets every Thursday night from 7:30-8:30 p.m. in room 210 of the University Development Center at ----- Union. The scheduled weekly speakers are focused on the special needs of the non-traditional student. These guest speakers as well as events are especially designed to help alleviate some of the alienation that the non-traditional student often encounters.

Some of these upcoming events are as follows: Feb. 25, A.C.P.A. will answer questions about the new laws that accompany filing this year's tax returns, however no returns will be signed; March 17th a pizza dinner for non-trads and their families will be held in the University Union, and on March 24th, the Female Rotary Club, "Zonta", will be hosting a dinner for female non-trads (bysitting fees will be provided for by "Zonta").

If you are a non-traditional student and have any questions, comments or ideas for events the organization could sponsor, please contact Mary Ann Maimone or Corina Wolff in the office of the Dean of Student Affairs at 395-3119, or Amy Byrne in the Student Development Center at -----

Spring Break Skin Cancer Warnings

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

With Spring Break just around the corner, most people are getting ready to hit the beaches of Florida or some other tropical paradise for that golden tan, if an artificial one from the tanning bed is not already there.

This year be prepared for the sun's affects and some of the dangers it can hold. Most people are unaware of the harm the sun is doing their skin, but there are ways of reducing the bad side affects.

According to Wilmington dermatologist Michael Donahue, as well as most doctors, "The sun is the cause of most of the wrinkles we get in old age and the skin cancers and precancers."

Everyone has heard the predictions of disaster for earth if people keep destroying the ozone layer which blocks out many of the harmful ultraviolet rays. Donahue reported that as far as skin is concerned many of the problems associated with ozone destruction are here; "Back in the 60s the worst occurrence of skin cancers was 1 in 1000; now it is 1 in 100 each year."

Skin cancer is the most common form of human cancer as well as the most curable, if it is discovered early enough. 90% of all skin cancer is found on areas which get the most exposure. The face, tips of the ears, hand and forearms. Yet, since sun bathing has become so popular over the years other areas have become common as well such as shoulders, backs, and lower legs on women.

It is hard to tell if cancer is developing without a physician's diagnosis, but there are key signs for each of the three types.

Basal cell carcinoma is the most common. Dr. Donahue says the first sign of this type is a little flesh-colored bump, usually on the face, which gradually grows.

He reported that squamous cell carcinoma is usually marked by a rough scaly spot which gradually gets worse.

The worst and most dangerous is malignant melanoma. This type is the hardest to spot, but it is usually a dark spot or mole which grows abnormally.

Each person should know their skin and what kind of protection is necessary for them. There are many tanning products with SPF (sun protection factors) assigned to each. The SPF level should be chosen according to skin type. 2-4 is the minimal protection for those with medium to heavy pigmentation. 15 or greater is the ultra protection for people with very fair skin.

"Those with fair skin that tend to burn easily are at the greatest risk for skin cancer, especially the melanoma," said Dr. Donahue. Unless a person has very heavy pigmentation, the lotions with 6-15 SPF should be used at all times, more or less according to length of time and part of the day in the sun. The higher numbers should be used on overly exposed areas such as lips and nose for all people. All sunning products used should contain at least 5% PABA and should be applied 30 minutes before exposure.

Aside from heeding skin type, it is necessary to know the strength of the rays. Burning can occur even on a cloudy day, and the sun's rays can reach down into 3 feet of water. It is also best to avoid the midday sun which is the strongest between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. And for skiers, there is less atmosphere in those higher elevations to filter out the ultraviolet rays which the snow reflects, so protect on sunny days as well.

If sunburn does occur, there are some measures to be taken for relief. The first thing to do is take 2 aspirin and a long cool shower. After this repeat aspirin and shower 4 hours later. Other sources of relief are: cool vinegar and water compresses, antihistamine or steroid creams to relieve itching and burning (Cortaid, Chlor-Triumein, Dimetane, Benadryl). Avoid deodorant soap because they dry the skin (try Dove, Carrola, Tono, or Camay), and stay out of the sun for at least 2 or 3 hours.

The days of fun in the sun do not need to be topped, but it is a good idea to protect the skin from the harmful effects the sun can have. Make Spring Break a great time in the sun and at the same time use some common sense when out in it because after all you only live once and the sun can be young forever.

AMA President Discusses AIDS on UNCW Campus

By Celeste Bulley
Editor-in-Chief

Dr. William S. Hotchkiss, president of the American Medical Association, appeared on the UNCW campus Feb. 17 to give his only public lecture in a visit to the Wilmington area.

Hotchkiss discussed topics ranging from the AIDS epidemic to the state of nursing and medical programs in the United States with an audience of about 100 local health officials and concerned university and community members.

Hotchkiss outlined several topics such as the concerns of animal research, the rise in adolescent mortality rates and the AMA's continuing battle to stop tobacco advertising as national health issues, although he discussed AIDS concerns most thoroughly. "AIDS is far and away the most serious epidemic we've encountered," said Hotchkiss. "It has a 100% mortality rate. He cited adolescent prostitution as contributing to the rapid spread of AIDS, especially in areas such as New York, Miami, Houston and Los Angeles where the incidence of AIDS infection is at least 50% in prostitutes.

Hotchkiss explained in detail the progression of AIDS and the testing at each stage, beginning with the testing for the presence of antibodies in the blood.

"There is no representative group of people who test positive for the AIDS virus," Hotchkiss said, "although roughly 85% (of those testing positive) are homosexual or bisexual males...only approximately 7 or 8% are women."

He clarified that only 50% of those who test positive will get the symptoms which indicate progression, or clinical AIDS, the second stage of the disease. "54,000 cases (of clinical AIDS) have been diagnosed," said Hotchkiss.

The concern that Hotchkiss presented in his lecture on the far testing for AIDS was echoed by the audience. In response to a question about the U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop's warning to test all students of a major American university for the AIDS virus, Hotchkiss clarified Koop's plan as "testing blindly" and acknowledged that "some people would be hard to convince that it would be a blind test and that all names would be obliterated."

"We do need a large-bodied test of the general population to not only find out what percentages are infected now, but to follow this on a progressive basis," said Hotchkiss.

Hotchkiss instead favored the testing of the military, not only because of the diversity of backgrounds represented by the armed forces, but also because the military has "customarily been used as a blood bank."

Hotchkiss also supported the testing of blood and organ donors for AIDS, as well as prisoners, patients of drug and venereal disease treatment centers, invasive surgery patients of hospitals in high risk areas, prostitutes, and immigrants who, as he explained, "are required by federal law to undergo tests for infectious diseases."

Hotchkiss left some time for questions from the audience after his lecture. Questions covered topics such as the overcrowding in medical schools, on which Hotchkiss commented, "American medical schools are turning out more doctors than the US can handle, in contrast to the acute nursing shortage."

He seemed not to think, however, that the quality of medical education in America was declining. "I personally think the quality of professional education in both nursing and medicine is the best in the world," said Hotchkiss.

Hotchkiss had come to UNCW to lecture by invitation of the School of Nursing while on a special trip to Wilmington. The New Hanover-Pender County Medical Auxiliary sponsored Hotchkiss' trip to the area.

Prospective Students To Visit UNCW

Approximately 1,000 prospective students, parents, and high school counselors are expected to attend The University of North Carolina at Wilmington's annual visitation day from 1 - 4 p.m., Saturday, Feb. 27, in Trask Coliseum.

The 1988 visitation day is coordinated by the Admissions Office.

Those who attend will have the opportunity to tour the campus and residence halls; meet enrolled students, faculty members and administrators; discuss admissions, financial aid, and housing; and attend sessions on parental and student concerns. They will also learn about student activities and organizations.

As of Feb. 6th 4,152 freshmen applications and 784 transfer student applications have been received, and 1,898 freshmen and 206 transfer students have been admitted. The applications represent a 30 percent increase over last year. These applications are expected to fill 1,300 freshmen positions and approximately 350-400 transfer student positions.

Sickle Cell Anemia Still Persists

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

With Black History Month ending, it seems important to examine at least one of the problems common to the black population. One of these problems is a disease called Sickle Cell Anemia, which affects blacks and those of Greek and Italian descent.

Sickle Cell is an inherited deficiency in the hemoglobin of red blood cells which developed long ago in areas where malaria was prevalent as a protection for those people.

A person with Sickle Cell trait or a Sickle Cell disease inherited it from one or both parents. It is neither contagious nor contractable in any way other than through heredity. Sickle Cell is not curable; a person will carry it all their life.

Sickle Cell disease it causes the red blood cells to be pale because they contain less amounts of hemoglobin (red) than the normal ones. Children born with these diseases may be anemic, have bone and joint pains, jaundice (yellow skin and eyes) and slow growth and development. These symptoms may persist throughout their life, yet they can be controlled.

In order to have a Sickle Cell disease both parents of a child must be a carrier of the trait or have a Sickle Cell disease. If someone is only a carrier they will not be sick, and may never know they have the disease traits. If both parents happen to be carriers there is a 25% chance of a child having normal hemoglobin, 50% chance of children with the trait and a 25% chance each child will have a Sickle Cell disease.

One in every 12 blacks carry the Sickle Cell trait, so it is important that they be tested to find out if offspring have a chance of being affected. A Sickle Cell blood test can be performed at any health center. It is vital to get the right education and counseling if one is a carrier. To find out more, consult the Student Health and Wellness Center or the area health department.

Women's Self-Discovery Seminar Scheduled

A lot of emphasis is placed on personal image lately but most of it centers on outward appearance only. "Self-Discovery" is a refreshing new way for a woman to find what her image is, and can become, from the inside out. A course in "Self-Discovery" will be offered at the YWCA, 2815 S. College Road, on Tuesdays, March 8 through April 4, from 7:00-9:00 p.m.

During this five week program participants will learn the skills needed to build self-esteem, develop and project self-confidence, set achievable goals, manage time efficiently, and update their wardrobe and make-up. The instructor, Susan M. Baxley, is an Image Consultant trained through the JoAnne Wallace Institute, who has recently moved to this area.

A special introductory offer of $30 for YWCA members and $40 for non-members will be charged. There is also an $11.00 workbook with this course. Spaces are limited so pre-registration is required.

For more information or to pre-register come by the YWCA at 2815 S. College Road or call 799-6820.

Funds For Undergrad. Research Available

The Research Committee has eight Undergraduate Research Fellowships available for the 1988-89 academic year. These fellowships comprise a tuition waiver of $410.00 for the academic year. The fellowships, intended to stimulate original research among undergraduate students, are open to any rising junior or senior who has completed at least one semester at UNCW. The proposed research projects may be in any academic area, and should be completed by the end of the academic year. Each student must have a faculty sponsor who serves as an advisor and assists in selecting a worthwhile project suitable to the student's abilities and the timing of the awards. The project idea may originate with the student or faculty, but must be developed to a substantial degree by the student. Course credit may be arranged through a DIS or Honors Program, but if no credit is obtained, the proposal must specify the means of evaluation by the faculty sponsor. One copy of the final written report must be submitted to the Research Committee by the last class day of the Spring 1989 semester.

The application must include a student information sheet, 13 copies of the proposal, a statement from the department chairman indicating the availability of departmental resources for the project, two faculty evaluations of the student's potential, and a copy of the student's transcript. Information packets and application forms are available from the Secretary of the Earth Sciences Department (FR 242).

The candidates must file their applications with their respective department chairmen no later than March 30, 1988. We request that department chairmen review the completed application, seal it in an envelope, and have the candidate deliver it to the Earth Sciences Secretary (FR 242) by 5:00 p.m., April 1, 1988. Each candidate must register with the Earth Sciences Secretary by April 1 for an interview on the evening of April 13 or 14. Each faculty sponsor should be present during the interview.

Questions regarding this competition should be directed to Richard A. Laws, Research Committee Chairman, or any member of the committee.

Being a Marine Corps Officer can open the door to opportunities you may have thought were beyond your reach. It helped Marine Officer Charles Bolden become a NASA astronaut. And if you're willing to make the commitment, it could help you also. You can get started while you're in college with our Platoon Leaders Class program. You could take advantage of getting:

- $100 a month while in school
- Freshmen and Sophomores train during two six-week summer sessions each paying more than $1200
- Juniors train in one ten-week summer session and earn more than $2100
- Free civilian flying lessons
- A starting salary of more than $18,000
- Immediately upon graduation you could become a Marine Officer. It's your choice.

Grapes, Keys and Loss

There is a quote from Rabbit Redux by John Updike, after a young woman is lost to the three men who share her. "Tell him," says one, "there's a ton of C-1 in the world."

A college party, another young man, rebuked by a different young woman. An onlooker, his friend, comforts him. "Don't worry," he says, "there's more p---y on the south."

It seems that Aesop's fable of the fox and the sour grapes, written around 550 BC, is being kept alive by rejected suitors everywhere. I can't have it you say? Oh well then, I didn't really want it anyway, and after all, they're a dime a dozen, right?

I have to wonder if men really believe women are this easily replaceable, or if they just attempt to convince one another (and themselves) of this to ease the pain of not having the one they want.

A female friend of mine has this theory about how men value individual women. It seems, she speculates, that there exists an analogy between keys and locks, women and men. Even the sexual symbolism is there.

While women believe that it is more difficult to find the right key to fit a lock, and that if you find a good fit you should stick with it, men operate on the premise that they have master keys that can fit an infinite number of locks fairly well, and that spare keys are a novel idea.

So it seems, that women are socialized to value a good fit, while men devalue the quality, and value the presence, of a fit. Men learn quite young to take failure and rejection and to internalize it. They try to distance themselves from the emotional side of loss. "Don't get mad," (or sad) they are told, "get even." The message is clear; go out there and succeed, find another fit. For women it is much more acceptable to mourn the loss of an individual in a relationship, to take time out to talk about it, to heal.

When a former boyfriend and I broke up, he began seeing someone else almost immediately, something that both hurt and puzzled me (you had to see her). After all, I had spent that time introspectively examining myself and the relationship, while friends comforted me, and even suggested reconciliation. Didn't I mean something special to him? Was I that easy to replace? At the time I took this in a very personal way, and now I think that I have a different perspective on it. The genders have, it appears, a different way of dealing with loss, and neither way is necessarily better or worse than the other.

While I was hearing, "We'll figure out a way to get him back," he was hearing, "There's more p---y on the way," and in a strange way, we were both hearing the same thing about the nature of relationships and loss. There is always hope.

There was a time many years ago when an automobile was considered "safe". Cars traveled at a maximum speed of about 40mph and were extremely sturdy. Wrecks rarely caused fatalities, and the public was impressed.

With time came technology, and cars became much more economical. Gas mileage became very important, and to get that better mileage the weight of cars had to be dropped, which made the car more easily destructible. Cars also became faster, which made these lightweight econo-boxes even less likely to survive wrecks of any sort. I had a friend who told me his Camaro into a well-rounded Oak that didn't get out of the way quick enough for him. The tree looked much better than my friend did and he looked a lot better than the Camaro.

As a result of these lighter faster automobiles, traffic fatalities have become an everyday occurrence. Every Labor Day the news media keeps a running tab of how many people die on that weekend alone.

This may seem trivial, but consider how fast most of these people who died are traveling (probably between 30 and 70mph).

In last weeks Daytona 500, Richard Petty wrecked as he rounded turn three, and survived. No big deal? Well consider the fact that he was traveling at about 190 mph, flipped at least eight times, and was hit by an oncoming car as he stopped flipping. That car was traveling at about 120mph, and was trying to slow down to avoid him.

Not only did Petty survive the wreck with a mere broken ankle, but he raced again Sunday in the Richmond 400.

To people who keep up with the NASCAR circuit this wreck is not too unlike the ones that happen in every race, and some people even watch the race to see the wrecks. Of all the sports I've seen thus far the car circuit does have a pretty good survival rate, at least as good as the survival rate of boxers in the ring, but that's a different story.

Petty survived his wreck at the result of two factors; his mind and his car.

His mind saved him in the respect that he has had wrecks before, and knew how to handle his car when he stepped into it.

His car saved him in several ways. First, he had his seatbelt on. This is not an ordinary seatbelt, and to equate his seatbelt with that of an ordinary car is not a ridiculous idea when you consider that he is traveling four to five times as fast as the general public does. In this state the public is required to wear seatbelts anyway, so this fact is a positive for seatbelt backers.

The second aspect of Petty's car that was as important to his survival as his seatbelt would be his roll cage. The car was smashed completely apart except for Petty's driving compartment. (I saw a wrecker pick up the gas tank or air car 200-300 yards away from where they picked up Petty).

A roll cage is something that I'm sure the public would think ridiculous, but consider how many lives have been lost when a car has flipped over causing the roof to cave in and crushing the driver within.

My first car was a '73 Dodge purchased from the Highway Patrol. It had 440 cubic inches of solid power under the hood, a solid-weld body and a reinforced roof to prevent it from being crushed. The car cost me $1700, and I sold it for $1000 a year later. It didn't look that great, but it was a good car and in it I felt extremely safe.

Now I drive a little sports car with no reinforced roof and very little between me and whatever I might hit, or might hit me. I'm not complaining about the car, but let's face it, I wouldn't stand a snowball's chance in hell of surviving any kind of head on collision with anything less than a mad doberman (I did survive that).

If the American public would sacrifice a bit of their good taste in cars, and the makers of those cars would offer the option at a reasonable price, I wonder how well roll cages would go over. Don't laugh yet, because Japan is doing a great job with their new Suzuki Samurais, and I don't think that bar running across the back is used to hang your clothes on.

"Super Tuesday"

Who Wants To Get Involved

"Super Tuesday" is right around the corner, and we have to choose which candidate deserves a chance to run for the highest office in the land. Why us? What did we do to deserve that?

In the past few years, we have seen a wide variety of characters wear. We may not have seen, or we have Pat Robertson! I am amazed at how well his campaign has been doing. What a concept, an ex-TV evangelist doing well in his bid for the presidency. What's this nation coming to?

Robertson hates when he is referred to as an ex-TV evangelist; he should use it to his advantage. He could brag that he has never been involved in a sex scandal as most TV evangelists have been. Robertson claims to have turned away a hurricane. If he has enough hot air to turn away a hurricane, then he has become quite a politician. Imagine the money this country can save with him as President. We wouldn't need a defense; he could ward off the enemy. Maybe he could cure AIDS, except he sees it as a moral issue instead of a medical issue I've always learned that ignorant, uneducated people don't vote, so I don't think we have to worry about a President Robertson.

Jack Kemp is a former NFL quarterback who wants to be President. What's wrong with a quarterback for President? I would think that he should have a lock on the job vote. (Do jocks vote?) If a man can run an offense, he can run a country, damnit! His son is a back-up quarterback in the NFL. Maybe if he was a starter, his campaign would be doing better. Who wants a President who's son is a bench-warmer?

George Bush has had his ups and downs in his campaign. Whoever put the wimp label on him must be rich now. I wonder if their last name is Dole? The wimp sure took it to Rather though. He was like James "Bonecrusher" Smith against Tyson; he stood up to him while back-pedaling the entire time. Bush wasn't knocked out, but what did he prove?

Dole has been doing extremely well at pointing the finger; every candidate is screwed up as far as he is concerned. I read that he is for a Constitutional Amendment to ban abortion. It he isn't smart enough to evade the question and say that it should be left up to each state, then he isn't doing his duty as a politician. Just because he was a war hero and used to be poor, doesn't mean that he should be President.

When Jessie Jackson was in town, he said that the fishermen hurt by the red tide should get training and find a new vocation. Can you imagine a bunch of old fishermen in your classes trying to learn communication theory or calculus? I don't think it will happen. I wouldn't want a reverend for President anyway. It just doesn't sound right. Would he be President Reverend Jackson, or Reverend President Jackson, or Reverend Jackson?

Who's next? How about Paul Simon. I don't think that he has a chance. He'd never find a democrat named Garfunkel who would want to be Vice-President. I couldn't handle Peewee Herman's grandfather giving the state of the Union addresses, and his earlobes are just too gross to be on national TV daily.

Now we get to another exciting fellow, Mike Dukakis. Nobody can find any dirt on him yet, and if the Republicans can't, then there must not be any. The only accusation that I have heard concerning Dukakis is that Simon called him a technocrat. Oooh, what language. "The Duke" looks kind of weird, and he's boring, but he came to our school, and I got to ask him a question. I can't think of a better reason for voting for anyone, and any man that can win the presidency with a name that sounds like a bacterial infection is alright with me.

When it comes down to it, people vote for a candidate that resembles their Uncle, or they vote for the guy with the nicest face or voice. More often than not, people will vote for the front-runner, because nobody wants to vote for a loser. I don't believe that winning the election has anything to do with the person being a winner seeking the presidency. There has been an actor, an astronaut, a quarterback, a television evangelist, a minister, a wimp, a war hero, a guy with a rock-n-roll star's name, and a playboy. Whew, what a list.

There is actually a Governor or two and a few Senators thrown in to make it interesting.

How are we supposed to know who will be the best President? Perhaps deciding who will be the worst is a better way to approach the problem. The press is quite good at finding flaws in a candidate's character, so if they haven't found any yet, then there probably isn't any more to find. Of course only the dull candidates have a chance, or the extremely silly.

Gary Hart went from front runner to a clown over night. Just because he was alleged to have spent the night with a beautiful, young female, he was forced right out of the campaign. (Temporarily.) He became nothing but a punchline for Chester and Lettman. When he entered the race again, he became even a bigger joke. What's wrong with trying to be the most powerful man in the world and getting it on with foxy chicks? I would think that he'd have the male vote all but wrapped up. I thought that maybe the male population would be acting disgusted with his infidelity while their spouses and/or girlfriends were around, but once they got into the voting booth, it would be Hart city. Only time will tell. I think a president with a mistress would do a better job. He would want to impress her.

Americans want a President who is perfect. I have been reading about Socrates this semester, and he would probably come up with a syllogism similar to this: The President must be perfect; no man is perfect; therefore, no man can be president. (Two semesters at UNCW and I think I'm as wise as Socrates.)

As far as I know, God hasn't thrown his hat into the ring, or his crown. (I'm not sure what he'd though. So go out there on Super Tuesday, and try your luck. You can never tell; you might pick a winner.

Try Paying Attention To Inner Self

"Our real journey in life is interior;
It is a matter of growth, deepening,
And an ever greater surrender to
The creative action of love and grace
In our hearts" (Thomas Merton)

We place too much significance on events external to us. Our culture and the way we experience it dictates too much of our values, our image of who we are suppose to be in order to be successful, our sense of what is important. We grow up learning to defer to thinking of others, considering them in their role as adult or authority to be "right" and ourselves "wrong". Think how your experiences of the world around you influences your mood, with that pain is totally ours to determine. Some hurt for a while, deal with the hurt by having it and move on into other relationships. Some feel damaged to severely that they label themselves failures and will not reach out or move on at all. Either way, the choice is ours; it goes on inside us and shapes us one way or another.

We need for the sake of our own growth to try and pay more your hopes and fears, your sense of how you will spend this day.

Merton invites us into a different perspective. The forces that truly shape us, are interior forces — our mind, our feelings, our sense of well being or dis-ease. Events external to us have only the power our internal self gives them. If someone we love breaks up with us, there is inevitable pain at that separation, that loss. What we do attention to what is going on inside us; to let our agenda be set by the questions, the doubts, the yearnings that we discover within. Too much do we hide from this struggle by joining a group that sets our agenda or by losing ourselves in activities busyness and even partying.

Love and grace are at work in you if you would but learn to attend to its voice, a voice heard just as much (if not more) in times when we do not have our act together as in times when life feels good and all seems to be well. The fact is that whether in good times or bad, it is the forces in ourselves that set our agenda for living. We would do ourselves a favor indeciding to listen to ourselves, to try to open our awareness to the "creative action of love and grace in our hearts."

Student Forum

Enraged Student Responds To Column

Dear Editor:

I must speak out... in humiliation for the females of UNCW and in rage against Rick Cairns, Seahawk columnist, (and I use the term loosely).

I refer specifically to Rick's Column of February 11, 1988 "Junk Mail of the T. V. Airwaves." His references to commercials concerning feminine hygiene left me totally flabbergasted!!

Traditionally, Rick's style of using graphic illustrations in his articles is the pits; but even for him, this one is crass in the extreme.

His assault in this column on the female gender is inexcusable and demands a printed retraction and apology to all of the Seahawk's readers. Serious consideration should be given to removing Rick from this respected staff position and assigning him to the menial task of the "poor sap" Seahawk on the route; in other words, a delivery boy.

This intelligent action on the part of the editorial staff of the Seahawk would insure that this college community would never again be subjected to Cairn's unmitigated crudity.

Disgusted,

Wendy Calloway

University Women's Assoc. Scholarship

A new program set up by the University Women's Association last year will be providing a scholarship for a female UNCW student again this year. The scholarship is set up for traditional and non-traditional students.

The scholarship will be awarded to a female applicant who demonstrates financial need, obtains a 3.0 grade point average and is entering into her junior year of college at UNCW.

Last year the first scholarship was awarded to Debra Daughtry an early childhood education major. Daughtry is a non-traditional student who commutes from Jacksonville.

The amount of first scholarship was $300. "The more money we raise the more, the scholarship will be," says Sandra Harkin, an executive board member of the University Women's Association and the Manager of Placement and Experiential Learning in the Career Planning and Placement Center.

The University Women's Association sponsored a game night Feb. 19 to collect further funds for this year's scholarship. Harkin was excited about the additional participation this year, commenting "The publicity was much better this year."

Scholarship applications can be picked up at the Financial Aid Office in Hinton-James and may also be picked up in the Union, room 106, through Sandra Harkin. All applications must be turned in by April 8, 1988.

A committee consisting of women faculty members, administrative staff members and wives of faculty members will be reviewing the applications to award another scholarship for the beginning of the next academic year.

Indian Info.

On Sunday, March 13, 1988, at 2:00 PM, New Hanover County Museum will present "Scattered Feathers: Photographs of Native Americans in North Carolina," an exhibit of contemporary Indian photographs by Roger Manley. At 2:30 PM, following the opening, Stanley Knick, Director of the Native American Resource Center at Pembroke State University, will give a slide/lecture entitled, "Scattered Feathers: Spiritual and Communion Are One."

Are there really Indians in North Carolina? Where do they live? What do they look like? What sorts of things do they do? This collection of photographs seeks the answers to these and other questions about the original inhabitants of what is now known as North Carolina. Photographer and folklorist Manley has put together a unique collection of visions showing the spirit of these native Americans. It is a spirit which says, "We have been here; we are still here; we will always be here."

Dr. Knick, who will give the slide/lecture, he actively studied Native American biology and culture since 1973, and his research has ranged from archaeology to health conditions in modern Indian communities. He holds a Ph.D. in Anthropology from Indiana University in Bloomington, Indiana. He will be available for questions following the lecture. The program is free.

Student Loan Conferences

Borrower conferences will be held on campus for student loan borrowers who will not be returning to UNC-Wilmington after spring semester. Conferences will clarify loan repayment information, including rights and responsibilities. Required paperwork will also be available and can be completed at these conferences.

Three general workshops designed for large group setting will be held as follows:

Tuesday, March 24th in Bryan Auditorium/Morton Hall
1:00 p.m.
2:30 p.m.
4:00 p.m.

Small group exit counseling sessions will be held on a biweekly basis beginning in April. Students unable to attend the March 24th session should make plans to attend one of these sessions. Borrowers should register with the Financial Aid receptionist for one of the following dates between the hours of 3:30 and 5:00 in the Hinton James Building:

April 7, 11, 13, 19, 21, 25, 27

Financial Aid

Workshops 1988-89

Small group sessions on the 1988-89 financial aid process will focus on assisting students with actual completion of the forms. Students may sign up for these sessions by registering with the Financial Aid receptionist. Sessions will be held from 3:30-5:00 on the following dates in the Hinton James Building:

February 25, 29
March 2, 16, 22, 24, 28, 30

Community Classroom

Two years of planning culminates March 26th, 1988, when "The Community Classroom" opens its doors at Kenan Auditorium and Trask Coliseum on the Campus of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. "The Community Classroom," an all-day event geared at increasing the knowledge of area educators about the rich cultural and natural resources available to them, is sponsored by the Educational and Cultural Exchange of the Lower Cape Fear and the Smithsonian Institution.

Educational and cultural organizations from New Hanover, Brunswick, Pender, Duplin, Onslow, Sampson, Balden and Columbus counties comprise the Cultural Exchange of the Lower Cape Fear. The Exchange is Co-chaired by Janet Seapker, Director of New Hanover County Museum, and Fred Boyles, Superintendent of Moore's Creek Battlefield.

Southeastern North Carolina was one of four regions selected from across the country, and the only one in the state, by the Smithsonian Institution's Office of Elementary and Secondary Education to participate in this project.

Forty workshops, thirty exhibits and keynote speaker David Holt will provide educators with innovative ideas for incorporating museums, historic sites, parks and nature centers into school curricula. The program includes:

The Ten: An Introduction to Mary Cassatt's Prints, Gold in the Woods, Snakes Alive, and The Shell Makers, among others.

Teachers may earn one unit renewal credit by attending the event, and doing a four-hour follow-up. Registration, which includes lunch, is $15.00 before MARCH 4TH and $23.00 after that date. New Hanover County teachers will be reimbursed for their registration fee if they register by the March 4th deadline.

This event is made possible in part through the sponsorship of the Educational and Cultural Exchange of the Lower Cape Fear, American Airlines, Carolina Power and Light Company, Wilmington Star News, Federal Paper Board Co., Inc., The Kenan Foundation, The Wright Corporation, WWAY TV-3, Brunswick County Schools, Southern Bell Telephone Company, Smithsonian Magazine and the Smithsonian's Office of Elementary and Secondary Education.

Women's Scholarships

A new program set up by the University Women's Association last year will be providing a scholarship for a female UNCW student each year. The scholarship is set up for traditional and non-traditional students.

The scholarship will be awarded to a female applicant who demonstrates financial need, obtains a 3.0 grade point average and is entering into her junior year of college at UNCW.

Last year the first scholarship was awarded to Debra Daughtry an early childhood education major. Daughtry is a non-traditional student who commutes from Jacksonville.

The amount of first scholarship was $300. "The more money we raise the more, the scholarship will be," says Sandra Harkin, an executive board member of the University Women's Association and the Manager of Placement and Experiential Learning in the Career Planning and Placement Center.

The University Women's Association sponsored a game night Feb. 19 to collect further funds for this year's scholarship. Harkin was excited about the additional participation this year, commenting "The publicity was much better this year."

Scholarship applications can be picked up at the Financial Aid Office in Hinton-James and may also be picked up in the Union, room 106, through Sandra Harkin. All applications must be turned in by April 8, 1988.

A committee consisting of women faculty members, administrative staff members and wives of faculty members will be reviewing the applications to award another scholarship for the beginning of the next academic year.

Discover nature in an exciting learning experience that is fun too, in a new "Adventures in Nature" class for youth ages 10-12 years, sponsored by UNCW's Office of Special Programs. Hands-on projects will include adventures with a hand lens; reptiles and amphibians; trees and how they reproduce; discovering art in nature; and treasures of the beach.

The class will be taught by naturalist Pamela Grubbs in Room 310, Friday Hall, on Saturdays, March 12-April 23 from 9:00-Noon. The $44 fee will be discounted to $39 for enrollment before March 4. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Grant Writing To Be Taught

A special "Grant Writing" class offered by UNCW's Office of Special Programs will examine the do's and don'ts in preparing proposals to government and private groups requesting grant monies.

Dr. John J. Manock, director of research administration at UNCW and a successful proposal writer, will outline the steps in developing proposals. Subjects will include identifying potential sponsors, appropriate language and budgets. Registrants will be actively involved in developing a project and preparing a proposal.

The course will run on Tuesdays and Thursdays, March 22 through 31, 7:30-9:00 pm, Room 104, Hoggard Hall. Fee of $18 will be discounted to $12 for registration by March 7.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

A reminder -- 1988 Summer School catalogues are available at the following campus locations: Office of the Registrar and Admissions Office located in James Hall, Campus Post Office in the University Union, Summer School Director in AL-109 and Graduate Office in AI-118.

Fighting Rate Hikes

N.C. Fair Share, a consumer advocate group, will hold a meeting on Feb. 29 from 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. in the New Hanover County Library to provide information on the proposed rate increases that CP-L hopes to install soon.

This meeting will also allow people to sign-up to attend the hearing that CP-L will hold in March. At this hearing the group and its supporters will hope to defeat the possible rate increases proposed.

The meeting scheduled for the 29th is being held to inform the public of their rights to fight this increase and tell them what they can do to prevent it from happening. The public is encouraged to attend.

The Wilmington Parks and Recreation Department will sponsor adult soccer leagues for both men and women this spring. Registration is open to both teams and individuals at the Department's Empire Park office beginning March 1st. We encourage all interested parties to contact the Parks and Recreation Department at 343-3680 for more information.

Brown Bag Lectures

The Adult Scholars "Brown Bag" series is offering a look at our coastal environment in a four-part course being offered by UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs.

Marine biologist Sally Mason will be the instructor touching on native animals and plants, the ecology and natural history. She will use informal lectures, films, slides and field trips to emphasize the classroom experience.

"Study of the Cape Fear Coast" will meet from 10:00 am-Noon on Fridays, April 8 and 22 and May 6 and 20 on the UNCW campus. Fee for the series is $35 or $10 for an individual class. Bring a bag lunch to eat following the seminars; beverages provided.

Registration deadline is March 25. For more information, contact the office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Howard keys comeback with 17 points

Spider Free Throws Ice UNCW Comeback

From Staff Reports

Reserve guard Benjy Taylor converted both ends of two bonus situations in the final 24 seconds to preserve a 61-60 victory for Richmond over UNC Wilmington Wednesday night at Trask Coliseum.

The victory clinched the regular season Colonial Athletic Association title for the Spiders, now 10-3 in the CAA and 20-6 overall. UNCW stands 7-6 in the CAA and 13-13 in all games.

Peter Woolfolk scored a game-high 19 points to lead Richmond. Rodney Rice chipped 13 and Steve Kratzer 10 for the Spiders. Woolfolk's eight rebounds was also a game-high for Richmond.

Junior center Larry Houzer canned 18 points for UNCW. Antonio Howard added 17 and Willie Williams collected 12 for the Seahawks.

After leading by 14 points at halftime and as much as 16 early in the second period, Richmond stalled a furious Seahawk comeback to claim the triumph.

Kratzer scored the first bucket of the second half to give the Spiders a 32-16 advantage with 19:50 remaining in the game. It was the largest lead of the game for Richmond.

UNCW started its rally just under the 12-minute mark when Williams nailed the first of four three-pointers to bring the Seahawks to within 42-35 at 11:34.

After a layup by Woolfolk made the score 44-35, UNCW went on an 8-2 run to close within three points. Another three-pointer by Williams, his second of the game, cut Richmond's lead to 46-43 at 7:35.

Richmond, which never trailed in the contest, led by just two points with 38 seconds left in the game when Houzer connected on a bonus situation to make the score 57-55 in the Spider's favor.

But Taylor then took control, calmly sinking four consecutive free throws down the stretch to seal the win.

The George Mason loss at American and Navy's loss at James Madison insures the Seahawks of no worse than a fourth place finish in the CAA and they can do no better than a third place tie.

Makowski Sparks Lady Hawks To Split

By D. Curtis Nichols
Assistant Sports Editor

The UNCW Lady Seahawks placed four of its five starters in double figures but the effort was not enough as UNCW fell short at Richmond Monday, 69-61.

Krystal Taylor led the UNC Wilmington with 16 points and nine rebounds. Freshmen guard Cindy Makowski finished the game with 15 points and was successful on all three of her three point shots. Sharon McDowell and Charlene Page both added an additional 10 points. Page led UNCW with a game-high 12 rebounds.

UNCW led at the half, 26-25 but were unable to hang on as they were outscored 44-35 in the second half. Free throws made the difference in the game as the Lady Spiders went to the line 25 times to UNCW's two trips.

UR was led by guard Dana Pappas who finished with 16 points and was assisted by teammate Laurie Govenor's 14 markers and 11 boards.

The Lady Seahawks had another CAA battle over the weekend when they faced the Lady Tribe of William & Mary Saturday. UNCW was more successful in this outing as they flew past the Lady Indians, 74-67.

Again the Lady Hawks used a balance scoring attack on offense to defeat their opponent. Three UNCW starters finished the contest with 15 points - Makowski, Page, and McDowell. Taylor patrolled the middle and dished in an additional 14 points.

William & Mary was guided by Debbie Wade's and Beth Hairfield's 15 and 12 points respectively.

The Lady Seahawks return to the hard wood Saturday night against rival East Carolina University in their final conference game before the CAA women's tournament at American University.

UNCW Falls In Openers

By Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Old Dominion opened the UNCW baseball season by taking two of three games from the Seahawks Monday and Tuesday at Brooks Field.

Weather postponed the series over the weekend and the wait paid off in two perfect spring days.

In Monday's doubleheader, the Monarchs took the first game, 2-1 in 11 innings. Scott Brady singled in the only UNCW run in the sixth inning.

Eric Hickman took the loss, working 2 1/3 innings while giving up the winning run on a run-scoring single by ODU shortstop John Pabst. Greg Ireland, who pitched the last three innings in relief, picked up the win.

In the nightcap, UNCW used eight hits to score six runs in the fourth inning to take a 6-4 lead. Old Dominion added a single run in the fifth, but Tommie Adams pitched the final 2 1/3 innings to earn the save in relief of winner Tony Tillman.

Gary Ginn and Randy Fennell had two hits each, while Chris Watson added a two-run single.

In Tuesday's game, Old Dominion pounded the UNCW bullpen for eight runs and romped 11-1. George Sells got the win, beating freshman David Morrison. Morrison pitched seven innings in his college debut, giving up only three runs before ODU exploded.

UNCW is now 1-2 and plays host to Clemson this weekend.

Baseball To Air On Radio

UNCW Student Radio Station WLOZ has announced plans to broadcast 10 Seahawk baseball games during the upcoming season. Matt Shanklin will handle the play-by-play duties with Stephen Nebrat providing the analysis.

The first broadcast is slated for March 14 when UNCW plays Rhode Island at 3:00. Pregame Rhodi runs 10 minutes prior to the first pitch.

Following the Rhode Island contest, WLOZ will broadcast the March 19-20 series with East Carolina and the March 21 matchup with Atlantic Christian.

Furbay, Lutz Lead Deep UNCW Netters

From Staff Reports

Veteran tennis coach Larry Honecutt heads into his 16th season at UNC Wilmington with the most depth he's ever had with the Seahawk net program.

The Seahawks play the first of 22 matches Tuesday (March. 1) when they entertain Baptist in a 2:30 p.m. match at the UNCW courts.

"Having more players makes it more competitive," Honecutt said of his 14-man roster. "In the past, we've had a big drop in numbers and quality after seven people. But we can go 10 deep now. With nine or ten players battlings each other, it will be good for all of them."

UNCW posted an 8-6 record last season and only two players - Terry Graz and Brad Chens - don't return this spring. That leaves Honecutt optimistic around the team's prospects.

He said, "Your record is always a measure of success. Our goal every year is to win more than we lose. We play a very competitive schedule. We played some tough people last year and we're doing the same this year."

Three of Honecutt's top five players are back for 1988, including No. 2 netter Troy Furbay, a 5-10, 165-pound junior from New Philadelphia, Ohio.

Furbay is battling for the top seed with surprise newcomer Eric Lutz, a tall freshman from Hickory (N.C.) High School. Lutz, who played No. 1 at Hickory, is ranked 12th in the state in 18-under competition.

"Troy has improved tremendously since his freshman year. He has good basic ground strokes and good fundamentals. Eric is basically a baseline player with a good net game, too. He's a smart player. He does the right things at the right time for being a freshman."

Ron Lawrence, last year's No. 4 player, and Mark Kinkema, who competed at No. 5, are the other two returnees.

Honecutt recruited four freshmen this season and all four will make an impact on the team, he said. Besides Lutz, the other recruits are Rick Norwood (South Mecklenburg/Charlotte, N.C.), Scott Dickinson (Unionville/Chad Ford, Pa.) and Mike Wohlfarth (South Mecklenburg/Charlotte, N.C.).

The schedule is ambitious for the Seahawk netters, including four matches in three days at one point. Highlights of the slate feature appearances at the Hilton Head Invitational and the Azalea Festival Tournament.

Pitching Key To UNCW Softball Fortunes In '88

From Staff Reports

Pitching once again holds the key to UNC Wilmington's fortunes on the softball diamond as the Lady Seahawks and Head Coach Maggie St. Ledger kick off the season Saturday at Baptist College.

The Lady Seahawks will try to offset the question marks in the pitching corps with an explosive offensive lineup. The scoring punch will be needed early in the season as UNCW faces two of the top teams in the South region and the Northeast region.

"The success of our season rides with the mound," said St. Ledger, who begins her fourth campaign at UNCW. "We need to get consistency out of our pitching, avoiding the walks and we'll be okay."

Senior Anne Carpenter and junior Kim Carmassi will carry most of the workload on the mound, with freshman Ingrid Meyers providing spot relief as the develop.

Carpenter is the most experienced pitcher returning, posting a 1-3 won-loss record, but finishing with a 6.93 earned run average. Carmassi is a transfer from Prince George's Community College. Meyers comes to UNCW from Hawke, N.C. and will also see playing time at third base.

The trio of throwers will have to fill the shoes left by the graduation of Janet Bulard (5-9 w-l, 3.66 ERA) and the untimely death of Lisa Primovic. Primovic led the Seahawks with a 15-11 record and 2.81 ERA in 170 innings of work.

The pitchers will have solid defensive support behind them.

"This team represents a solid defensive squad," said St. Ledger. "The infield is entering its third year together and in the outfield, we have a group with strong arms and good speed."

Anchoring the infield is the double-play combination of juniors Roxanne Belica at second base and shortstop Rita Scott. Third base will be the home of junior Karen Rogers, while first base duties are handled by the veteran of the UNCW infield, Colleen St. Ledger, the coach's sister-in-law.

In the outfield, junior Kathy Cochran and freshman Yen Wilson will occupy two of the three spots, with the final spot up for grabs.

Catching will also be something St. Ledger won't have too many worries about as junior Lisa Affranti returns with help from junior Sheri Morrison.

The starting lineup is solid from top to bottom and should put plenty of runs on the scoreboard. Coach St. Ledger lost just one potent bat from her lineup, Mel Cope, who paced the team with a .355 batting average.

"Our hitting is solid from top to bottom," said St. Ledger. "We have extra base hitters in Cochran, Scott, Rodgers, Wilson and St. Ledger."

Scott heads the list of returners with a .348 average from last season. Cochran hit .338 and drove in 23 runs, seven in one game. St. Ledger (.329) and Rodgers (.316) round out the returners that hit above .300. St. Ledger led the Lady Seahawks with 26 runs batted in.

"Our schedule was designed to target top regional opponents," said St. Ledger. "The 1988 schedule is the most difficult to date, but we are excited to be the best."

Ladies Hit The Links

By Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

The weather and a good blend of young talent are two advantages UNC Wilmington women's golf coach Lea Dudley hopes to exploit when her squad tees off in their spring openers.

The Lady Seahawks hit the links for the first time since their successful fall campaign at the University of Jacksonville Invitational. The S.O.S. Tournament Mar. 10-11. Both tournaments are slated for play in Jacksonville, FL.

"We will have the jump on everybody at Jacksonville because the weather has helped us out," said Dudley. "We didn't have that great of a winter, but we have had the opportunity to get out and play more than most teams."

It will take more than just a weather advantage if the Lady Seahawks are to prove they belong among the nation's top programs. Consistency, which was the key to UNCW's success in the fall, and the development of the freshman talent are his factors this spring.

Despite fielding a team that consists of just one senior, two sophomores and four freshmen, Dudley led her team to an impressive 45th overall ranking in the NCAA's mid-year poll. If the Lady Seahawks are to improve even more, Dudley sees the freshman needing to make the difference.

Leading the way for the Lady Seahawks are senior linkster Sandy Chester of Syracuse, NY and Paige Cribb, a sophomore from Georgetown, SC. The Lady Seahawks most valuable player for 1986-87, Chester placed 163 in the NCAA rankings. Cribb ranks 39th in the NCAA's after posting a 77.64 stroke average in the fall. The heart of the UNCW lineup, Chester and Cribb both have excellent shots at making the NCAA Tournament as individuals.

"I definitely look for Paige (Cribb) to make it," said Dudley. "Sandy also has a very good shot of making it. There is no doubt in my mind that both can be successful on the tour."

Among the freshmen, Laura Covington and Nina Van Drumpt have begun to exert themselves onto the scene.

Covington, a Charlotte, NC native, was named a National High School Athletic Coaches Association All-American during her senior campaign at East Mecklenburg High. She and Van Drumpt, a native of Sala, Sweden, have continued to improve since coming to UNCW and Dudley has high hopes for both.

The other freshman on the squad are Christina Jaskolski of Maryville, TN and Michele Kammeyer of Greensboro. The other sophomore is Mary Thomas from Leonardtown, MD. Thomas, who finished the fall with a 82.93 stroke mark, was the 1986-87 Coaches Award winner.

Pat Schroeder Visits UNCW

(UNCW News) Patricia Schroeder, Democratic member of the United States House of Representatives from Colorado, will be the featured speaker during UNC-Wilmington's observance of National Women's History Month. An undeclared candidate for president of the United States, Schroeder decided not to run this time.

Schroeder will be speaking at noon, Monday, March 21, in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of UNCW. She will be discussing her work in Congress to promote legislation focusing on family issues — child care, family medical leave, flexibility in the workplace, and pay equity.

A February 1988 article in MS Magazine quoted Schroeder as saying that "family legislation is the moon-shot goal of the eighties and nineties." She believes that these are the issues that can unite all Americans.

The talk is free, and the public is invited. There will be a brief time for questions from the audience following Schroeder's prepared remarks.

March is National Women's History Month and at UNCW, activities are focusing on the theme, "You've Come a Long Way Baby — Maybe." Sponsoring UNCW's observance are the Office of the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and the UNCW Faculty Women's Network.

Also scheduled to speak at UNCW is Dr. Nell Painter, a highly-regarded scholar of Afro-American history, who will discuss "Passing: A Phenomenon of American Race Relations," at 7 p.m., Tuesday, March 29 in Bryan Auditorium of Morton Hall. This program is also free and the public is invited to attend.

A professor of history at The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Painter is the author of Exodus: Black Migration to Kansas After Reconstruction. The recently published Standing At Armageddon, The U.S., 1877-1919.

Dr. Beverly Jones, professor of history and director of the Desegregation at North Carolina Central University, spoke Monday in Bryan Auditorium on "North Carolina's Black Female Industrial Worker." Jones, a dynamic speaker, is an authority on black women in the work force. The results of her interviews with hundreds of women especially tobacco industry workers in the Durham area, have been published in several scholarly journals.

Union Celebrates Fifth Birthday

By Kim Kopka
Staff Writer

UNCW's University Union is celebrating its fifth birthday March 21 with events designed especially to demonstrate the special features of the Union.

Designed to meet the needs of a growing campus, the Union was under construction in the early 1980's and opened its doors for the first time on March 21, 1983. Many students will be participating in scheduled events to celebrate the Union's birthday and there are some that can celebrate the Union's history.

Before the current structure was built, the union was located in Hinton-James. Assistant Director of Operations for the University Union Steve Gnadt, says "The Union was considerably smaller in Hinton-James."

At the time the Union consisted of "The Good Wood Tavern," which was a small snack bar, a t.v. lounge, a large room used for concerts and dances and some pool tables. "There were no meeting rooms and the only organizations to hold offices there were the Fledgling, SGA, The University Program Board and the Seahawk," says Gnadt.

To help celebrate the Union's birthday there will be a cake cutting at 12:30 pm on March 21 in the courtyard of the Union. A new, local sorority, Gamma Delta Chi, will cut the cake and will be distributing balloons and putting up banners as part of their service project.

Other activities will include free table tennis and free billiards in the game room, and the Hawk's Nest will lower their prices to those in 1983. The Administrative Assistant for Student Activities Paul Barnes will be supervising to be sure all the events get under way. "If there happens to be inclement weather, the cake cutting will take place under the showcase in the entrance way of the Union," says Barnes.

Not only has there been talk of celebration, there is also talk of expanding the Union. Gnadt explains that "the plans are tentative and still in the hands of an architect." This possible expansion will include a 40,000 square foot annex to be located in the warehouse building across from the University Bookstore. The projected date for the construction of the annex is 1990-91.

The tentative plans are for the annex to house the post office, another recreation area with pool tables and a Pizza-Deli area with a Pub. There will also be a multi-purpose room designed to hold 800 hundred people, an additional lounge and more meeting rooms. If these plans go through, the rooms that are emptied as a result of the move to the new annex will be renovated to be used as study space and meeting rooms.

For the campus of UNCW, the University Union has become some what of a celebrity this week. The truth is, the campus is growing and changes are constantly being made to better this University, so join in the celebration of the Union's birthday.

Pell Grant Checks May Get Smaller In Future

(CPS)— Pell Grant checks for millions of students during the 1988-89 school year may get smaller, or vanish entirely, the U.S. Dept. of Education warned colleges around the country.

As many as $3,000 low-income students could lose their Pell Grants while 1.2 million students could get smaller grants next year because the government is about $99 million short in its grant budget, the administration warned.

In a Feb. 1 "Dear Colleague" letter to campuses, Education Dept. officials blamed Congress for the shortfall, saying it raised the maximum Pell Grant to $2,200 for 1988 without appropriating enough money to give students that much to come up with more money, or it would start cutting "least needy" students off the Pell Grant roles for next year.

"They're telling us that if we don't do something, they'll do something harmful," complained Gray Garwood, chief aide of the House Postsecondary Education Subcommittee.

To solve the problem, the Dept. of Education will phase out $31 off every Pell Grant recipient's check next year, or cut as much as $400 from "least needy" students so the "most needy" students could get the full $2,200.

The letter warned the department was giving Congress until April 30 Garwood doubts Congress could meet the deadline -- which the Education Dept. says is necessary because it must establish final Pell Grant payment schedules by April 30 -- and questions the department's numbers.

Congress, depending on a Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimate, budgeted $4.42 billion to give out in Pell Grants for the 1988-89 school year, Garwood said.

But the Education Dept., using different estimates, thinks it'll have to give out $4.5 billion in Pell Grants.

CBO estimates, said Charles Saunders of the American Council on Education, have proven more accurate in past.

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

CIA Officer to visit UNCW

By Nancy K. Hill
UNCW News Staff Writer

"The Nature of the Central Intelligence Agency and Its Place in a Free Society" will be the topic of an open forum to be presented at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, March 17, in room 114 of DeLoach Hall. Conducting the forum will be Art Hulnick, director of the academic relations office within the CIA's public affairs department.

Sponsored by the UNCW history department, the program is free and the public is invited. Audience participation is welcome.

Hulnick, a commissioned intelligence officer, joined the CIA in 1964 following several years with Air Force Intelligence. His service includes a wide variety of positions with the CIA such as watch officer in the situation room and briefing officer in the White House.

For further information, contact Larry Cable, assistant professor of history at UNCW, 395-3307.

Alumni Phonafund to raise $50,000

By Ray Cockrell
UNCW Staff Writer

The UNCW Alumni Association has set a goal of $50,000 for the 1988 Alumni Phonafund to be held on March 14-15, March 21-24, March 28-30, and "All Star Night" on March 31. Each evening begins with a dinner at 6 p.m., training at 6:30 p.m., and the calling will take place from 7 p.m. until approximately 9:30 p.m. The Phonafund will be located in the Hawk's Nest, located in the University Union.

The Alumni Phonafund is an annual 10-night event during which UNCW alumni are contacted and asked to give pledges to the university. The pledges go to support alumni scholarships, enhance academic programs, and expand services to the alumni. There will be 15 phones manned nightly by student volunteers from various student organizations and anyone interested in participating. For their participation, the students will receive dinner each evening and a letter from the Chancellor for their placement file stating they have this telemarketing training and experience. There will also be cash prizes for organizations and individuals participating in the event. Dr. F. Douglas Moore, Vice Chancellor for University Advancement, said "it is important to use students as volunteer callers because we are developing them into future alumni leaders."

The "All Star Night" is the last evening of the Phonafund, March 31, and is used as a wrap-up night. For this night the student volunteers are hand picked. The best callers are invited back to help push the pledges over the top of the goal. There are specific prizes for the participants of "All Star Nights."

Director of alumni and parents program Frank Bowen said, "The annual event is a very important part of the UNCW Alumni Fund Campaign each year. Private support from alumni and friends is necessary to provide for a margin of excellence at UNCW."

Ray Cockrell,
UNCW News student intern

"Beach Greeks" will be the theme for the annual Greek Week at UNCW to be held March 18-24. The Greeks will sponsor fund raisers for Hospice in assisting AIDS patients and educational seminars on AIDS.

The UNCW Greeks will have car washes at five locations from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturday, March 19 as a fund raiser for AIDS research. The car washes will be at:

- *Connor Mobile Home - 5520 Oleander Dr.
- *Soap's Laundry - Kerr Ave.
- *Bennigan's - College Rd.
- *Pine Valley Exxon - 3706 Shipyard Blvd.
- *Wayne's Exxon - 2606 Carolina Beach Rd.

All proceeds from the car washes will go to Hospice to assist AIDS patients.

AIDS educational seminars will be at 8 p.m. on Monday and Tuesday, March 21 and 22, in room 100 of the UNCW University Union. During the week various Greek organizations will compete against each other in a banner and float contest, tug-o-war, wheel barrow race, song competition and more. All events are free and the public is encouraged to attend.

Student Greeks are involved in various fraternities and sororities at UNCW and comprise approximately 8 percent of all the student population. Many are campus leaders and participate in service projects for the community. Some of the service projects range from raising money for their national philanthropy to volunteering for the Brigade Boy's Club and Special Olympics and helping elderly citizens move.

The Seahawk would like to apologize for excluding the by-lines of Ray Cockrell (UNCW News student intern), Nancy K. Hill (UNCW News staff writer), and Kim Kopka (Seahawk staff writer) in the Feb. 26 issue of the Seahawk.

Annual Recreation Banquet To Be Held

The Annual Recreation Banquet, sponsored by the Recreation Majors Association, will be on Wednesday April 13th, from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. The banquet will be held in the university union's Hawk's Nest. The occasion will bring together recreation alumni, friends, students, and faculty for an evening of professional enlightenment and social interaction. Dr. Karen Hancock, Co-ordinator of the Recreation Curriculum at East Carolina University, will be the keynote speaker for the evening.

Chapter status has been granted to UNC-W's Park and Recreation Curriculum by Rho Phi Lambda, the national recreation, parks, and leisure honorary fraternity. The chapter will be officially inaugurated that evening and the first members initiated.

All students are invited to attend. Tickets are $5.00 per person and can be purchased through the Recreation Majors Association in the Health, Physical Education, and Recreation Department in Trask Coliseum. For more information, please contact Dr. Dave Culklin, faculty advisor to the Recreation Majors Association.

Beginning Aerobic Course Offered

The Wrightsville Beach Parks and Recreation Department is sponsoring a Beginning Aerobic Dance class for adults on Mondays and Thursdays from 7:00-8:00 pm at the Old Fire Station #2 on Harbor Island.

The course will run for 7 weeks beginning Thursday, March 10 and ending April 28. The fee for the class is $30 for Wrightsville Beach residents and $34 for non-residents. Deborah Cameron is the instructor. For further information, call Wrightsville Beach Parks and Recreation Department at 256-4744.

Research Committee Offers Scholarships

The Research Committee has eight Undergraduate Research Fellowships available for the 1988-89 academic year. These fellowships comprise a tuition waiver of $410.00 for the academic year. The fellowships, intended to stimulate original research among undergraduate students, are open to any rising junior or senior who has completed at least one semester at UNCW. The proposed research projects may be in any academic area, and should be completed by the end of the academic year. Each student must have a faculty sponsor who serves as an advisor and assists in selecting a worthwhile project suitable to the student's abilities and the timing of the awards. The project idea may originate with the student or faculty, but must be developed to a substantial degree by the student. Course credit may be arranged through a DIS or Honors Program, but if no credit is obtained, the proposal must specify the means of evaluation by the faculty sponsor. One copy of the final written report must be submitted to the Research Committee by the last class day of the Spring 1989 semester.

The application must include a student information sheet, 13 copies of the proposal, a statement from the department chairman indicating the availability of departmental resources for the project, two faculty evaluations of the student's potential, and a copy of the student's transcript. Information packets and application forms are available from the Secretary of the Earth Sciences Department (FR 242).

The candidates must file their applications with their respective department chairmen no later than March 30, 1988. We request that department chairmen review the completed application, seal it in an envelope, and have the candidate deliver it to the Earth Sciences Secretary (FR 242) by 5:00 p.m., April 1, 1988. Each candidate must register with the Earth Sciences Secretary by April 1 for an interview on the evening of April 13 or 14. Each faculty sponsor should be present during the interview.

Questions regarding this competition should be directed to Richard A. Laws, Research Committee Chairman, or any member of the committee.

Bridge Lessons For Intermediates

Bridge lessons for the intermediate player are scheduled to begin at 10:00 am on Tuesday, March 22, 1988 at the Old Fire Station #2 on Harbor Island.

The lessons are being taught by Dot Newsom and sponsored by Wrightsville Beach Parks and Recreation Department. Class will consist of ten, 2-hour sessions for a fee of $25 for beach residents and $28 for non-residents. For further information call Wrightsville Beach Parks and Recreation Department, 256-4744.

Educational Loan Program Available

Three educational loan programs for North Carolina residents attending colleges in or out of state and for nonresidents attending colleges in North Carolina are available through College Foundation Inc. One program is for dependent or independent students and is based on financial need. One is for independent self-supporting students and is not based on financial need. The third program is for parents of dependent students and is not based on financial need.

For more information, write College Foundation Inc., P.O. Box 12100, Raleigh, NC 27605 or call 919/821-4771.

Distinguished Prof. Offers Master Class

UNC-Wilmington Foundation Visiting Distinguished Professor John Gilmore will conduct a master class, "Body Awareness: The Secret of Success in Your Vocal and Instrumental Performing Medium," at 2 p.m., Sunday, March 20, at King Hall Auditorium on campus. The master class is open to the public and free of charge.

Vocalists and instrumentalists are invited to perform. The class will emphasize posture, breathing, center of balance, gestures, and techniques to reduce stress. Performers who need a UICW accompanist should leave a copy of their music with Peggy Chance, creative arts/music division secretary, no later than 5 p.m., March 8.

Non-musicians are encouraged to attend this master class, since many of the techniques discussed should be helpful in addressing groups, or performing and conducting interviews. Exercises for the improvement of the speaking voice as well as "body language" will be given.

Students Place Well In ACUI Tournament

Five students representing UNCW competed in the Association of College Unions-International (ACUI) Region 5 Recreation Tournament held at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, TN on February 26-28.

These students competed against representatives from 33 schools over a five state area which includes North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, and Kentucky. UNC-Wilmington finished 13th overall in school points with the tournament b'n'g won by Morehead State University from Kentucky. East Carolina finished second and Memphis State third.

In individual competition, UNCW's Jim Costen finished 2nd in Backgammon, Matt Noble finished 4th in Chess, and John Murphy finished 5th in Men's Billiards. Also representing UNCW was Laura Mullin in Women's Billiards and Tim Thicker in Men's Table Tennis.

Cancer Society To Offer Smoking Clinic

The American Cancer Society is volunteering its time to offer Fresh Start, a clinic for smokers, at the YWCA on 2815 S. College Road. The program will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays, March 15-24 from noon to 1:00 p.m.

This four hour course "is designed to help participants stop smoking by providing them with all of the essential information and strategies needed to direct their own efforts at stopping. The program focuses on an active pragmatic approach to quitting smoking. Participants are encouraged to apply what they learn in Fresh Start to other aspects of their lives."

This program is $2 for YWCA members and $3 for non-members. For more information or to pre-register call the YWCA at 799-6820.

Used Books Wanted For Upcoming Sale

Overbooked? Used book donations are needed by the American Association of University Women for their annual book sale. Proceeds benefit the branch's scholarship fund and the association's educational foundation. Anyone desiring to make a tax deductible donation may do so by calling 762-4782, 791-0086 or 799-1648.

AAUW is open to all college educated persons and is dedicated to the education of women, particularly life-long learning, and to positive societal change. Meetings are held the third Wednesday of each month, 7:00 p.m., UNCW University Union. For membership information, call 791-0086.

John T. Hoggard Class of '73 is having its 15th year reunion. The date is set for July 15-17, 1988. If you're a class member or know of anyone from the class of '73, please call 392-0852, or write to LTH Class of '73, P.O. Box 1204, Wrightsville Beach, N.C. 28480.

Astronomy Lecture Tonight In Bryan Auditorium At 8

(UNCW News) "The Evolution of Life in the Universe" will be the topic of a lecture by Dr. Yervant Terzian, chairman of the department of astronomy at Cornell University, to be presented at 8 p.m., Thursday March 17, in Bryan Auditorium on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Sponsored by the UNCW physics department, the program is free and the public is invited.

Terzian, a professor of astronomy and space sciences at Cornell as well as department chair, will talk about the structure of the universe and the evolution of life on other planets, emphasizing the physical and chemical conditions of planets around stars other than the sun. He will also discuss unidentified flying objects (UFOs) and the evolution of life on earth with emphasis on our future.

Also during his visit to UNC-Wilmington, Terzian will present a talk to the physics department faculty, students and other interested individuals on the "History of Radio Astronomy" at 4 p.m., Friday, March 18, in room 218 of Deloach Hall.

Refreshments will be served at 3:30 before the talk.

"This will be an historical account of one of the most exciting and thrilling stories of the discovery of radio waves from the sky," said Dr. Moarad Alexanian, chair of the UNCW physics department and the person who invited Terzian to Wilmington.

Terzian's research interests are in the areas of radio astronomy, the physics of interstellar medium, planetary nebulae, radio galaxies, life in the universe, and cosmic evolution. Among Terzian's Cornell astronomy department colleagues is author and scientist Carl Sagan, known for his television series, "Cosmos."

Terzian received the bachelor of science degree in physics and mathematics from the American University in Cairo, Egypt, and the master and doctor of philosophy degrees in astronomy from Indiana University. He was a research associate at the National Radio Astronomy Observatory, Greenbank, W. Va., and the Arecibo Observatory in Puerto Rico before joining the astronomy faculty at Cornell.

"Business Week" Continues

March 14 - 18 will be the sixth annual "Business Week" sponsored by the Cameron School of Business Administration at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The week is devoted to "real world Learning" and to "broaden the minds of our students through classroom and practical application to prepare for productive participation in the business world of the 1990s and the 21st century."

"Preparing for Tomorrow Today" is the theme of Business Week '88. Admission to all events are free, unless otherwise noted, are open to the public.

The climate of Entrepreneurship will be the topic of the keynote address by Dorothy Brunson at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, March 17 in Kenan Auditorium on the UNCW campus.

Brunson is the owner and president of Brunson communications which owns WBMS here in Wilmington as well as WEBB in Baltimore and WIGO in Atlanta. She was named the "Revolutionary of Radio" by Working Woman Magazine and was named one of the 50 outstanding women in America by the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Brunson has been nominated to the President's Advisory Committee and served at the White House on three occasions as a panelist on business and communications. She has also appeared on several television shows and major publications.

The Cameron School of Business Administration cordially invites all interested persons to attend this free address.

To wrap up the Business Week '88 activities the students of Sigma Alpha Beta, an honorary business fraternity and service organization, will have the opportunity to pit their skills against the business faculty in the annual faculty vs. SAB softball game. The game will be held at 3 p.m. on Friday, March 18, at Empie Park.

Lite Beer Volleyball & Tug-of-War

LARRY CSONKA will be the guest celebrity at the 1988 Lite Beer Volleyball & Tug-of-War Tournament. This tournament is a sanctioned event of the 1988 North Carolina Azalea Festival and will be held on the beach strand beside Crystal Pier at Wrightsville Beach on Saturday, April 9th.

The Tug-of-War Tournament is limited to 48 teams only. Each team will consist of seven (7) males and (3) females with no weight limit. The entry fee is $10.00 per team.

The Volleyball Tournament will consist of twenty (20) teams only. Each team will consist of six (6) to ten (10) players with at least two (2) females playing at all times. Two divisions of play will be offered. The entry fee is $35 per team.

Registration for both events begin Wednesday, March 23, 8:30 am, at the Wrightsville Beach Park Office. Registration will be taken on a first come, first serve basis. Only the allotted number of teams are allowed in each event. To register, come by the Park Office with team registration fee. Office hours are 8:30 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.

For more information, contact the Park Office at 256-4744.

The Cape Fear Chapter of the American Business Women's Association will sponsor a RAPE AWARENESS SEMINAR on March 19, 1988, from 9:00 am. until 1:00 p.m. in Room 100 of the University Union. Expert speakers will address the before, during and after issues of a sexual assault. Please see the attached program guide.

All staff and students are encouraged to attend. For more information please contact: Laura A. Waters 791-4292
Sergeant R. G. Lawson 395-3184

Voting Registration On Campus In March

On Friday, March 25th, registrars from the New Hanover County Board of Elections will be on campus to register students for the coming elections. The registrars will be seated at tables in the hall on the first floor of the University Union from 10 am to 3 pm.

In order to register, a student must be able to show residence in New Hanover County (through a driver's license, for example). Registration will qualify the individual to vote in the state and local primary election of May 3 and the state, local and presidential election of November 8.

The registrars will also be able to assist students in filing changes in address and changes in party.

Faber Censured

On February 29, 1988 the Student Government Senate met in the Hawk's Nest. At the meeting a motion was made that stated: that Debbie Faber received a bill of censure from the Senate. This motion was passed by consent.

A bill of censure has the following effects:
1. The official shall lose chairmanship of all committees in which said official serves.
2. The official may or may not lose membership in any committees in which said official may serve, at the discretion of the Senate, by a 2/3 majority of those present and voting.

3. It shall be publicly reported in the UNCW student newspaper that said official has been censured.

Editor's note: After approach by several candidates wishing Seahawk endorsement in this year's student government election, the Seahawk editorial staff officially decided to remain nonpartisan in the election.

In an attempt to present the university with the candidate's viewpoints, the Seahawk presented all candidates with the opportunity to submit a one hundred word statement of their platform. The following statements are the result of that offer.

Presidential Candidates

Karla F. Alston

Greetings Seahawks! I would like to take this opportunity to introduce myself, I am Karla Fontaine Alston, your candidate for SGA President.

Being Vice-President this year has really geared me up about Student Government. I have had the chance to work on various committees that focus directly on the students and their needs.

It is time that we have a student government that works for all students instead of a select few! I want the students to feel that they are truly a part of SGA.

I urge you to take an active role in the SGA elections and to vote for me—Karla Fontaine Alston.

Put this leadership to work for you, Elect Lee Barnhill your President March 22.

Lee Barnhill

For the past two years Lee Barnhill has been a Senator in SGA. [I have] served on the Judiciary and Finance Committees. [I have] been President of two organizations and also serves as Vice-Chairman of the Campus Judicial Board.

As President, [I] will work hard for you with the following programs:

- 1)the SGA Works Program
  - 2)Establishing a Business Manager for SGA
  - 3)RA Benefits
  - 4)SEAHAWK 1990 program

The primary job of the Vice-President is to preside over the Senate. As a member of The American Institute of Parliamentarians and as Chairman and Vice-Chairman of several committees and clubs, both locally and state wide, [I am] without question the most qualified candidate.

The Vice-President makes a number of appointments which can help promote his/her ideas. They key ideas that [I am] running on are:

- 1)To see that problems, like those which affected The Seahawk never happen again;
- 2)To reduce the amount of student activity fees that go toward salaries and give that money to other clubs.

Robert L. Smith

To: The UNCW Student Body
I am running for several reasons, the greatest of which is my genuine concern for the welfare of UNCW and its students. A second reason has been the encouragement and requests of my friends and associates.

I would bring to this position my experience, dedication and a wealth of new and necessary reforms. Specifically I think that some very basic changes must occur in the organization of The Seahawk and the other media. In short, the media should be better insulated from the influence and indirect censorship of the SGA. I also feel that the students are not treated as they should be by the businesses, banks and services of Wilmington.

These are just two of my many ideas. I have more which may concern you. If you have some call me and tell me. Robert L. Smith, Jr. (395-6560)

Chief Justice

Charles Mauney

The position has become one of title not Duty. I propose a plan to change this position to one which he will interact with the student judicial board and create a true check on the student senate. My activity in helping write the constitution for the IFC and duty as a Senator qualify me for the position. I am a political science major which plans to attend Carolina Law School in fall of 1990. My involvement in the Ambassadors and North Carolina Student Legislature will help me make the position of Chief Justice functional and workable for the students of UNCW.

Spring Rep-At-Large

Lee King

Lee King Spring Rep-At-Large
Why should someone vote for me?

I feel that my 2 years in the Senate and my past year as your student body President all boils down into one word: Experience! I have the knowledge of the SGA and the Administration procedures that will enable me to do a good job. Vote for Lee on March 22 to ensure fair balance of power among everyone and for the students at UNCW.

Tim Lee

TIM LEE, REPRESENTATIVE AT LARGE—A vote for me will be a vote for a strong experienced leader. I believe that the student body must be strong and assertive in working with, not against, the administration. When one wins we all win. PERSONAL: I am a non-traditional student (1980 graduate) with six years professional sales experience. Three years owners and operator of a business in the property management field. CURRENTLY: Representative At Large in the SGA, President of Student Union Board, Health Promotion Advisory Board, North Carolina Student Legislature (Delegate). (GPA 3.3) EXCITED AND INVOLVED IN EDUCATION!!!

Senior Class President

Susan Wolfson

Senior's Vote for Me! I have the time and experience to represent you the best.

I am a non-traditional student and have attended UNCW since 1975. My GPA is 3.7. I am a Biology Education major.

I am classified as a senior now. I will be a senior for at least three more semesters. I know what seniors want and need, JOBS. I am the Candidate who can make the MOST IMPACT for the Senior Class.

I want to address the issues of parking problems, SGA financial responsibility, non-traditional student programs, and Senior Class Leadership on campus. VOTE WOLFSON.

Junior Class President

Fran Slater

Running For Junior Class President is Fran Slater. Why should we vote FRAN for President again?
